GOLD, FRANKINCENSE AND MYRRH.

Gold, Frankincense and Myrrh, they brought the new-born Christ
The wise men from the East—and in the ox's stall,
The far-brought precious gifts they heaped with love unpriced;
And Christ the babe looked on and wondered not at all.

Gold, Frankincense and Myrrh, I, too, would offer Thee,
O, King of faithful hearts, upon Thy Christmas Day;
And, poor and little worth although the offering be,
Because Thou art so kind, I dare to think I may.

I bring the Gold of Faith, which, through the centuries long,
Still seeks the Holy Child and worships at His feet,
And owns Him for its Lord, with gladness deep and strong,
And joins the angel choir, singing in chorus sweet.

The Frankincense I bear is worship which can rise,
Like perfume floating up higher and higher still,
Till on the wings of prayer it finds the far blue skies,
And falls, as falls the dew, to freshen heart and will.

And last I bring the Myrrh, half bitter and half sweet,
Of my own selfish heart, through sacrifice made clean,
And break the vase and spill the oil upon Thy feet,
O, Lord of Christmas Day, as did the Magdalene.

Gold, Frankincense and Myrrh—'tis all I have to bring To Thee, O, Holy Child, now throned in Heaven's mid!
Because Thou art so kind, take the poor offering,
And let me go forth blessed, as once the Wise Men did.

—Susan Coolidge.

EASIEST READING BIBLE

The Bible has never been published in any form in which the reading of it has been made so attractive to both old and young as in the "International"

CHRISTIAN WORKERS' BIBLE

By an entirely new plan, a thread of red ink, running from Genesis to Revelation, binds in one harmonious whole each leading topic. All the precious truths which lie hidden under the mass of unconnected matter and escape the mere reader are brought to light and tied together.

The Rev. Jesse Lyman Hurlbut, D.D., the popular authority in Bible themes, has arranged on this plan Three Thousand Selected Texts.

Prominent People's Opinions

John Wanamaker: International Christian Worker's Bible is an advance on anything hitherto attempted in making the Bible usable.

Lyman Abbott: Valuable to Christian Workers in their endeavor to get at the teaching of the Bible directly and immediately, and not through the medium of commentaries.

Bound in Fine Morocco, divinity circuit, with overlapping covers (like illustration), round corners, gold edges, red underneath. Size of page $8\frac{1}{2} \times 5\frac{1}{2}$ ins., beautifully printed in large clear type on extra fine paper.

The Christian Workers' Bible will be SENT FREE for examination, all charges prepaid. If it does not please you, return it at our expense. If it does please you, remit special price.

Editorial Notes

"Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly of heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls; for My yoke is easy and My burden is light." Matthew xi:29, 30.

The emphasis needs to be placed on "My" and "Me." Jesus had a yoke to carry and a burden to bear like other men, and we speak not now of the yoke or burden of our sin which, technically considered, was not laid upon Him until He came to Calvary. But as Campbell Morgan says, He carried the yoke and bore the burden of simply living, the yoke and the burden of responsibility to some thing or some one, for we are thinking of Him now not as divine, nor yet as divine-human, but only as human, as a man tempted in all points like as we are.

Other men labor and are heavy-laden with their yoke and their burden, but Jesus' lines had fallen unto Him in pleasant places and He had a goodly heritage. The reason is plain. He came into the world not to do His own will, but the will of Him that sent Him. His life was God-centered, our lives are self-centered. To change from the latter to the former needs the meek and lowly heart that Jesus had, and it would pay to come to Jesus to get it. Is not this, so far as the present is concerned, the greatest thought of this Christmas time? Is your yoke easy and your burden light? It can become so through the Babe of the Manger.

sary of the birth of Buddha, we have the privilege of publishing an article on the religion named after him from the pen of one of the most competent of American writers on that theme. Our readers will find Mrs. Reed's books (indicated at the head of her article) to be as safe as they are interesting.

There is a kind of fitness, by contrast, in publishing this article in an issue that calls particular attention to the nativity of Christ. We thank God for a Christian home and a Christian atmosphere from early childhood, that never permitted the thought to enter our mind that these two persons might be considered in the same connection. That any one should speak of Buddha as a "Christ," or that Christ should be thought of only as a great reformer or teacher of religion such as Buddha, has never ceased to awaken a sense of horror in our soul. We are so thankful for our faith in Christ as the Very God of Very God, and the Saviour of our soul from sin, and that God has never permitted us to have different thought about Him.

We believe the majority is against us, and we are aware how strong is the sentiment on the other side, but still we wish that Santa Claus had never been heard of at Christmas time. We have hung up our stocking like the rest, and joined in the youthful glee, but we have never felt quite happy in it, and believe the harm it has done

and

the child mind has largely overbalanced the pleasure it has brought. Possibly we are mistaken, but we think that with the years Santa Claus has gained in popularity and Christ has waned. The former seems to hold the center of our thought rather than the latter, and the Christmas of the shop is robbing us of the Christmas in the soul.

It might be a means of grace this year if we omitted to give presents, especially to those able to bestow them upon us in return, and applied their cost to some form of evangelization or missionary effort. To make Christ known to a darkened soul, what a gift is that! And then the reflex blessing on our own soul, is it not worth many presents? O, this mad and thoughtless rush of the Christmas season! When will Christians call a halt to think of Him?

The closing of the year is the stock-taking time, and the consideration that we are another year older than we were always makes it a serious time. We would suggest that this year we let the examination of our inner man focus on one question, To what extent has Christ been our Lord during the past twelve-month?

Christ
Our Lord.

It is a little over seventeen years now, since His words in John 12:26 came to us with that peculiar force and application which the Holy Spirit alone can put into them: "If any man serve Me, him will the Father honor."

"Me." "Serve Me." Whom have we been serving? Our denomination, our church, our community, our family, ourself, or Christ? There are two kinds of honor a man may get on this earth, that which cometh from man and that which cometh from God. The latter is worth while. Which has rested the more on us this year? If any man serve Christ "Him will the Father honor." To what extent has He honored us?

"If any man." God be thanked He is no respecter of persons. "Serve." This means thought, toil, cost, denial of self, humility, patience, love. Perhaps we have not done very well last year, but are we willing to dedicate ourselves for the year to come?

We are sincerely pleased that the breach between the Congregational Union of Great Britain and the pastor of the City Temple, R. J. Campbell London, has been healed, and the if it is all as Dr. Forsyth says: This champion of orthodoxy witnesses that he heard Dr. Campbell using these two sentences: "I worship the Lord Jesus Christ," and, "I trust my sinful soul to Him forever." "These words," says Dr. Forsyth, "could not come except from one who believed in the real Deity of our Lord Jesus Christ and the great doctrines of fundamental Christendom."

Let this be cheerfully granted. But why has not Mr. Campbell in all these years himself said so, in plain language? Is it because he is a genius and a poet, as all admit, that he can not express his mind in terms understood of the people?

We would feel happier over the whole episode, if it were not for the declaration of Mr. Campbell himself that he has not changed his views, but simply devoted himself during the last year to preaching on themes of religious experience and practical religion, rather than theology. When he returns to theology again what will happen? But perhaps he is satisfied that he will never make a theologian, and is content to remain an inspirational preacher.

The end of the year is a reminder of the end of the age, which some people can not believe may be near, because,

according to prophecy,
Getting Ready so many great things are for the yet to happen before it End. comes. But do they realize what great things are now happening, and what extensive preparation they represent for greater things ahead? We all recall the story of Von Moltke. When he was awakened in the night and informed that war had been declared between France and Prussia, he merely said, "The plan of the campaign will be found in such a pigeon-hole," and then turned over and went to sleep again. When Peary discovered the North Pole, it was a matter, at the last, of a few days, but the plan had been in his mind and in process, for nearly a quarter of a century. That things will move very rapidly one of these days is evident from the facilities now coming into being.

One thing leading to the above remark is the advance in the science of telephony. A new type of submarine telephone cable between England and France is soon to make possible ordinary conversation from London to the Caspian Sea, or clear across the whole continent of Europe. And indeed, London Engineering looks forward hopefully to the time when it will be possible to transmit the spoken word from any one point on the globe to any other! The value of these things in the Millennium will be recognized, but Satan will get hold of them first for his short day of triumph.

 avowed enemies and unwise friends; to scrutinize attempted supervision over our public libraries by those who are the subjects of a system which condemns all literature not in harmony therewith; to insist on greater restrictions upon foreign immigration; to protest against that union of church and state recognized by grants of public money to sectarian purposes; and to insist that ecclesiastical reformatories, convents, and schools should be open to the inspection of civil officers. We speak of this because of important literature from that source which has come recently into our hands. We are not wiseacres exactly, but we think there is something in the politics of the Mediterranean that looks like fulfilling prophecy.

The Tripoli Affair.
 There are two great outstanding facts of prophecy. One is that the nations of the Roman Empire are to be federated again, and the other that the governing impulse will be commercialism.

In the light of these two facts what the newspapers are saying about Italy and Tripoli is interesting. Italy is tired of the Dreibund, and would like to be divorced from Germany and Austria. Her new love is France, the reason of which is that France is the banker of Europe. Italy needs capital for development, and especially so if she keeps Tripoli. As one of the papers says, "In a commercial age it may be better to have banks than bayonets."

The point in all this is that Italy and France originally were part of the Roman Empire, while Germany, and a portion of Austria at least, never were. The fulfillment of prophecy, therefore, calls for just such an alignment as that stated above, and for which we may be prepared at any time.

to labor in California. The Pacific Coast needs good men, and Chicago, which is the hub of the United States, must continue to serve as the training school and distributing center for them. However, we can not spare any more like John H. Hunter. If he shall be the blessing to the Bible Institute at Los Angeles which he has been here, that school of the prophets may well be envied. And yet in these his ripper years his fruitfulness is likely to be multiplied. We breathe our benediction upon him as he goes, and feel our life richer for his friendship and co-operation in the work of Christ.

The character and scope of the Magazine will be the same as hitherto except that always we shall try to better it. Part of the editorial work laid down by Mr. Hunter will be assumed by the Rev. J. H. Ralston, a Presbyterian clergyman of experience, who has served as moderator of Boston and Allegheny Presbyteries, and has had experience both as an evangelist, and a newspaper man. For years he was engaged by the leading dailies of several cities to furnish reports of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and while resident in the vicinity of Pittsburgh he was a regular writer on the Presbyterian Banner, and Secretary of the Ministerial Union of 500 ministers. Dr. James H. Snowden, the editor of the journal named, Dr. Joseph P. Calhoun, evangelistic superintendent of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, President J. D. Moffat of Washington and Jefferson College, Dr. S. Edward Young of Brooklyn, and Dr. John Balcolm Shaw of Chicago, are among the men of note and responsibility who introduced him to our Christian fellowship. It is needless to say that his theology is one with that for which this Magazine has always stood.

The International Sunday-school Lesson, for which Mr. Hunter has been responsible hitherto, will hereafter be prepared by Dr. William Evans, Director of the Bible Course of The Moody Bible Institute. "For Sermon and Scrap Book" and "Notes and Suggestions" will be in charge of Mr. William Norton, the hitherto faithful and successful business manager of the Magazine, whose gifts and opportunities qualify him particularly for those departments. We may be pardoned for saying that 1911 was one of the most prosperous and encouraging years in every way which the Magazine has known, and we are looking forward to the current year as one of marked growth and blessing. We covet the prayers of all our readers to that end.

We felt the death of Dr. Devins of the New York Observer to be a very positive loss to the evangelical religious press of the country, but are relieved to learn that the paper has been purchased by the syndicate headed by our friend, Mr. Andrew Stevenson, of this city, and that its editorial care is in the hands of another friend, Rev. E. W. Welch, who, although with less experience than Dr. Devins, nevertheless looks at truth from a similar point of view and will maintain the same testimony to the Gospel. We sincerely hope that this old and honored landmark in Christian journalism has its best years still before it.

The Greatest Sunrise of the Ages.

By A. C. DIXON.

"The Sun of Righteousness shall rise with healing in his wings." Mal. 4:2.

AS the sun rises, everything in the world adjusts itself to the great event. The birds of the day awake and begin to sing. The birds and beasts of the night hie away to their dens and hollow trees. Workmen rise from their sleep and start for their places of toil. Farmers hear its call and go about their work. Business men may sleep later, but the rising sun soon drives them to their banks, stores and factories. Moon and stars which have made the night glorious are now out of commission. Grass and flowers, shrub and tree feel the touch of the warm rays and revive. Every sunrise is truly a great event in the history of the world, though our familiarity with it may cause us to overlook its importance. It regulates the movements of kings in their palaces, generals at the head of armies, parliaments and legislatures. "There is nothing hid from the heat thereof." Every kind of life, animate and inanimate, welcomes its genial warmth and rejoices in its quickening power.

The birth of Jesus was a sunrise upon the world and all worlds adjusted themselves to it. Angels from heaven welcome Him with song, while demons of darkness pay their tribute by keeping out of sight and hearing. This sunrise upon earth was to the angels a sunset in heaven, for the Son of God has left the world of light, that by His incarnation He may drive away the darkness of earth. The angels loved and worshiped Him there, and it is fitting that they should call the earth to love and worship Him here. Their song has in it strains fitted for both heaven and earth: "Glory to God in the highest (heaven) and on earth peace and good will among men." "Unto you is born this day a Saviour (for earth), which is Christ the Lord (of heaven and

The angels know that the birth of Christ means heaven upon earth to all who will accept Him as Saviour and crown Him as King. Their song proclaims the dawn of a new day. The Sun of righteousness has risen with healing in His wings, and though He is to be obscured by clouds of opposition and will seem to go down in gloom, He will shine above all clouds, till by and by He shall break forth in new glory and all the world shall be filled with His light.

It is interesting to trace the rise of this Sun of Righteousness in prophecy. The promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head is the first gleam of light in the East. The promise to Abraham that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed is a brightening of the eastern sky; and, as we trace the Messianic idea through the Old Testament, the light grows brighter till in the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah we are in the morning twilight. John the Baptist, though a burning and shining light, is only the morning star proclaiming that the sunrise is near.

The birth of Jesus wakes up Herod, that wild beast of darkness, who represents the pagan world-powers. Herod seeks to kill Him, but his efforts are like shooting arrows at the rising sun. Children are slain and parents suffer, but the sun shines on. World-powers down the ages have conspired to blot this sun out of the heavens. But these world-powers have passed away like mist before the sun, which shines all the more brightly.

The coming of the wise men from the East suggests the proper relation of learning and wealth to Christ. They have seen His star in the East and have come to worship Him. Though bewildered on their arrival in Jerusalem, they persist in their search until they find the Child, before whom they bow with their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh. There is a yearning in the human heart which nothing but God can satisfy. Neither the study of the stars nor the speculations of philosophy will satisfy it. The knowledge of the greatest things God has made is no substitute for the knowledge of God. Indeed, every star would lead us back to its creator, and the more we know of the works of God the more we desire to know God, whose wisdom, power and love they display. Ignorance is not the mother of devotion, but of superstition. When Kepler discovered his great astronomical law, he fell upon his knees, exclaiming, "O God, I think Thy thoughts after Thee." It has been said, "An undevout astronomer is mad." So is an undevout botanist, for every flower whispers to us the wisdom and goodness of God, who delights in spreading before us in the fields a feast of beauty. So is an undevout physiologist, for the human form he studies is so wonderfully made as to suggest a God of wisdom and power. So is an undevout historian, for the only true philosophy of history is in the fact that God has proposed and disposed for men and nations. "Tell your master," said Napoleon Bonaparte to a courtier who had quoted the words, 'Man proposes but God disposes,' "that I propose and dispose, too." But he learned better on the island of St. Helena. So is an undevout mathematician, for the numerics of nature show back of it all a divine intelligence. There is no such thing as an undevout poet. Every one who has tried to write poetry with God eliminated has been a failure, and the explanation is easy. The true poet interprets things as they are, and any system of poetry or philosophy which ignores God is unnatural, shallow and artificial. Astronomy, botany, physiology, history, poetry and philosophy join with religion in leading us to God; and when, like the wise orientals, we become earnest and persistent in our search for God, we will wend our way with them to the manger in Bethlehem and see there the mystery of the ages—God incarnate in a babe, born of a virgin mother; and our reason will join with our sense of soul-need in prompting us to fall before Him in worship, for it is reasonable that God, if He wishes to lift man from sin to purity, should become Himself a pure man among men. And it becomes all the more reasonable when we learn that it is God's purpose to settle the sin question by bearing man's guilt and making it possible for him, alienated by sin, to come again into harmony with God. It is reasonable that God should come down to man's level if He would lift man up to His level. Though there is much in the incarnation above our reason, the fact that a God of love should make Himself known to His creatures by becoming man is reasonable enough. True wisdom and knowledge would thus lead us to the infant Jesus; and, while we wonder, we worship.

It was also fitting that these wise men should lay their wealth at the feet of Jesus. As God incarnate, He owns all we have by right of creation; He owns us by right of redemption. We are His stewards. We do business on His capital. The proper place for us and our possessions is at His feet.

These wise men brought frankincense and myrrh with their gold. Frankincense was an aromatic resin, which filled the air with its perfume, and symbolized praise. Myrrh was a bitter substance, which is a good symbol of repentance. Gold is acceptable to Christ only when we bring it with repentance and praise.

"Nothing has been discovered by modern scholarship and criticism to shake the belief in the Deity of Christ or the inspiration of the Bible."—Rev. John A. Hutton, of Glasgow, at Northfield Bible Conference, 1911.

Four Supernatural Facts as Viewed By the Natural and the Spiritual Man.

BY W. J. ERDMAN.

HERE are four supernatural facts inseparable from each other and from the Lord Jesus Christ: The Bible; the Jew; the Church; the Day of Rest.

We mean by the supernatural that which has its origin, continuance and consummation of purpose from God alone. To apply the word of Scripture, supernatural things are "from God"; "through God"; "unto God." "For of Him and through Him and unto Him are all things." (Rom. 11:36.)

But concerning the four facts to be considered attention is called to the agency of God as made known not in a subjective but in an objective manner. They came, continue, and reach their consummation, not through the action of the Spirit of God on the "religious consciousness" of man, but through an external act or manifestation of God visible or audible to the senses.

THE BIBLE.

As to the sacred Scriptures God must first reveal Himself in word and act or appearing, that there may be a record of His will and ways; and further, He must move men to write. If the writings of Moses are to be believed at all God spoke with him "Mouth to mouth, even manifestly and not in dark speeches, and the similitude of Jehovah he beheld." (Num. 12:8.)

Again and again from Eden on, the "voice" is heard, the "appearance" made; appeal after appeal is made to eye and ear; all is external, objective; and so God is first in the origination of the fact and in the movement of divine inspiration to record it; "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost."

THE JEW.

As to the Jew, how unaccountable as a fact of the past, unless one believes the opening word of the martyr Stephen's defence, "The God of Glory appeared unto our father Abraham." (Acts 7:2, Gen. 12:1.) Had God never appeared to him there never would have been a Jew. Here again the divine, the supernatural, was first, objectively first, and the great historic fact of Israel was started by God.

THE CHURCH.

As to the Christian Church no origin can be given that does not at last bring us to that upper room in old Jerusalem and cause us to hear again "a sound from heaven." It is God who is first again in this fact. All is "from heaven," all "through the Spirit," "from on high"; the super-earthly, the supernatural is the power, starting, bending, moving all before it. (Acts 2:1-4, 1 Cor. 12:13.)

DAY OF REST.

As to the Day of Rest, no matter whether it be the last day or the first day of the week, in either case it leads to God for its origin. No Adam could possibly have been moved through his "religious consciousness" (that modern medium of the natural man for the revelation of all things religious, ethical, humanitarian) to rest from his labor every seventh day. This obedience must have been due not to a pious meditation but to a divine command; at least, his descendants at Mt. Sinai were commanded to remember to keep the Sabbath, and that too by an audible voice. And if the first day of the week be observed as the Day of Rest, it is due to the stupendous fact of the resurrection of Christ from the dead, a fact attested by hundreds of the early Church, and made evident by Christ to their sense of seeing, hearing, touch; all is external, objective, in the origin of such a day. Is it the seventh day, it is inseparable from a

God-started creation and "the rest of God"; is it the first day, it is inseparable from a God-originated redemption and a confirming resurrection that thrusts through and above all that is natural. (Gen. 2:3, Heb. 4:10, Mark 16:9.)

And all these four facts are related to and inseparable from the most stupendous fact, our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Word made flesh.

With Him as a Jew and with Jews, is bound up the fact of the Old Testament and its Day of Rest; with Him as Head of the Church, the New Testament and its Day of Rest; and with Him both these Scriptures as the revealer of God from the beginning.

And these four facts are not only "from God," as to their origin, but also as to their continuance and end according to the eternal purpose of God; they are also "through Him" and "unto Him." It is the wisdom and power and goodness of God which sustain, develop, and carry them forward to a predestined end and consummation, and all to His glory. But all is again objective. The Scriptures are a finished, fixed fact, and in our very hands, but they look to and are reserved for a future of magnificent fulfilment pertaining to the Jews and the nations and the Church of God.

And the Jew is not a shadowy figure of the mythical past, but a most potent, indestructible fact and factor of the modern world, and holds the prophetic contents of the Messianic age to come. And the Church is the most all-pervading fact of the history of Christendom and in prospect of a future with Christ as the head of all things. And a universal Day of Rest is the predicted fact for all peoples and tribes, when the kingdom of righteousness and peace is established, when heaven and earth will be in a divine concord, and their dwellers all enter into the Rest of God. "There remaineth therefore the keeping of a Sabbath for the people of God." (Heb. 4:9.)

HOW DOES THE NATURAL MAN VIEW THESE FOUR FACTS?

For a definition of the name, "the Natural Man," we turn to 1 Cor., chapters 1-4; the section of that epistle which sets in such marked contrasts the wisdom of God and the wisdom of man or the world, touching salvation and the Lord Jesus. The natural man is one unregenerated, one unenlightened by the Spirit of God. He is man who did not of himself find out how to be saved and who did not recognize the Saviour when he came; he did not know God either as holy or gracious. The same man is here today; in sum total he is the world; the spirit of the world controls him and blinds him to the things of God. He is unchanged and just the same as in the apostolic day. It was fabled of old, "If men could only see virtue all would fall in love with her," but when the Lord Jesus came, all truth and grace then was fulfilled, not the classic proverb, but the divine prophecy, "He has no form nor comeliness, and when we shall see him there is no beauty that we should desire Him." So today men filled with the spirit of the world either do not recognize or receive the truths of divine revelation; and even if held in name are perverted in fact. Especially is this true of the four facts we are discussing.

By them the Bible is made more human and less divine, and by some so human that errors and faults and contradictions are affirmed to have been in it from the very beginning.

By them the Jew is considered to be without a miraculous past, present or future; his alleged origin mythical, his history a natural development, his future indistinguishable from that of the common race; all his curses given, his blessings stolen, his national predictions idealized in favor of the ecclesiastical systems of Christendom. And yet a thinker like Hegel confessed to his dying day that somehow the continued existence of the Jew did not fit into his philosophy of human history.

According to it the Jewish people like the dead and buried nations of old with whom they had been contemporary should have perished long ago; but lo! from age to age Israel moves before men the miracle of history, the ever living witness to a supernatural origin, a supernatural preservation, a supernatural destiny—the offense to the natural man, the provocation to the “spirit of the world.”

By men filled with the notions and reasonings of the natural man the Church is viewed as a merely human society embodying the faith and facts of a common natural religious sentiment which robs Christianity of its cross and its crown, denying the heinousness of sin, and the coming of Christ to judge the world. Systems of science and ethics are reduced to a low human level and salvation by grace is lost in a subtle pharisaism of salvation by love, by character, by lofty idealism, and correspondingly the divine in Christ becomes nebulous and His claims those of a visionary.

And by the same natural man the Day of Rest is treated as without a divine sanction, or if with it, as made for man; not for man to meet his highest and spiritual needs.

All these many and various opinions concerning these four great facts prove on a tremendous world-wide scale the truth of divine inspiration that “the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God,” that this is now “Man’s day.” (1 Cor. 2:14-16 and 4:1-5.)

It is Man’s day, his diet of judgment, his time of discerning, criticising all things, nature, man, God. It is his day of commerce, civilization, culture, criticism and corruption. But the day of God and His judgment is coming. It will indeed be a crisis, a day of discerning and separating, a day of the reversal of man’s judgments, but even then by no new evidence brought in which men did not already have, for the great facts will condemn him, the “word” shall judge him (John 12:48), the Jew shall be the witness (Isa. 43:10-21), the Church exalted in glory shall be associated with Christ in the judgment of the world (1 Cor. 6:1-4), and a Sabbath day unprofaned by human lawlessness shall gladden the hearts of the converted nations (Heb. 4:9).

God will yet prove He is first in all things: in Holy Scripture as revealing and inspiring; in the origin and perpetuation of a people of Israel He calls His own, controlling and guiding them according to a philosophy of history foreign to man’s wisdom; in the incorporation of the Church and her foreordained glory and sovereignty over all things; and in the consummation of the Sabbatic types holy and festal in the Messianic kingdom. In brief, in creation, in providence, in redemption, God is in and through Christ first and last, for “of Him and through Him and unto Him are all things.”

CONCLUSION.

In conclusion, let us apply the foregoing in the study of the Scriptures.

1. Let us remember that the Bible is divine as well as human, and that as supernatural it may inhold and teach itself how to interpret and understand it. “In thy light we shall see light,” “Open thou mine eyes”; “had they known they would not have crucified the Lord of glory.” (Ps. 119:18, 1 Cor. 2:8, 2 Cor. 3:18.) Give God the benefit of every doubt when facing difficulties, alleged contradictions, and paraded discrepancies. He has discomfited critics in the past. He can do so again. Long buried libraries of tablets and manuscripts are His, and He can disclose as He will; He is very silent for long times, but anon He speaks from out of the whirlwind.

2. Remember the Jew for an understanding of the course of human history as narrated or predicted in the Scriptures. It is the Jew who casts the shadow on the dial plate of time; the "times of the Gentiles" await their close at the beginning of his own.

3. Remember as a Christian whose origin and calling is one with the whole Church as the supernatural Body of Christ, that you are yourself a supernatural being and as such must study the Word of God; to do otherwise is to "walk according to man," and to show "ye are men." (1 Cor. 3:3-4.) Did not our Lord once say to a Peter yet untaught on a great truth and whom Satan was using as his mouth piece, "Thou savorest not the things that be of God but those that be of men?" (Matt. 16:23).

4. Remember that a Day of Rest is so conjoined either with creation or with redemption, that the very idea and purpose of the sacred Scriptures, redemption in order to the Kingdom, is inseparable from a final consummate Sabbath in the Kingdom of God when all the past of the race will be reviewed and understood in all the manifold teachings of providence and redemption.

In brief, the study of the Bible without this constant recognition of the supernatural will be barren of abiding spiritual results. Not in the line of a natural evolution, discredited as a theory by foremost scientific men, come the divine statements concerning sin and wrath and the great truths of regeneration and glorification, resurrection and the return of the Lord Jesus; never can "an arrogant subjectivism be brought in to set aside the objective authority of the Bible." "Cease ye from man" (Is. 2:22).

The Tone of the Book of Daniel Not That of the Maccabean Age.

JOSEPH D. WILSON, D. D.

Professor of History in the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Episcopal Church.

[This is a continuation of Dr. Wilson's article "An Appendix to 'Did Daniel Write daniel?'" which appeared in November, page 173.—Editors.]

Professor Curtis (Hastings' Bible Dictionary "Daniel") thinks that the stories of the young men refusing heathen meats, of the fiery furnace, of the lion's den, of the humbling of Nebuchadnezzar and of the death of Belshazzar, suit the Maccabean age.

Undoubtedly they do—or any other age of oppression by heathen powers. They suit the exile also. As fiction written for homiletical purposes they could be placed, with the names changed almost anywhere in Hebrew history, if they stood alone. But they do not stand alone. They are included in a book in which "the representations of Babylonian conditions in the sixth century B. C. are so correct and so extensive that no erudite Jew of the second century B. C. would have been able to reconstruct so vividly that far away past" (Coburn).

Meinhold says:

"The picture (Daniel 2-6) does not fit the Maccabean age. No single external authority confirms the theory of Maccabean authorship, and the internal evidence is against it. What, on that theory, ought to be mentioned is not mentioned; what is mentioned is not suitable. No word of circumcision, or the Sabbath, or any question which exercised so deeply the Maccabean Jew. Instead of the narrowness of the Maccabean, who emphasized the minutiae of ritual and hated the heathen with a desperate hatred, here is the breadth of the earlier prophets. Daniel considered it his duty to spend his life and powers in the service of a heathen ruler, to guard him from danger as far as possible, to accept office under him, even to permit himself to become chief of the Magi. A Maccabean would have scorned the honors of a heathen king and would have felt defiled by any association with magicians; and if he had heard any of his countrymen pray for the life of Antiochus—as Daniel prays for Nebuchadnezzar and Darius—he would have called him apostate and traitor.”

Professor Cobern endorses these words of Meinhold, and adds:

“The book is not an original romance of the second century B. C. No Maccabean author would have put into the book so many things distasteful to his countrymen.”

As, however, Cobern thinks that the Aramaic portion shows a Maccabean penman, he argues that the writer used ancient materials coming from the time of the Exile. The Aramaic of Daniel is considered on another page. It will there be seen that, since the Chicago professor wrote, the inscriptions have thrown more light upon the Aramaic.

PROFESSOR SAYCE'S INCAUTIOUS CRITICISMS OF DANIEL.

The eminence as an Orientalist and Archaeologist of Prof. A. N. Sayce of Oxford, entitles his words to serious consideration. His scholarship appears in this; that when he discovers his own errors he abandons them. His early adhesion to the theories of higher criticism has been succeeded by an exposure of critical mistakes as he discerned those mistakes in the progress of his own knowledge. But, unfortunately, when he published “The Higher Criticism and the Monuments” he had not unlearned his early errors in regard to Daniel, and the weight of his name is given to the assailants of the canonical book. This is the more to be regretted as his criticisms of Daniel display such carelessness as to raise the question of his accuracy in other discussions where most of us can not follow him.

In “The Higher Criticism and the Monuments” (pp. 533-535), Dr. Sayce discusses the word “Chaldeans” (Kasdim), its history as the name of a people first heard of as living in the twelfth century B. C. near the mouth of the Euphrates; of the spread of the name with the conquests of the people over Babylonia—the name of a nation or race. But in after years, the people of the West came to use the term “Chaldeans” to signify astrologers, fortune tellers and magicians. In this sense, he says, the term is used in the book of Daniel:

“It is a sense unknown to the age of Nebuchadnezzar or Cyrus. We are transported to a period later than that of Alexander the Great, when the influence of Greek ideas and habits of thought was so strong in Palestine as to cause a Hebrew writer to forget the true significance of a name which was of frequent occurrence in his own literature, and to use it in precisely the same erroneous sense as that in which it was used by Greeks in his own day. In the eyes of the Assyriologist the use of the word ‘Kasdim’ in the book of Daniel (as a guild of wise men or astrologers) would alone be sufficient to indicate the date of the work with unerring certainty.”

It is a pity that these confident words should be untrue—a pity that the “eyes of Assyriologist” lead him astray so much. The significance of “Chaldeans” as astrologers, or wise men or magicians or priests, did not begin after Alexander the Great. It was in use in Babylon when Herodotus visited that city in the same century with Daniel. And it was the only use of the term which Herodotus employed in Babylon (Herodotus I. 181, 185). The Chaldeans were a class of learned men; not a class of discredited vagabonds such as Professor Sayce intimates that the Chaldeans of later years became, but men skilled in such learning as was then possible.

It seems strange that with Herodotus in every scholar’s library, none of the impugnors of Daniel thought to look into the book of the historian who comes nearest to Daniel in time and who knew what terms were common in Babylon. Kamphausen of Bonn, Sanday of Oxford, Curtis of Yale, and their numerous followers parade this blunder. Cobern of the University of Chicago, however, escapes it, and, so does Zenos, of McCormick Seminary.

Fortunately for the truth, Herodotus visited Babylon and wrote about it. But suppose he had not happened to mention the guilds of Chaldeans? They would have existed just the same, though we would have had no means of exposing the critics' error. (See "Did Daniel Write Daniel?" p. 57.)

Dr. Sayce also objects to the title "king" as applied to Belshazzar: "He never became king in his father's place." (The Higher Criticism and the Monuments, p. 525.) "He never was king in Babylon" (ib. p. 527).

The first of these statements is true, for Belshazzar died before his father.

As to the second statement, the inscriptions hardly justify it. Professor Cobern (Whedon Series of Commentaries, p. 311) writes:

"It almost appears that Nabonidus (King of Babylon) had turned over not only the command of the army, but the management of the empire to Belshazzar"; and Professor Sayce extols Belshazzar as commander of the troops, the man of action, etc. He is mentioned on every one of the annalistic tablets of Cyrus, was in the public eye, "was better known outside of Babylon than Nabonidus himself."

If, as Professor Sayce assures us, Nabonidus was more given to hunting up antiquities than to governing his kingdom, what more likely than that he should delegate governmental duties to the son of whom he speaks so affectionately? Nabonidus was king, of course, as long as the dynasty lasted and documents were dated in the years of his reign, but why could not Belshazzar have been co-king with his father? Sons were often admitted to co-kingship. If, as Berosus intimates, Nabonidus was outside of Babylon with an army operating in the field, some one must have been left in control in the city. Or if, as Cyrus appears to say, Nabonidus and Belshazzar were usually together, who would be looked to as in control, the man of action or the timid antiquarian?

As is well known, the title "king" did not always bear the restricted sense now in use; so that even if Belshazzar was never formally invested with the kingship he was king in common estimation. Jeremiah calls Nebuchadnezzar "king" before his father's death. There is no record of Nebuchadnezzar's investiture as co-king; but we never challenge the date of Jeremiah on that account. The use of the royal title in Daniel is really an indication of contemporaneity, just as is Jeremiah's use in similar circumstances. Since Belshazzar's existence and eminence have been established by the inscriptions, hostile critics generally have ceased referring to Belshazzar.

Professor Sayce endeavors further to show that Belshazzar could not have been "slain," as Daniel (5:30) says. The method of proof is remarkable.

The professor tells us that the account of the capture of Babylon by Cyrus, as given in Herodotus, was universally accepted by the world, prior to the unearthing of Cyrus' tablets. Herodotus relates how Cyrus besieged the city for months in vain. The city was well provisioned and the strength of the walls defied all efforts of the besiegers. Stratagem, however, at length succeeded; the Euphrates was turned from its channel—or, as Xenophon puts it, the canal running through the city was emptied by two cuttings, one above and one below the city. This was done at night. The too-confident townsmen had neglected to close the water gates. Through the dry bed of the stream the Persians poured in, and when morning dawned the inner defences had all been taken.

Next the professor gives us the tablet of Cyrus which tells a different story. According to it, Babylon was taken "without fighting" by Gobryas, an officer of Cyrus. Three months later Cyrus entered the city, "allayed dissensions," "established peace" and appointed Gobryas governor, who in his turn appointed sub-prefects.

But how do these stories, either or both, prove that Belshazzar was not slain? The tablet story is no doubt the truer. Babylon was given to an easy change of masters as its whole history shows. Cyrus plays upon the religious prejudices of the people. He denounces Nabonidus as an impious remover of idols from one city to another. He tries to make out that his quarrel was with the Chaldean dynasty, and not with the citizens of Babylon. If there were any conflicts in the city—and his statements about allaying dissensions and establishing peace point to some disturbances, natural enough with the change of masters—he glosses them over. Allowing for a politic concealment of any opposition he may have met, he came into Babylon very probably with little trouble.

Cheerfully accepting Sayce's opinion, that Cyrus' story is more probable than that of Herodotus, the question arises, What has this to do with the accuracy of Daniel? Sayce answers as follows:

From the book of Daniel "we learned—that Babylon was a work of time and difficulty" (Higher Criticism and Monuments, p. 498). "The story of the long siege of Babylon was repeated by historian after historian and the book of Daniel seems to set its seal upon it" (ib. p. 523). "The account given by the book of Daniel is at variance with the testimony of the inscriptions" (ib. p. 526).

These statements are not correct in any particular. Daniel does not say a word about a long siege, or any kind of siege. He gives not the faintest intimation of the work being one of time and difficulty. He does not set his seal upon the siege, for he says nothing about it. His account is not at variance with the inscription. Here is what Daniel says:

"In that night was Belshazzar the Chaldean king slain, and Darius the Median received the kingdom" (Daniel 5:30, 31).

That is the whole of Daniel's story. All the parade in Dr. Sayce's book, about his "setting his seal" and the "long siege" and the rest of it, is pure invention on the professor's part. So far as Daniel speaks, we know of no one else dying. Belshazzar died that night, and the Chaldean dynasty was ended; for he, the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar, was the center of the people's loyalty, and they had no more interest in Nabonidus. Daniel's account used to seem surprisingly brief when the Herodotus account was the only one we had; but now with Cyrus' account before us, Daniel's brevity surprises us no more. Dr. Sayce must have written this part of his great work without looking at the book of Daniel at all; if so, he is not singular—and that is the pity of it!

But how is it made out that Belshazzar was not slain? Sayce says he was the "man of action," "better known," etc., up to the time that Cyrus entered Babylonia; that after that he disappears from history, and that owing to a lacuna in the middle of the tablet we do not know what became of him (Higher Criticism and Monuments, p. 526).

How this contradicts Daniel it is difficult to see. If Belshazzar was slain his disappearance from history is easily accounted for. Sayce does indeed conjecture that he must have died—a conjecture which nobody will dispute—but why the commander of the army did not meet a soldier's death, the critic carefully hides in his own bosom.

The passage in the tablet "the king's son died," Sayce translates—differing from other Assyriologists—"the king's wife died." This translation, if correct, does not alter the fact that Belshazzar, the man of action, "the joy of his father's heart" up to the time of Cyrus' advance on Babylon, disappears from history with the fall of Babylon. Was he murdered by some one seeking to curry favor with Cyrus? Or, inflamed with wine after his great feast, and madly despondent over the hand-writing on the wall, did he rush out upon the enemy and perish? We may conjecture as we like, but that the soldier did not die in his bed may be assumed without any strain of the imagination. He was the people's darling. With him out of the way Cyrus was secure. And then, when "there was mourning throughout the land of Accad" and Cyrus had a grand funeral celebrated, the shrewd conqueror touched the people's heart.

If Sayce's translation "the king's wife died" is correct, and the ostentatious funeral was for her, a new reason is added for supposing her the daughter of the great Nebuchadnezzar (see "Did Daniel Write Daniel?" p. 28).

The Revised Version, in giving the correct translation, "the Chaldean king" instead of the Authorized Version "the king of the Chaldeans," brings before us one of those incidental marks which establish the truthfulness of a record. Recent researches indicate that Nebuchadnezzar was not a pure Babylonian, but a Chaldean. The accuracy of the title "Chaldean king" as applied to Belshazzar thus appears. Darius the Mede (Daniel 9:1) is not so called. He was "king over the realm of the Chaldeans."

Professor Sayce thinks that some of the names in the book of Daniel are incorrectly spelled, and intimates that this is evidence against exilic date. These names are Belteshazzar, the Gentile name of Daniel, Abed-nego and Arioch. Let us examine these names, gathering our information chiefly from Sayce himself. Abed-nego ought to be Abed-nebo, from the god Nebo. But Sayce found Abed-nego in an Aramaic inscription in Egypt of Daniel's own century. Sayce further admits that "Arioch" existed long before Nebuchadnezzar's day, being a word of Sumerian origin. Then why object to it? Names of people outlast changes of dynasties. Belteshazzar, it appears, is not good Babylonian. Being compounded with Beltis the name of a heathen god, it ought to be slightly different. But the Jews avoided naming a heathen god except in contempt—evidence of which strange to say, may be seen in the new Jewish encyclopedia. They did not disesteem Daniel nor Azariah, and a slight change in their Gentile names avoided the disgrace of coupling them with despised heathen divinities.

However, this matter of orthography seems frivolous in view of the fact that names are spelled in the cuneiform in different ways; even so prominent a person as Belshazzar, the king's son, has his name rendered in a variety of forms.

Professor Sayce has imperiled his reputation as a careful scholar by these gratuitous blunders. Why did he do it? I can not believe that he intended to deceive. The apparent explanation is that, in a fit of compunction for the hard blows he had dealt the destructive critics in the forepart of his book, he dashed off his remarks on Daniel without looking at Daniel. He took it for certain that the critical current against Daniel must be correct, as a host of others have done. Perhaps, however, he has already discovered his error and has corrected it—that would be like his manly self—but I have seen no correction from his pen. "A lie flies upon wings; the truth follows on leaden feet."

Were the Ethics of Buddhism Borrowed from the Old Testament?

BY ELIZABETH A. REED, A. M.,

Author of "Hindu Literature," "Persian Literature," and "Primitive Buddhism."

BUDDHISM is a strange mixture of contradictions which do not seem in any way to surprise its advocates. While Buddha himself was an atheist, believing in no God higher than himself, he nevertheless recognized the deities of the Hindu pantheon because his methods were designed to conquer by absorption. This is still the policy of the system and it is boldly claimed that a man or woman may be a very good Buddhist by endorsing the philosophy, and contributing freely to the priests, without interfering with any other faith!

Indeed we are told over and over again that "Buddhism is five hundred years older than Christianity and teaches everything found therein, and hence Christianity must have been borrowed from Buddhism!"

The first clause of this statement is false because the teachings of Christianity include that sublime monotheism which was a part of the primeval revelation given to man in the very dawn of human history. As surely as God was first, so surely must the worship of the one God have preceded the various forms of polytheism and idolatry. The second part is false as to fact, and the last is pure assumption.

Among all the various philosophies of the world, Buddhism is the greatest borrower, having imbibed the ideas of the older Hindu faiths, much of which involves unspeakable corruption, besides many of the more modern theories. The readiness with which it allies itself with the leading idea of every people which it attempts to proselyte is one of its most prominent characteristics, and hence among scholars it has been called "the universal borrower!"

This tendency to acquire the creeds of other peoples involves violent contrasts, and the possession in the Buddhist archives of a literature which is so loathsome that it repelled even the self-sacrificing industry of Burnouf when he found some of the books to be as immoral as they are absurd. "The pen," he says, "refuses to transcribe doctrines as miserable in respect to form as they are odious and degrading in respect to meaning."

Another line of thought, however, is found to coincide with a lofty moral code and this expression of virtue is found on the pages of the Dhammapada, which is the most valuable of all the Buddhist writings. It is true that it contains within itself some striking contrasts, and inculcates ideas which must have been drawn from very different sources, some of them coming from early Egypt and some from the more primitive forms of Hinduism. Still others, and by far the most valuable portions of the book, seem to have been borrowed from the Old Testament Scriptures.

There is a multitude of forcible illustrations of this statement, but limited space prevents the citation of more than the following, which have been chosen because of their brevity:

In the Dhamma-pada it is said: "For hatred does not cease by hatred at any time; hatred ceases by love; this is an old rule." This "old rule," however, had been more tersely expressed in Proverbs, where it is said that "Hatred stirreth up strife, but love covereth all sins."

In the Dhamma-pada it is said: "Thoughtlessness is the path of death. Those who reflect do not die—those who are thoughtless are dead already." This idea had been better expressed in Proverbs: "In the way of righteousness is life, and in the pathway thereof there is no death."

Again in the Buddhistic work it is said: "Fools follow after vanity, the wise man keeps earnestness as his best jewel." Solomon had long before written: "The crown of the wise is their riches, but the foolishness of fools is their folly."

In the Dhamma-pada we find the admonition: "Follow not after vanity, nor after the enjoyment of love and lust." The Psalmist had previously enquired: "How long will ye love vanity and seek after leasing?"

In the sayings of Buddha we find the following: "If a traveler does not meet with one who is his equal, let him keep to his solitary journey; there is no companionship with a fool." Solomon had, however, expressed the sentiment more forcibly when he said: "Let a bear robbed of her whelps meet a man, rather than a fool in his folly."

Buddha said: "A fool who knoweth his foolishness is wise, at least so far." In Proverbs it had previously been written: "Even a fool; when he holdeth his peace, is counted wise."

In the Dhamma-pada we find the wise admonition: "Do not have evil-doers for friends; do not have low people; have virtuous people for friends." This appears to be a rather clumsy translation of Solomon's terse saying: "He that walketh with wise men shall be wise, but the companion of fools shall be destroyed." Or possibly it was the Pali rendition of Psalms 1:1.

Again it is said in the Buddhistic work: "If one man conquers in battle a thousand times a thousand men, and if another conquer himself, he is the greatest of conquerors." This verse is evidently a repetition of the statement: "He that ruleth his spirit is greater than he that taketh a city."

The saying of Buddha: "The wicked man burns by his own deeds as if burnt by fire," reminds one forcibly of the question in Proverbs concerning sin: "Can a man take fire in his bosom and his clothes not be burned? Can one go upon hot coals and his feet not be burned?"

In the Dhamma-pada it is said: "He who always greets and reveres the aged, four things increase unto him, life, beauty, happiness and power." This is a strange sentiment to find in a system which taught that all life was misery, that beauty and happiness were to be shunned, and power ignored. How shall we account for this peculiar sentiment in such a setting except upon the principle that the writer had access to the Books of Moses, where it had long before been written: "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head and honor the face of the old man?"

In the Dhamma-pada it is said: "Do not kill, nor cause slaughter." But centuries before this, it had been written upon tables of stone: "Thou shalt not kill!"

In the precepts of Buddha we find the admonition: "Do not speak harshly to anybody. Those who are spoken to harshly will answer thee in the same way." This sentiment had been more clearly stated in these words: "A soft answer turneth away wrath, but grievous words stir up anger."

In the Dhamma-pada it is said: "He who dwells in the law, delights in the law, meditates in the law, follows the law, will never fall away from the true law." This is almost a repetition of the words of the Psalmist: "His delight is in the law of the Lord and in His law doth he meditate day and night."

In the precepts of Buddha it is said: "If a man hold himself dear, let him watch himself carefully."

This appears to be an echo of the admonition: "Take heed to thyself and keep thy soul diligently," and many similar passages.

In the Dhamma-pada it is said: "The fault of others is easily perceived, but that of one's self is diffacult to perceive." This sentiment had long before occurred in Proverbs, where it was said: "Every way of a man is right in his own eyes * * * his neighbor findeth no favor in his eyes."

Again in the Dhamma-pada it is said: "All men tremble at punishment; all men love life; remember that thou art like unto them, and do not kill, nor cause slaughter." Not only is this injunction preceded by the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill," but the whole sentiment was more broadly expressed hundreds of years before the birth of Buddha in the command: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself" (Lev. 19:18). It has been freely charged that Christ borrowed the golden rule from Buddha, or from Confucius, regardless of the fact that the sentiment expressed in Matthew is ascribed to "the law and the prophets."

Many other similarities might be cited, did space permit, between the verses of the Dhamma-pada and the older literature of the Hebrews. Compare especially: Dhamma. v. 17, with Isa. 57:20, 21; Dhamma. 34, with Psalms 15:2, 5; Dhamma. 66, with Prov. 18:7. Again, compare Dhamma. 69 with Eccl. 8:2; also Dhamma. 82 with Psalms 119:165, and Isa. 47:18, and many others.

It can hardly be claimed, however, that the few which are here cited are accidental, and it is certain that every moral principle which was ever inculcated by either Buddha or his followers was freely taught by Moses and the Prophets, long before the birth of Buddha.

It is true that Buddhism has "Ten Commandments," the first four of which are like those of the Mosaic decalogue, and it is still more significant that a story found in the Jatakas is apparently based upon the wise decision of Solomon (1 Kings 3:16-28). "The Hebrew story," says Rhys Davids, "in which a similar judgment is ascribed to Solomon, occurs in the Book of Kings, which is more than a century older than the time of Gautama * * * and it should be remembered that the chronicle in question was based for the most part on tradition current much earlier among the Jewish people, and probably on earlier documents."

History furnishes many evidences of communication of the Jews with various peoples, including those of India, but these we cannot examine within the space assigned to this article. We may, however, call attention to one or two instances of undoubted intercourse.

"Nor should we," says Prof. F. Max Muller, "when looking for channels of communication between the ancient kingdoms of Asia, forget the Jews, who were more or less at home in every part of the world. We must remember that they came originally from Ur of the Chaldees, then migrated to Canaan, and afterwards sojourned in Egypt before they settled in Palestine.

After this we know they were led into captivity, and lived in close proximity and held daily intercourse with Medians, Persians, Babylonians and Assyrians."

Not only is it true that India was one of the provinces of Darius at the time when the Prophet Daniel held a high position at the king's court, but later events show that the Jews were very numerous in India during the life of Buddha.

Ahasuerus, who has been definitely identified with Xerxes I, "reigned from India even unto Ethiopia." He was contemporary with Buddha, and during his reign, the Jews were so numerous in India, and the other provinces of his dominion, that they made a successful stand against their enemies when the king instructed them to do so. And the great victory then obtained was celebrated by the institution of the annual feast of Purim, which is observed by the Jewish people even to this day.

Therefore the Jewish people were exceedingly numerous in and around India during the time of Buddha, and it is a well-known fact that they carried their sacred books, their system of ethics and, as far as possible, their form of worship, into every country where they obtained a foothold.

Hence, opportunities were apparently abundant for Buddha and his followers to learn the Proverbs and oft-repeated sayings of this peculiar people. If it be true, as Max Muller asserts, that "the Indian alphabet certainly came from a Semitic alphabet," we may well believe that the alphabet was not the only literary heritage which the people of India received from the Semites.

At all events, in the light of numerous and indisputable imitations found in the Buddhistic writings of the earlier works of Moses and the Prophets, we are prepared to say to the Buddhistic priests: "We have found stolen literary goods in your possession, and it is quite in order for you to explain where you obtained them."

Henry Watterson, editor of the Louisville Courier-Journal, said on November 13, in an address at a church corner-stone laying:

"I would have all the ministers of religion as free to discuss the things of this world as the statesman and the journalist, but with this difference—that the objective point with them shall be the regeneration of man through the grace of God and not the winning of office or the exploitation of parties and newspapers. Journalism is yet too unripe to more than guess at truth from a single side. The statesman stands mainly for political organism. Until he dies he is a suspect.

"The pulpit remains, therefore, still the moral hope of the universe and the spiritual light of mankind. It must be non-partisan; it must be nonprofessional. It must be manly and independent. But it must also be worldly wise, not artificial, sympathetic, broadminded and many sided, equally ready to smite wrong in the mighty and kneel by the bedside of the lowly."

THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE OF THE CHRISTIAN AND MISSIONARY ALLIANCE.

This conference was held in "The Morgan Street Tabernacle" at the corner of Morgan and Monroe Sts. This building having fame as "Old Second Baptist Church," has been secured by the Alliance because of its location and adaptation to the work in Chicago.

The conference opened October 29 and closed November 5, covering two Sundays. The attendance was not very large although the program presented was of exceptional excellence, both as to speakers and subjects considered. The people affiliated with the Alliance movement were faithful in attendance and many not affiliated attended to get a taste of the rich spiritual feast provided and were never disappointed.

Pastor F. E. Marsh, of England, preached on Sunday morning, October 29, on "Possessing our Possessions," and in the evening on "The Only Life Worth Living." During the week he gave addresses on "The Clamant Need of the Times," "The Indwelling Christ," "Enduement for Service" and "What Will Take Place at Christ's Return."

Rev. R. H. Glover, M.D., of China, addressed the conference on the following subjects: "The Challenge of the Far East," "Missionary Responsibility in Scriptural Terms," "Glimpses of Missionary Life and Labor" and "A Missionary Parable."

Rev. A. B. Simpson, D.D., of New York spoke on "The Word of God in the Light of Modern Thought," "The Holy Spirit the Supreme Need of the Age," "What Think Ye of Christ?" and "The Highest Christian Life."

Mrs. T. C. Rounds, 1425 Solon Place, is Corresponding Secretary for the Alliance in Chicago.

Rev. Jesse B. Thornton is pastor of the local Alliance Church.

The Fourth Ecumenical Methodist Council.

J. H. RALSTON.

This Council was in session in Toronto, Canada, for fourteen days, October 4-17, 1911. It represented world-wide Methodism, which, as in the case of some other great denominations, is divided into two sections, the western embracing the United States, Canada, and the Methodist Church in Japan; the eastern embracing Great Britain, Continental Europe, Africa, and Australia.

There were 500 delegates at the Council, including forty bishops and many clergymen famous as editors, preachers, professors, secretaries, etc. Among the laymen there were governors of states, United States senators, members of the British parliament, great merchants, manufacturers, physicians, educators, etc.

The regular meetings of the Council were held in the Metropolitan Church, seating more than two thousand persons, and in different parts of the church edifice there were missionary and historical museums, and exhibits of various kinds. Meetings of a social character were frequent and were held in Massey Hall.

There were inspirational services and the spirit of enthusiastic Methodism was manifested throughout, the climax being reached, according to report, when Rev. Dr. Carman said, speaking from the words, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers few": "My brethren, I think it is time that the leaders of Methodism should begin to recognize, perhaps as they have never done before, that in the signs of these times there is promise of harvest."

The purpose of the Council not being legislative nor administrative, but the considering of questions of an evangelical, ethical, and sociological character, the spirit of universal brotherhood was largely promoted. The Council recognized the great problems before the great body of Christians it represented and discussed the failures as well as the victories of the last ten years. There was a call for a great spiritual awakening, and a return to the old principles of Methodism with application to new conditions.

The subject of immigration enlisted great interest, and was discussed at length. Foreign missions received special attention and in this connection there was a strong plea for closer union of Christians, and Dr. Thomas H. Lewis, of Maryland, a Methodist Protestant, urged the union of all Methodist bodies.

A unique feature was the seating of women delegates on the floor of the Council for the first time, and a number of women, representing both sides of the Atlantic, spoke on the work that women could most effectively do. Mrs. George O. Robinson, of Detroit, had the distinction of being the first woman to raise her voice in the Council.

Peace, especially international peace, was highly favored and when Bishop Hoss alluded to the amicable relations existing between the British Empire and the world's greatest republic, he was heartily cheered. Sir Robert Perks, a great English merchant, made an earnest plea for peace, and said that King George, in the love of the British home and in his devotion to the Empire and the inheritance of his father's love for peace, would be able to guide the Empire through its most troublous days.

A striking personality in the Council was Moty Tiger, of whom Bishop Hoss said: "He is the present chief, and will be the last chief of the Muskogee Indians, the very tribe to which John Wesley went in Georgia. Wesley went back imagining that his work had been a failure, but nearly that whole tribe is now Methodist."

THANKSGIVING AND HUMILIATION.

Thanksgiving for the unshakeable certainty of the fundamentals of the Gospel of Christ. For a world-wide desire among God's children for closer union in the worship and service of Christ. For a quickened interest in the Holy Scriptures, as being the Word of God, which makes "wise unto salvation." For the infallible proofs that life in Christ is a victorious life, and that life apart from Christ is a defeated life. For the earnest longing for a revived Church and an evangelized world. For the gift of the Holy Spirit and the blessed experience of those who receive and obey Him.

Humiliation in view of man's pride and self-sufficiency. In view of the delusion that the evil of life lies in man's circumstances, and not in the man himself. In view of the delusion that man can be delivered from his miseries without being delivered from his sin. In view of many lapsing from Christian faith and worship. In view of energy and wealth spent on worldly pleasures and self-indulgence. In view of worldliness displacing spirituality in many churches.

THE CHURCH UNIVERSAL: PRAYER FOR THE "ONE BODY" OF WHICH CHRIST IS THE HEAD.

Prayer for a wider conception of the Church as a spiritual institution. That all members of the Church may abide in personal union with Christ as Head of the Church. That there may be faithfulness in preaching the saving Gospel of Christ, which comes from above and works from within. That there may be less of the preaching which seeks to solve problems, and more of the preaching which seeks to save souls. That the Church may realise her call out of the world, in order to understand her commission to go into the world as Christ's witness. That the ministry, the ordinances, and the organization of the Church may be regarded as organs for the indwelling and inworking of the Holy Spirit. That the Evangelical Alliance may more and more be used and blessed of God to keep the Protestant Reformed Churches throughout the world in fellowship with one another. And that the Alliance may increasingly have divine guidance in its world-wide mission to the churches and to the people.

NATIONS AND THEIR RULERS.

Prayer for all sovereigns and presidents, that they may loyally serve Christ and faithfully serve their people. For all magistrates, judges and legislators, that they may serve the nation to the glory of God. For the opening of the eyes of the people to see the sin and the shame of gambling, intemperance and impurity. For all who have national influence in trade, commerce, labor, literature, wealth, and rank, that they may promote truth and righteousness. For all ranks and conditions of the nation, that class conflicts may cease, and that every citizen may live in accordance with the righteousness which exalteth the nation. For the heads of the nations, that they may see the cost, the waste, and the cruelty of war, and be led of God to apply to all national differences the principles of the Prince of Peace. FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Praise for the Gospel of Christ as the only and all-sufficient saving gospel for man. For the remarkable waves of blessing passing over many parts of the mission field and the ingathering that is following. For the rapid rise of a native church in many lands, and for the hope that it will soon be a great missionary force. For the blessing of the World Missionary Conference, held in Edinburgh in 1910, the influence of which is felt all over the world.

Prayer that every member of Christ's Body may respond to Christ's need of him, in order that every creature may have the knowledge and offer of Christ's great salvation. That the heathen who is having his faith shattered by western civilization may be saved from western materialism and agnosticism. That young men and women in the home lands may be moved by the Holy Spirit to qualify for the mission field. That the mission preacher, translator, teacher, doctor, nurse, visitor may have the Master's presence with them in their work, and be filled with the Spirit. That the converts may have grace to break at once with their old heathen life, and to commend Christ by their character and testimony. That the native churches may be trained for self-government, with liberty for the free play of race-genius under the guiding of the Holy Spirit. Let us offer special and repeated prayer for any mission station known to us personally, and for missionaries whom we know as personal friends.

PRACTICAL AND PERPLEXING QUESTIONS

ANSWERED BY THE EDITORS

"Would you say that the leading Bible students and teachers of this land are believers in the premillennial coming of Christ, and if so, why?"

We would not say that the "leading Bible students and teachers of this land are believers in the premillennial coming of Christ," but that very many of them are, for example—Campbell Morgan and F. B. Meyer of London, Elmore Harris and Griffith-Thomas of Toronto, C. I. Scofield, A. C. Gaebelien, R. A. Torrey, A. B. Simpson, L. W. Munhall, W. J. Erdman, the late A. T. Pierson, and many more of our own country.

As you ask us to account for it, we can only do so by the fact that they have given the greatest care to the study of the Bible, approaching it in the right spirit and from the right attitude.

J. M. G.

Was I saved immediately after I told mother that I could accept Christ?

We do not know whether you were saved immediately after you told your mother that you could accept Christ. But we do know that the very moment you truly accepted Christ you were saved. It is one thing for you to tell your mother that you can accept Christ, and another thing to accept Him. Have you done that? If not do it now.

You speak of giving the Saviour a place. But this is a mistake. It is rather the Saviour who gives you a place in His salvation. You seem to know the meaning of the vicarious atonement of Christ, and such being the case, it is for you to rest in His finished work and enter day by day more and more into the realization and joy of it. Read and ponder carefully Romans 10:8-13.

J. M. G.

"What is your teaching on sanctification, the spirit-filled life, and receiving the Holy Ghost as a second distinctive work of grace? And does this work take out of us the old Adam nature, the root of bitterness, and leave us pure and holy in God's sight?"

Sanctification has two meanings. The moment we believe on Jesus Christ we are sanctified in the sense that we are then set apart for God forever. But at the same moment the Holy Spirit takes up His dwelling in us and begins a process of sanctification in the experimental sense, as the result of which we grow in grace and in the knowledge of God.

The indwelling of the Holy Spirit is equivalent to our baptism into the body of Christ, and is a single transaction taking place once and forever. But it is one thing thus to have the Holy Spirit dwelling in us, and another to be filled with the Holy Spirit. There is but one indwelling, while there may be many fillings of the Spirit.

In the sense of the indwelling, therefore, there is no second distinctive work of grace to be expected; but in the sense of the filling of the spirit there may be many such experiences.

This does not take out of us the old Adam nature, but gives us power through the new nature to overcome the old, and live a life of victory over known sin. It does not make us pure and holy in God's sight in the sense that we have no experience of sin; but when we believe on Christ we become pure and holy in God's sight in the sense that thereafter there is no sin on us. He takes away its guilt, but as long as we remain in this body there will be a consciousness of sin in us, and a deepening feeling of unworthiness because of it.

THE FIRST BOOK OF CHRONICLES.

Lesson 2. David's Reign. Chapters 10-29.

1. The Downfall of Saul, c. 10.

In reading this chapter with whose general contents we became familiar in 1 Samuel 31, it is important to note the inspired comment at its close (vv. 13, 14).

2. David's Heroes, cc. 11, 12.

It has been remarked that in the history of David in this book, the writer dwells chiefly on its bright and prosperous side, passing over the rest as lightly as possible. His anointing at Hebron (vv. 1-3), reveals nothing of what we learned earlier of the rival kingdom of the house of Saul, and the seven years intervening before his exaltation over all Israel. Again, in the list of warriors (11:10-47), there is an omission of Joab's treachery and barbarous conduct in the cases of Abner, Uriah and Absalom.

Chapter 12 contains a supplemental list of braves who attached themselves to David earlier, and during the days of Saul, and of whom we have no record until now.

3. David's Victories and Festivals, cc. 13-16.

These begin with the bringing up of the ark as far as the house of Obed-edom (c. 13). Then follows the account of battles with the Philistines (c. 14), which occupies a different position from that in 2 Samuel 5, the reason for which can only be conjectured on our part. After this the ark is brought up to Jerusalem (cc. 15, 16), the record thereof being more detailed than in Samuel. Note, for example, the preparation and act of transfer. A tent is erected, (15:1) possibly in the vicinity of the palace, after the model of the old tabernacle. Then a consultation is held (v. 2), the representative men are assembled (v. 3), the bearers chosen (vv. 12-15), the singers appointed (vv. 16-24). Then takes place the act itself, with its rejoicings, sacrifices and distribution of gifts (15:25-16:3). Then the initial service and the psalm of thanksgiving (vv. 4-36).

One of the longer commentaries thus analyzes the eight strophes of this psalm: The first, summons to praise (vv. 8-11); the second, to think on the wonders and judgments of the Lord (vv. 12-14); the third, to think on the covenant made with the fathers (vv. 15-18); the fourth, gives the reasons to remember this covenant (vv. 19-22); the fifth, affirms that all the world shall concur in the greatness and glory of God (vv. 23-27); the sixth, all nations shall worship Him (vv. 28-30); the seventh, the inanimate creation will exult before Him (vv. 31-33); the eighth, closes with a repeated summons to praise and prayer (vv. 34-36).

4. David and The Temple, cc. 17-22.

Except as to its location the record in chapter 17 is in substance the same as in 2 Samuel 7. The "group of war reports," cc. 18-20, runs parallel to four sections in 2 Samuel which, however, in that case are separated from one another by other matters. The story of the plague following the census (c. 21), contains some deviations from that in Samuel, as for example, its position in the record, the fact that the offence was instigated by Satan, that Benjamin and Levi were not numbered, and that the threshing-floor was thereafter the constant place of sacrifice by David. These things, however, are additions and not contradictions. As to the last named, the words in verse 28, "At that time * * * he sacrificed there," have been rendered by Luther and others, "was wont to offer there," meaning that he did it repeatedly, frequently. In an earlier lesson it was stated that this threshing-floor subsequently became the site of Solomon's temple.

After the episode represented by these chapters the author returns to the subject of the temple (c. 22), speaking of David's preparation of the materials (vv. 1-5), his charge to Solomon concerning it (vv. 6-16), and finally his appeal to the princess to assist (vv. 17-19).

6. The Temple and Military Officers, cc. 23-27.

The opening comment of this section gives the reason for what follows. David was old and felt the need of putting all things in readiness for his son (v. 1). There are two things that concern him chiefly, the worship of God and the strengthening of the kingdom, and it is significant that the worship of God receives attention first.

The chapters arrange themselves thus: Chapter 23 deals with the Levites, their number and classification for work; 24 does the same for the priests, except that the closing verses refer again to the Levites; 25 speaks of the singers; 26 of the porters, treasurers and other business officers; and 27 of the army, including its divisions and commanders.

7. David's Last Directions and Death, cc. 28, 29.

The last directions of David concern the building of the temple where all the princes of Israel, the captains, the courtiers and the heroes are addressed (vv. 1, 2), and Solomon in their presence is invested with the power and authority as his successor (vv. 5-21).

Note especially the words in verse 12. "And the pattern of all that he had by the Spirit." We use a capital "S" believing the Holy Spirit to be intended, and that the words should be read in the light of verse 19, "All this, the LORD made me understand in writing by His hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern." Are we not to understand from this, difficult as the words may be, that as God revealed the original of the temple to Moses in the wilderness when He revealed the tabernacle, so now also He controlled and directed David when the time came for the actual erection of the temple?

Do not pass over chapter 29 carelessly. Note David's personal example of giving (vv. 3-5), and the lever it affords to make an appeal to others. See the marked working of the Spirit of God among the people in the gladness of it all (v. 9), a fact David recognizes and for which he praises God, verse 10 and the following.

When it says "they made Solomon king the second time" (v. 22), it is in contrast with 23:1. In that case the first solemn proclamation was made, but now the actual anointing took place. (Compare 1 Kings 1:32 and the following verses.)

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON.

1. What book gives the fuller history of Saul?
2. How should you compare the history of David's reign in 1 Chronicles with that in the earlier books?
3. What explains the successful transfer of the ark in this instance, as compared with the earlier attempt?
4. Have you carefully read the psalm contained in this lesson, and noted its analysis?
5. What evidence of the personality of Satan does this lesson contain?
6. How does it show David's loyalty to God?
7. What may explain David's particularity as to the details of the temple?

THE SECOND BOOK OF CHRONICLES.

Lesson 1. Solomon's Reign. Chapters 1-9.

1. His Prayer and Its Answer. 1:1-13.

With verses three and four compare 1 Chronicles 16, and especially verses 37-40. The tabernacle at Gibeon was the legal place for worship, but the threshing-floor on Mt. Moriah was chosen by David for the reason given (1 Chron. 21:29). A further comparison with the corresponding place in 1 Kings will show how much this account is abbreviated, but the reason for it is not given except as the matter was not necessary to the author's purpose.

2. His Power and Wealth, 1:14-17.

This record is given in Kings near the close of the reign, but inserted here, it is thought by some, as a proof of the instant fulfillment of God's promise.

3. His Erection and Dedication of the Temple, cc. 2-7.

"Hiram" in the text is the same as "Hiram" with whom we have previously met. The two houses (2:1) are the temple and Solomon's own palace. The description of the building of the temple here differs in several particulars from that in Kings. For example, this is more particular as to the plan of the building but less so as to the time when it began; this speaks of the arrangement of the building and its furnishings in an unbroken narrative, but that has two interruptions; this arranges the objects differently and describes with more fulness in some cases, etc. But remember what has been said about the Holy Spirit as the real author of Scripture, and His right to use such liberty to emphasize certain facts or impress certain lessons as He desires. This does not take into account errors of copyists which is a difficult matter, and to which reference also has been made.

Note that here the location of the temple is named for the first time (3:1), and compare Gen. 22:2. The word "Moriah" means "land of the appearing of the Lord." Note also the reference to the brazen scaffold (4:13) not given in Kings, and the additional words at the close of Solomon's prayer (vv. 40-42), and the fuller account of the divine acceptance of the temple (7:1-10).

The large number of oxen and sheep offered in sacrifice is astounding (7:5), but Josephus in his "Wars of the Jews" says that even in later, i. e., in Roman times, 256,000 passover lambs were slain at Jerusalem within a few hours. A current commentator reminds us that these colossal offerings and festivals are no more astonishing to us than the magnitude of our steam or railway trade, or of modern warfare would be astonishing to the ancients.

4. His Earthly End, cc. 8, 9.

In the first of these chapters we have brief notes of events recorded more at length in 1 Kings, for example: the building of certain cities, the palace for the daughter of the Egyptian king, the navigation to Ophir, etc. The comments upon these in that book occupy as much space as seems relatively necessary. To enter into inquiries about the minor differences in the narratives would be fruitless, as the larger commentaries devote pages to the subject without reaching conclusions.

In the next chapter the story of the visit of the Queen of Sheba is given very much as in 1 Kings.

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON.

1. Where was the tabernacle of Moses located at this period?

2. Who is the real author of this book, and how does that fact bear on some of the differences in its record as compared with 1 Kings?

3. How may other differences be explained?

4. Tell what you know of the history of Mt. Moriah?

5. Give a later historical parallel to the large number of sacrifices presented at the dedication of the temple.

THE SECOND BOOK OF CHRONICLES.

Lesson 2. Rehoboam and Jehoshaphat. Chapters 10-20.

1. Rehoboam, cc. 10-12.

The story of the rejected counsel of the older men and what came of it (c. 10) is practically the same as in 1 Kings 12, and furnishes, as previously stated, an illustration of the relation of divine sovereignty to human free agency.

The fortification of Judah's cities against Israel (c. 11) was dwelt upon in the earlier books, as well as the return of the priests and Levites to their allegiance in Jerusalem.

Rehoboam's "wise" action (v. 23) is to be taken in the political sense. He thus gave his sons and grandsons something to do, each having a certain measure of independence, and being kept sufficiently apart from the others to lessen the likelihood of a cabal against the heir to the kingdom.

How long did Rehoboam remain faithful to God (11:17 and 12:1)? What punishment was inflicted for his infidelity (vv. 2-4)? How is God's goodness shown to him (v. 5), and with what result (vv. 6-8)? Note verse eight carefully. How much better to serve God than His enemies, but what bitter experience is necessary to teach this lesson (vv. 9-12). Note the reference to the heathen mother of Rehoboam (v. 13), and the reason for its record (v. 14), as showing her baneful influence on her son.

Speaking of the punishment which befell Rehoboam and Judah from Egypt, it is interesting that its record is found today on the walls of the Egyptian palace at Karnak. Carved nearly three millenniums ago, it is there still an impressive corroboration of Holy Writ.

2. Abijah and Asa, cc. 13-16.

These two kings may be coupled, as the record of the first-named is brief. Verse two of chapter 13 does not contradict verse 20 of chapter 11, since "Michaiah" and "Maachah" are the same, and as "the daughter of Uriel," she was the grand-daughter of Absalom. Such general statements are common in the Hebrew text, as we have seen frequently, and it is impossible to consider each of them.

The numbers in verse three are immense, but compare 1 Chronicles 21:5. The harangue of Abijah (vv. 4-12), except in its character and terms, suggests that of the Assyrian commander before Jerusalem (2 Kings 18), and seems to have been a custom in ancient warfare. What advantage is taken of this delay (vv. 13, 14)? What prevented a rout of Judah (v. 15)? How terrific was Israel's punishment (v. 17)? What was its effect in the subsequent history of Abijah's reign (v. 20)?

How far did this victory show its effects in Asa's reign (14:1)? What was his religious character (vv. 2-5)? For certain qualifications of these words compare the latter half of chapter 16. The statement in verse eight is probably to be taken in our sense of militia rather than a standing army. Great as was this force, what could it have accomplished against the Ethiopians (v. 9) but for God (vv. 11-14)? Which of his successors does Asa, in his faith, suggest? How is he further encouraged (15:1, 2)?

Note in this chapter the story of a typical revival. Its need appears in verses 3-6, a people without God in the sense that they were without the teaching of His Word in power (v. 3), and therefore without peace (v. 5) and in affliction (v. 6). Its progress is set before us in verse eight—courage, repentance, prayer. Its results, (vv. 9-15)—the gathering of the people (vv. 9, 10), their offerings (v. 11), renewal of their covenant (v. 12), separation from the world (v. 13), joy and peace (v. 15). Its cause is revealed in the opening of the chapter as (1) the Spirit of God, (2) the man of God, (3) the Word of God, (4) the work of God (vv. 1, 2 and 7). O, that history would repeat itself in our day; or rather that God would once more pour out His Holy Spirit upon some prophet through whom His word would have potency as of old!

It is a mystery that Asa with such an experience should act as in chapter 16, except as we recognize the same inconsistency in ourselves. Sin makes fools of us all. As there is some confusion in the chronology here, however, it is uncertain just when this event occurred. (Compare verse one with 1 Kings 15:33.)

It is not a sin in itself to seek a physician's aid (v. 12), but an Egyptian physician such as Asa consulted doubtless used demoniacal charms and incantations forbidden by the law of God. It is the same now. An honest physician who heals in accordance with the well understood principles of therapy may be consulted by any Christian without sin; but it is different with a "New Thought" healer, a palmist, a hypnotist, a spiritualist, a Christian Scientist, or other practitioner whose underlying philosophy is paganish and contrary to the Gospel.

The "very great burning" (v. 14) is supposed by some to refer to the cremation of the corpse, a custom which prevailed at that time among the Hebrews (compare 21:19, also 1 Samuel 31:12, Jer. 34:5 and Amos 6:10).

3. Jehoshaphat, cc. 17-20.

The story of this reign opens with the customary characterization of the king, which in this case, as we know from Kings, was commendable, resulting in the divine blessing (17:1-6). But in verses 7 to 11 something of special interest is recorded. The word "to" before each of the names should be omitted, for it was the princes themselves who were sent on this godly mission—"the first practical measure adopted by any of the kings for the religious instruction of the people." No wonder such consequences should have resulted (vv. 10, 11). Here is the secret for a revival in these times, viz., the instruction of the people in the Bible by the best men in the church. This is worth tons of sermons on civic righteousness and reforms, and no end of so-called evangelistic "campaigns," and religious "movements," which have so much of man in them and so little of God.

Verses 12-19 show that no monarch since Solomon equaled Jehoshaphat "in the extent of his revenue, the strength of his fortifications and the number of his troops." It pays to serve God.

Chapter 18 is the same as 1 Kings 22, which we considered in its place, commenting on the lapse it indicates. This lapse met its rebuke (19:2) and its punishment (c. 20). Note in the meantime 19:4, comparing again 17:7-11. And do not overlook 19:5-7. Judicial courts had been established earlier, of course, but here they are localized in the fenced cities. What a charge to the judges! O for the day when it will be heard again when He comes who shall judge the people righteously! Verses 8-11 refer to a kind of supreme or appellate court established at Jerusalem.

Chapter 20 brings us face to face with a great crisis in Judah (vv. 1, 2). How is it met by this pious king (vv. 3, 4)? Study the prayer, observing especially its argumentative character ending in an appeal (vv. 5-12). God loves to be thus argued with on the ground of His promises. Many such instances will be found later in the prophets. Compare, however, Abraham (Gen. 18), and Moses (Exod. 32).

QUESTIONS ON THE LESSON.

1. How does chapter 10 illustrate the dogma referred to in the lesson?
2. Why did Rehoboam deal with his sons as recorded?

3. How may we account, humanly speaking, for Rehoboam's infidelity?

4. How does archaeological research corroborate the truth of any part of this lesson?

5. What, in general terms, was the character of Asa's reign?

6. Have you an opportunity to use the homiletic outline of chapter 15?

7. How should you explain 16:12?

8. What measure of religious instruction was adopted by Jehoshaphat, and what has it to teach us?

9. How does Jehoshaphat's reign show that it pays to serve God?

10. What lessons in prayer may be gathered from it?

LITTLE SERMONS.

By C. F. Ladd.

Righteousness is life's elevator.

There is no true greatness without goodness.

The fool killer seems to have quit business.

You can't build a good future on a bad present.

A fortune gained at a cost of honor is a misfortune.

The Christian religion is more than a string of negatives.

Many a man who tries to be a "high flyer" drops into trouble.

The folks who believe all they hear have plenty to think about.

You will never reach the right place while following the wrong road.

Many a dead man's shoes fail to fit the folks who were waiting for them.

If the devil had what was coming to him there would be a lot of us missing.

You are never sure how the story of life ends until you reach the last chapter.

"I wish to extend my commendation as to your Magazine. I believe it to be sound in the faith of our blessed Lord and trust it shall ever seek to give the truth as in Christ. He alone can convince and convict and show to us all our individual need of God, and by the blood of Christ."—E. M. Tyler.

DECEMBER 10.

Nehemiah and His Enemies.

Nehemiah 6.

Golden Text.—“The Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?”—Psalm 27:1.

Introduction.

Review facts in last lesson, recalling especially the difficulties Nehemiah had to overcome; viz., ridicule, open enmity, and faint-heartedness. Chapter 5 relates another source of difficulty—the worldliness of the well-to-do Jews who were improving (?) the opportunity to squeeze an exorbitant rate of interest from their poorer brethren, and to practice other sharp ways of getting rich. Nehemiah had enemies, shrewd and powerful enemies. They attempted his overthrow in many ways, two of which we are to study today.

1. By an Offer of Friendship, vv. 1-9.

See who these men were and what had been their previous attitude, 2:19; 4:1, 3, 7. What was the cause of their enmity? What did they now propose? What looked suspicious about the invitation? Is it to be expected that one who is God's enemy would sincerely wish to help on God's work? When the world suggests a conference to the church, what may the church naturally doubt?

Just where the plain of Ono was we do not know. Some think it was near the plain of Sharon, about twenty-five miles northwest of Jerusalem, others think it was somewhere in the neighborhood of Jericho.

How did Nehemiah treat the offer of Sanballat & Co.? What reason did he give? What is the church's God-given work in the world? Can the church be parleying with the world and attending to her Master's work at the same time? Can an individual Christian be running about with the world without neglecting his “Father's business”? Which should he do? Is God's work as important to us as it was to Nehemiah? By doing as he did Nehemiah exposed himself to the charge of not wanting to keep the peace. Is there anything more important than avoiding a row? What is far more desirable than every man's friendship? Can we enjoy God's friendship and the friendship of His enemies at the same time? How many invitations did Sanballat send Nehemiah? Does Satan let us off easily when he does not overcome us the first time? Cp. Heb. 12:4. What is meant by “an open letter”? Why did Sanballat at last send “an open letter”? What did he say was reported about Nehemiah? Who might such a letter alienate from Nehemiah? How did Nehemiah characterize it? Can you ruin a man's reputation by insinuations, without ever charging him with anything? To whom did Nehemiah go with the matter? To whom can we safely entrust our reputation? What did He do for us? Phil. 2:7. What would they probably have done to Nehemiah had he gone to meet them?

2. By an Attempt at Frightening Him, vv. 10-14.

When one plan for ruining Nehemiah and his work failed what did Sanballat do? What might we learn from him? What was Shemaiah's business? We do not know why he was “shut up” in the house, but it may have been because of a vow, or for some ceremonial uncleanness, or it may have been part of the plot. Nehemiah, apparently, called on him by invitation. What did this false prophet propose? Would it have been morally wrong for Nehemiah to seek refuge in the temple? Note:—Adult classes might recall the right of sanctuary that used to be a feature of European cathedrals.

What use would Sanballat & Co. have made of Nehemiah's hiding, had he done so? What effect would that have had on the people and the work? What does Nehemiah's answer reveal as to his character? What good reasons had he for not fleeing? What good reasons have we, Christians, for not hiding from our enemies? 1 Peter 3:13; Matt. 28:20; Phil. 4:13; Psa. 27:3; 40:2; 50:4. What did Nehemiah find out about Shemaiah? Is it not a disgrace that a prophet of the Lord would lend himself to His enemies for personal profit? Are there such today? Had Nehemiah an easy time with those who should have supported him loyally? Need we expect the hearty co-operation in the Lord's work of everybody who professes to be a disciple? What was our Lord's experience? What was Paul's? What should we do, then? To whom did Nehemiah take his troubles? Did he attempt any vengeance himself? See Rom. 12:19.

3. The Work Triumphantly Finished, vv. 15-19.

In spite of all obstacles the work was at last finished. Cp. Phil. 1:6. How many days had it occupied? Probably July 19 to September 8, inclusive. The wall was about four miles long, the material was at hand, the builders wrought continuously. How did Sanballat & Co. feel when the wall was done? What especially impressed them about the work? Is our work God's work? Are we doing it so that men see that He is working with us? Are we giving Him the glory? If we are working with, and for, God what must be the outcome? Though the heathen were impressed with God's hand being in the work, what was the attitude of many of the prominent Jews towards Tobiah? What reason underlay that? Should Christians make worldly marriages? 2 Cor. 6:14, 15. What is the almost certain result? If a man, or woman, really trusts God what will they do in such a case? What personal help have you got from your study of this part of Nehemiah's biography?

DECEMBER 17.

Ezra Teaches the Law. Nehemiah 8.

Golden Text.—"The Law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul."—Psalm 19:7.
Introduction.

Review facts of last lesson. The wall was now finished and the people could gather in safety and without interruptions. The lesson might be taught along the line suggested by Henry Clay Trumbull in his "Yale Lectures on the Sunday School," where he points out that the gathering was essentially an open air Sunday-school.

1. The School Organized.

At the request of the people (v. 1). In the open air (v. 1). In the month of September, B. C. 444. Scholars were men, women, and older children (v. 2). Ezra was the superintendent, and he had several assistants and teachers (vv. 2, 7). The purpose was to hear the law God had given by Moses. The purpose of every Sunday-school today should be to hear and understand God's Word. Copies of the law were not as plentiful then as now. The people during captivity had probably neglected it. Ezra and the people evidently believed in the authenticity and inspiration of the book of the law.

2. The Opening Exercises.

Ezra stood so that everybody could see him and hear him without difficulty (v. 4). Prominent men of community, including Governor Nehemiah, were not ashamed to sit on the platform. Ezra gave thanks and people joined in responsive service (v. 6). The reverent attitude and conduct of the audience deserves notice and should be copied.

3. The Teaching.

Taught from the Book itself, not from a quarterly or a lesson leaf (v. 5). Probably Deuteronomy 11:13-25, and Deuteronomy 28 were a part of the lesson. Session lasted at least six hours (v. 3). Ezra first read the Word, probably in the ancient Hebrew language, and he read it distinctly so as to bring out the proper emphasis and meaning. Then it was explained, and perhaps commented on, to the people by the teachers—probably in the more familiar Aramaic tongue (vv. 7, 8). Teachers may here see just what their duty is, and scholars may learn how they should hear and seek to understand what is taught.

4. The Effects of the Teaching.

Conviction of, and sorrow for, their sins (v. 9). The effect of faithful teaching and faithful hearing of the Word. On the Day of Pentecost the Word "pricked to the heart." cp. Heb. 4:12; Eph. 6:17. This gave place to joy as they were shown that God's anger was turned away and He was beginning to bless them again. cp. Psalm 85, Deut. 30. "The joy of the Lord is your strength" (v. 10). "Rejoice in the Lord always" (Phil. 4:4). A rejoicing Christian will always be a victorious Christian. Joy must find another to share it with, so they sent gifts to the needy (v. 12). Does God's goodness to us lead us to be good to our fellows? cp. 2 Sam. 9:3; 1 John 3:17; 4:20, 21; Matt. 18:21-35. This would suggest that we celebrate next Sunday by giving instead of receiving.

Their Bible study brought to light an old feast that they had forgotten—the feast of Tabernacles (vv. 13-15). See Lev. 23:34-44; Deut. 31:10, 11. It was the harvest home festival. Note that it was observed according to God's law; that there was Bible study every day for a week; and that, as a result, "there was very great gladness" (vv. 16-18).

Does our Bible study reveal things we have neglected, inspire us to repair the neglect, and fill us with holy gladness? Do we read enough of it? A French Roman Catholic was given a Bible. He began reading it to his wife. Soon he said, "Wife, if this book is true we are lost." But reading further, he said, "Wife, if this book is true we can be saved." And soon they were saved. Do we obey it? If not, it must condemn us, and we cannot enjoy it. Let us follow the example of godly Ezra and his friends, and enjoy fellowship with God.

DECEMBER 24.

Malachi Rebuking and Encouraging Judah.

Malachi 3:1-4: 3.

Golden Texts.—"Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts."—Malachi 3:7.

"Unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."—Luke 2:11.

Introduction.

Review facts of last lesson. Relate briefly events that occurred between that and today's lesson, e. g.: the solemn league and covenant, dedication of the walls, Nehemiah's absence on a visit to the king and what happened at Jerusalem while he was away, his return and reformation of the abuses. Today's lesson is probably twelve years, or more, later than that of last Sunday.

1. Malachi and His Times.

Malachi was the last prophet of the Old Testament, living, perhaps, in the closing days of Nehemiah's rule, about 432 B. C. Some think he lived at a later date, say about 400 B. C. Conditions in Jerusalem described by Nehemiah are those described by Malachi.

Teachers should read carefully Nehemiah 9-13, and the whole of Malachi, to get the proper viewpoint.

We know nothing of Malachi's personal history. His name may mean either "my messenger," or "messenger of Jehovah." He was God's last messenger to Israel for 400 years. The next man to speak from God was "the messenger" Malachi announced in today's lesson.

2. The Forerunner and His Mission, v. 1.

Note God's charges against Judah in cc. 1 and 2: They denied His love, despised His name, polluted His altar, called His service a weariness, broke His covenant, charged Him with delighting in evil. Note their surprised and haughty denial of the charges, and their challenge: "Where is the God of judgment?" (2:17). God replies: "I will come, but I will send my messenger first." This messenger was John the Baptist. See Luke 3:1-17; John 1:15-37; 3:22-36. Note what his mission was to be and how splendidly he performed it. The best preparation for Jesus is John. We shall have several lessons about John, next year.

3. The Messiah and His Work, vv. 1-6.

The "Messenger of the Covenant," the Lord, "the Messiah,"—are all the same person—the Lord Jesus Christ. This promise had a fulfilment when Jesus was presented in the temple when eight days old. See Luke 2:22-38. But that was not the coming here referred to. At His first coming He proclaimed "the acceptable year" (Luke 4:18, 19; Isa. 61:2). At His second coming, to which Malachi here refers, He will proclaim "the day of vengeance." cp. Mark 13:36; Matt. 24:29-51. It will be a terrible day (2 Thess. 1:7-9). To Israel He will come as a "refiner and cleanser," to His enemies, as a judge and destroyer (v. 5). When? "Watch, for ye know not."

4. God's Challenge, vv. 7-18; 4: 1-3.

Note God's call and Israel's answer. See the fruit of formal religion. They "robbed God" and committed sacrilege. God punished them by sending destroying scourges on vineyard and field. Note His challenge: "Give Me, and I will give." But Israel did not fulfil the conditions and for 400 years God was silent. Even during that period of declension there was a little remnant (vv. 16, 17), and when the Messiah came they welcomed Him. Simeon, Anna, Zacharias, Elizabeth, Joseph, Mary, the apostles and disciples were a part of that remnant. There is still a little remnant of faithful Israelites (not Gentile Christians), but the nation of Israel is in unbelief though the Messiah came 1900 years ago. Compare Israel's present condition and her glorious future when she meets God's conditions (4:2,3).

5. The Message for Ourselves.

We celebrate the birth of Christ tomorrow. But have we accepted Him as our Saviour and Lord, or have we, like Israel, rejected Him? It does not save anyone to know that Christ was born in Bethlehem; He must be born in each individual by faith (Eph. 3:17; Col. 1:27). Are we robbing God? Are we paying as well as praying? Are we giving—first of all giving ourselves (2 Cor. 8:5)?

DECEMBER 31.

Review.

Golden Text.—"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."—1 John 1:9.

A good plan for this review would be for the teacher to run rapidly over the failure of Israel under patriarchs, judges and kings. Then show how God's covenant with Abraham—that He would give him a Seed through whom the whole world should be blessed, and with David—that He would give him a Son to sit on his throne forever, though not fulfilled in the Old Testament were not forgotten by God. Show the preparation of a godly remnant in Israel for the coming of the Messiah, whose advent and life we are to study during the next year. Then ask the scholars if their study of Israel's sad history, and God's wondrous grace, has prepared them to confess their own failure and sin, and led them to enter on the New Year, having accepted Christ as their Saviour, and surrendered their lives to Him as their Lord and Master.

Teachers should remember their scholars in prayer by name, and seek to make this last Sunday of the year, and this last lesson in the Old Testament, an occasion for bringing their unsaved scholars to Christ.

For other plans of conducting quarterly review lessons see The Christian Workers Magazine, vol. XI., pages 621, 875.

In adult classes having separate class rooms the session could be well spent in praise and prayer, closing with an invitation to decide for Christ, or to rededication to His service.

CANADIAN PRESBYTERIAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.

The work of the mission to the Jews, in Toronto, Canada, conducted by Rev. S. B. Rohold, is progressing very favorably. The mission is located at 156 Teraulay St. It was organized three years ago and various departments of practical mission work have been adopted. One of the most important of these is the open-air services. Recent activity along this line stirred up much opposition, so much so that it was a cause of editorial comment in the daily papers.

Mr. Rohold works under the direction of the Foreign Mission Committee of the Presbyterian General Assembly of Canada, which opened another mission to the Jews in Winnipeg on March 31 last. Mr. Hugo Spitzer, formerly in Jewish mission work in London, England, is in charge of the Winnipeg mission.

A large, new building will be erected for the mission in Toronto, to accommodate the various departments of the work.

THE GOSPEL IN THE WORLD

EDWARD A. MARSHALL, Editor.

The summer vacation Bible school movement is now established in fifteen cities.

Seventeen Jamaica churches gave last year over $1,000 for work outside their island.

Fifty-three per cent of the cost of the American Mission in Egypt comes from the natives.

It is reported that the Mohammedans are projecting a plan to build a $500,000 mosque in London.

The Zionists report 90,000 shekel-payers who have become members of the organization throughout the world.

Germany and Russia are planning railroad lines into Persia which will give an outlet to the north and west.

India has 500,000 blind persons, 391,000 child-widows, 6,000,000 child wives, and 27,000,000 orphans, according to the Methodist Episcopal report.

The Pocket Testament League and the "Million Movement" in Korea have attracted the Christian Japanese, and a similar work is being agitated in Japan.

The unrest in China, Turkey, Morocco, Russia, Persia, Spain and Portugal are eloquent evidences that these countries have not yet found the peace which passeth all understanding.

A poor old Chinese woman, almost blind, whose son comes home once a year and teaches her, presented herself as a candidate for church membership. When asked the second time if she was very sure she trusted Jesus she replied: "Why yes, I trust Jesus, that is all I know."

The plan for native Christians to come to America or to England for education is not advocated by most missionaries. They are apt to become alienated from their people, intellectually and socially.

Christians throughout the world should be constant in prayer over Turkey and China. The conflict between Catholic Italy and Mohammedan Turkey is history repeating itself with a prophetic outlook.

Hon. John Wanamaker has contributed to the erection of Y. M. C. A. buildings in Madras and Calcutta, India; Seoul, Korea; Kyoto, Japan; and is now proceeding with the erection of a building at Peking, China.

The Methodist Church reports 500 villages in India awaiting pastoral care which cannot be supplied for lack of funds. A village church can be built for $200 and $50 will pay the salary of a native pastor for a year.

Ceylon retained Buddhism when it was driven out of India, and the cult is now antagonizing Christianity which it declares is spreading like an epidemic. Japan is also seeing a forward movement on the part of Buddhists.

The disintegration of Islam has begun, but there is no telling how many checks there may be in the process as it continues. Therefore, let us hold steadfast in prayer and not be moved by current newspaper reports.

It will not be surprising if the war cloud which hangs over the Mediterranean arouses the Mohammedan world to take their stand against all Christian countries. However, God can as easily prevent their uniting as he did the workmen on the tower of Babel—or scatter them as he did the Syrian army when each soldier fought against his fellow.

Rev. Mr. McLaughlin of the Bible Society, has been operating a moving picture machine in the Philippine Islands; and also showing pictures on the life of Christ. He charged ten cents admission and then gave a portion of the scriptures to each person.

Tripoli which has fallen into the hands of Italy has an area of 400,000 square miles and a population of 1,000,000. The only missionary work there, is carried on by The North Africa Mission with a staff of two married missionaries and two single ladies.

Missionary work among the non-Christian women of the world must be pushed with all diligence. The cruel Zenanas, purdahs and harems are being broken open and the millions of imprisoned women are coming out into the light of civilization. Without missionary influence their first impression will be harmful and the church will lose thousands of souls if it sleeps while this opportunity slips by.

A high Chinese official, recently converted, is now supporting 20 evangelists at an expense of $7,000 annually for the conversion of his countrymen. Another Chinese Christian supports a hospital where 50,000 patients are treated each year.—Missionary Review of the World.

Opium production in China has been reduced eighty per cent in three years, whereas the original plan was to endeavor to secure a reduction of one-tenth each year. Therefore, the country stands five years ahead of its schedule. Then again, the Constitution was at first promised in five years—then in two years, but behold it has come already. The Church, instead of the Chinese is now behind time in China.

Raindrops.

ELIZABETH SPROUSE.

The rain has poured down steadily for days;
The water spreads from all the water-ways—
And makes the prospects very poor for crops;
And yet still fall the liquid, crystal drops.

My int'rests are in lands that lie too low
For grain in seasons wet like this to grow;
And I my song in minor strain must sing
Were there not an upper side to every thing.

Just, good, and perfect gifts come from the skies;
The seeming ill is good in ill's disguise;
Perhaps my bins must empty be that I
May on the Father's care the more rely.

Perhaps too low I've set my earthly hopes,
The rain may bring me fertile, upward slopes
Or drive me to the hilltop, bare and high,
Of earthly poorness, but more near the sky.

So, as I wait and the good gray sky scan,
I'm eager as a child for some new plan,
As certain now as when that plan is known,
Raindrops are seeds of holy purpose sown.

COMMENTS ON LUKE 2.

V. 1.—When the time came for the prophecy regarding Christ's birth to be fulfilled, God put the whole world in motion to bring Mary to Bethlehem.

V. 7.—Jesus was born in a common house of entertainment where all might come to Him, and He died with His arms extended to receive all.

V. 9.—When Christ was born, midnight gloom lightened into midday brightness. When Christ died, midday darkened into midnight. See Luke 23:44.

—"Notes From My Bible."

A CHRISTMAS HOMILY.

A multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest. Luke 2:13, 14.

Angels had been present on many august occasions, and they had joined in many a solemn chorus to the praise of their Almighty Creator. They were present at the creation: "The morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." They had seen many a planet fashioned between the palms of Jehovah, and wheeled by His eternal hands through the infinitude of space. They had sung solemn songs over many a world which the Great One had created. We doubt not, they had often chanted, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and majesty, and power, and dominion, and might, be unto Him that sitteth on the throne," manifesting Himself in the work of creation. I doubt not, too, that their songs had gathered force through ages. As when first created, their first breath was song, so when they saw God create new worlds, then their song received another note; they rose a little higher in the gamut of adoration. But this time, when they saw God stoop from His throne and become a babe hanging upon a woman's breast, they lifted their notes higher still; and reaching to the uttermost stretch of angelic music, they gained the highest notes of the divine scale of praise, and they sang, "Glory to God in the highest," for higher in goodness they felt God could not go. Thus their highest praise they gave to Him in the highest act of His Godhead.—C. H. Spurgeon.

I wonder not that the scorning skeptic so often mocks at Christians because he says that they cowardly cringe at the foot of the cross, ready to take God's gift like a sneak, but show nothing as a fruit of that blessed gift. Remember that God demands, and where God demands he enables, and where God enables he expects us to fulfill.
—H. W. Webb-Peploe.

Stopped at Jesus. Let us not seek to get beyond Jesus.

Will never set, thank God!

To see His star is good; to see His face is better.

Not a black cloud of threat, but a bright star of hope and promise was the sign of Christ.

Every man has seen it—some divinely given light which would lead him to Christ, if he would but follow.

The most important thing about it is not what it was, but what it did.

Be a star yourself to lead others to Christ.

THE MINISTRY OF INTERCESSION.

There is no holy service

But hath its secret bliss:

Yet of all the blessed ministries,

Is one so dear as this?

The ministry that cannot be

A wondering seraph's dower,

Enduing mortal weakness

With more than angel power;

The ministry of purest love

Uncrossed by any fear,

That bids us meet at the Master's feet

And keeps us very near.

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

As I walked by myself I talked to myself,

And myself replied to me;

And the questions myself then put to myself,

With their answers I give to thee.

Put them home to thyself; and if unto thyself

Their response the same should be,

Look well to thyself, and beware of thyself,
And it shall be well with thee.

PRAYING TO DR. JACKSON.

Dr. Arthur F. Jackson, a British physician and Cambridge graduate, was one of the white men who died of the plague in Manchuria this year. The following is the text of the speech made by Hsi Liang, viceroy of Manchuria, at the memorial service held at the British consulate general in Mukden on Feb. 1, 1911: "We have shown ourselves unworthy of the trust laid upon us by our emperor; we have allowed a dire pestilence to overwhelm the sacred capital. His majesty the king of Great Britain shows sympathy with every people when calamity overtakes them. His subject, Dr. Jackson, moved by his sovereign's spirit, and with the heart of the Saviour, who gave his life to deliver the world, responded nobly when we asked him to help our country in its need. He went forth to help us in our fight; daily, where the pestilence lay thickest, midst the groans of the dying, he struggled to cure the stricken, to find medicine to stay the evil.

"Worn by his efforts, the pestilence seized upon him, and took him from us, long ere his time. Our sorrow is beyond all measure, our grief too deep for words. Dr. Jackson was a young man of high education and great natural ability. He came to Manchuria with the intention of spreading medical knowledge and thus conveying untold blessing upon the eastern peoples. In pursuit of his ideal he was cut down. The Presbyterian mission has lost a worker of great promise, the Chinese government a man who gave his life in his desire to help them.

"O, spirit of Dr. Jackson, we pray you intercede for the 20,000,000 people in Manchuria and ask the Lord of heaven to take away this pestilence, so that we may once more lay our heads in peace upon our pillows. In life you were brave, in death you are an exalted spirit. Noble spirit, who sacrificed your life for us, help us still and look down in kindness upon us all."—New York Sun.

While Thanksgiving has its foundation on Plymouth Rock, Christmas rests upon the Rock of Ages.—Charles Dudley Warner.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS

The 145th anniversary of the old John Street Methodist Episcopal Church, New York, was celebrated on Oct. 29 last.

The Gospel Publishing House, formerly of New York, has removed to Lestershire, N. Y., becoming a part of the Practical Bible Training School of that place. Mr. D. T. Bass continues as manager.

"Miracle Wheat" for $60 a bushel, which he claims will yield an enormous yield, in literal fulfilment of the Bible prophecies, is the latest exploitation of "Pastor" Russell of "Millennial Dawn" fame. Barnum's remark is still being verified.

The institution formerly known as The Toronto Bible Training School has chosen for itself a new name—The Toronto Bible College. Rev. T. B. Hyde, a former student of The Moody Bible Institute, and an ex-pastor of Moody Church, Chicago, has been appointed secretary of the college.

The following is an excerpt from a recent report of the work of the Family Altar League, "devoted to the interests of the Christian faith in the home":

1. To date, requests have come in for 163,000 covenant cards; 31,000 of these have been returned, which means that, averaging four to a family 120,000 lives are being daily touched and moulded by a newly established family altar.

2. The Family Altar Magazine has a subscription list now of 8,000, is self-supporting, and is turning over a little money at the close of each year to care for the other part of the work.

3. Great numbers of religious bodies have endorsed the work this past year, and before the new year closes, we have reason to believe that every synod, conference, association, convention, etc., in the United States will have given enthusiastic endorsement to the undertaking.

The headquarters of the League are at 602 Lakeside Bldg., Chicago.

I WISH for you Health enough to make hard work a pleasure; Wealth adequate to the supply of all reasonable wants; a Courage equal to every threat of circumstances; a Vision keen to see the reality which underlies appearance; a Charity desirous and hopeful of finding good there.

I I wish for you a Patience that will outwear vexation; a Cheerfulness that shall infect others; a Faith that shall compel experience to pay you tribute; a Hope in the Immortal Life that shall put the fear of death to shame.

I I wish for you the Dignity which befits those made in the image of God; the Humility becoming to needy folk for whom Christ died; the Enterprise in all good adventures that issues from the Companionship of the Spirit. I am persuaded that these good things are for you, and that you must find them if you Follow the Way.

The November "public sessions" of The National Bible Institute's School for Christian Workers were held in the Marble Collegiate Church, New York, on the 2d ult. "Prayer" and "Service" were the two subjects made prominent in the addresses. The speakers were Dr. C. I. Scofield, Dr. Edgar W. Work, Rev. C. X. Hutchinson, Mr. Don O. Shelton and Mr. A. P. Fitt.

The library of Dr. Arthur T. Pierson is to be disposed of by private sale, as will be seen by the advertisement on page 249. It was hoped at first that it might be kept together through being purchased by, or presented to, some institution or school, but this has not proved practicable. It contains many books that every minister or theological student, or active Christian layman, should possess.

A SCOTCH BLESSING.

"If after kirk you bide a wee
There's some would like to speak to ye.
If after kirk you rise and flee
We'll all seem cold and stiff to ye.
The one that's in the seat with ye
Is stranger here than you maybe.
All here hae got their fears and cares,
Add your soul unto our prayers,
Be you our angel unawares."

Dr. John Balcom Shaw, pastor Second Presbyterian Church, Chicago, conducts each Sunday a "congregational" Bible class immediately at the close of the morning service, and directly in front of the pulpit. Under the general heading of "Great Questions Answered," the following topics have been discussed, the last five, however, being for the present month:

Is there a God?

(The arguments for believing that there is.)

Is God a person or a force?

(Modern heresy upon the subject and how it may be refuted.)

Has God a plan for each life?

(The questions of divine sovereignty and predestination.)

Does God send trouble?

(Or does it happen? Or does Satan bring it?)

Was Christ divine?

(Or merely the noblest manhood?)

How may we have the baptism of the Spirit?

(Modern fallacies corrected and ancient misconceptions removed.)

Is the Bible inspired?

(If so, how and to what extent?)

Was the Church God-ordained?

(Or should we look for a higher order?)

If a man die, shall he live again?

(Or is he annihilated?)

Where and what is heaven?

(The theories enumerated and sifted.)

Had Christ a virgin birth?

(Or came He into the world like other men?)

Will Jesus come again, and when?

(Different views of the Second Advent presented and tested.)

BOOK NOTICES

Any book favorably mentioned below may be secured at price named from the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 826 La Salle Avenue, Chicago.

"Peloubet's Select Notes on the International Lessons for 1912," by F. N. Peloubet and Amos R. Wells.

This volume maintains the high standard of its thirty-seven predecessors and one cannot say anything higher by way of commendation. It is, to our mind, the sanest, safest and most helpful of all the annual lesson helps. Teachers will find in it exposition, quotation, archaeological news, catchy illustration and practical application, suitable for use in any grade.

"Tarbell's Teachers' Guide to the International Sunday School Lessons," by Martha Tarbell, Ph. D.

To those who have read Miss "Tarbell's Teachers' Guide to the International Sunday-school Lessons" during the former years, no word of commendation of her book will be needed. They all have found it to be an indispensable help in the teaching of the Sunday-school lesson. The volume for 1912 maintains the reputation of the work for excellency. Its exposition of the text, its illustrations, its suggestive thoughts and topics emphasizing the fundamental lessons of life, are excellent. A Sunday-school teacher's library is incomplete without this book.

"The Missionary Calendar for 1912," compiled by A. W. Roffe.

The helpful features of this calendar, now an annual issue, are found not in the dates alone, but especially in the missionary intelligence and inspiration which it promotes in brief, pithy sayings of well-known leaders in mission work, also in concise statements of missionary "facts," and quotations from Scripture—one for every day in the year. 12 pages and cover, 12 x 17 inches, with tinned mounting and cord for hanging. A. W. Roffe, Toronto, Ont. 35 cents. W. N.

"The Prophet Isaiah," a complete analysis of the Vision of Isaiah, with annotations by A. C. Gaebelein, Editor of Our Hope.

This is No. 1 in the new Bible Study Course advertised on page 247 of this issue. We had no idea that so much could be crowded into one pamphlet of about 60 pages, but to our grateful surprise the analysis covers the whole book. And it is more than an analysis, there is a good deal of commentary and exposition in it. We have not been able as yet to read it through, but knowing the author as we do, we venture to say it is the best thing of the kind to be had today on that remarkable prophet. So often are we asked to recommend a commentary on Isaiah, and hesitate in replying because we know of none that deals with the book dispensationally. But this defect, a most serious one indeed, is met by Mr. Gaebelein. We wish his little work were five times as large, and yet a merit in this case is the price at which it can be bought. We strongly recommend it to Bible students.

"Learning to Love," by J. R. Miller.

This is a helpful, sympathetic exposition and application of Paul's wonderful chapter on Love (1 Cor. 13), written in Dr. Miller's well known style. It is issued in large type, dainty binding, and illustrated in colors, all together making it a very suitable gift book.

"God's Oath: A Study of An Unfulfilled Promise of God," by Ford C. Ottman.

The subject of this study is found in 2 Samuel 7:16. The history of Israel is traced from the promise to the collapse of the Kingdom of Judah, then through the period when the only ray of light was the hope of the coming Messiah, then through the incarnation, the rejection by the Jews, the glorification in resurrection, ascension to heaven, where Jesus now sits awaiting the times of restitution. The chapter on restitution is timely as it meets an insidious error of Russellism, the author's claim being that the restitution only applies to Israel. With most dispensational writers Dr. Ottman believes that the period between the final rejection of the king at the stoning of Stephen and the rapture is a parenthesis in Israelitish history, that history to be resumed when the promise is realized.

The chapter on the Jewish problem is based on the latest information with respect to the present condition of the Jews, the discussion as to the possibility of a great empire in the territory involved in the original promise being very satisfactory.

The book as a whole is a valuable contribution to the integrity and unity of the Scriptures, provided that the promise considered applies to the Jewish people as such, which an increasing number of Bible students believe.

"Revival Sermons," by J. Wilbur Chapman.

This is a collection of eighteen of Dr. Chapman's most recent revival sermons, not having appeared in book form previously.

Dr. Chapman, a master in revival sermon building, is not tied to conventionalism. Some of the sermons are entitled in a way that is catchy, "Castoff because—," "God's Ex-Rays," or "A Life Made Over," being samples. But there are sermons with the old evangelical titles such as "Regeneration," "Repentance," and "The Soul's Anxious Inquiry."

The appeal often marked in Dr. Chapman's preaching is not lost in print, and those who have heard any of the sermons will be glad that they are in permanent form. The volume is of special value to the young evangelistic preacher.

"The Measure of a Man," by Norman Duncan.

This "Tale of the Big Woods" follows the trail blazed by Ralph Connor in "Black Rock." There is nothing very new or striking in the story, except the amount of profanity and slangy talk about God, in which it surpasses anything of its class that we have read. Of course, the author would say that his characters are true to life, or, perhaps, that he had toned them down to make them presentable. This is probably quite true. But has a man any right to place in the hands of his daughter or wife a book reeking with such profanity as he would not allow them to listen to? If a man would not take his daughter or wife into such an environment as this story depicts, has he any right to bring it to them, even in book form? Must we know the "levee" and the "red light district" and the "barrel house" with all their filthiness? Is such a proceeding sensible? Was Paul all wrong in desiring that we might be simple concerning evil? Most of us have enough sin in our own makeup to handicap us in our fight with the devil, without feeding at his garbage pail.

The best part of the story is the conversion of the hero, and this Mr. Duncan has told far more helpfully in a recent number of "The Century" under the title, "The Regenerate." Having read the article before reading the book, one man is sorry to have dulled the helpful memories of the former by reading the latter.

"The Buried Nations of the Infant Dead: A Study in Eschatology," by H. B. Pratt.

We can heartily recommend this book to parents bereft of their infant children, as one which will bring them comfort, and greatly broaden their thought of the future life. It is to be expected that such a theme, even with the Bible in hand, would give rise to speculation, but that of the author is not wild or careless, but reverent and chastened by the desire to keep as nearly as possible to a scholarly interpretation of Holy Writ.

Mr. Pratt holds clearly the pre-millennial coming of Christ, but is confused, we think, as to the distinction between the millennial age and that following it. However, that is not a fatal defect in his book. His deductions are that, consequent on the fall, God planned to re-people the earth with a redeemed race which will consist of two great divisions. The first is the adults of all the dispensations who have died in the faith of God, and the second, the incomparably greater number of the little ones who died before the age of accountability.

The conception is beautiful and consoling, and if the Scripture proof is not incontestable, it is at least difficult to say that it is not true.

"Billy Bray, D. L. Moody, Duncan Matheson," by William H. Harding.

These are very readable, though very brief biographies, being Nos. 1, 5, 6 of a Revival Series. They are well written for the purpose in view, which is to set the reader thinking on the importance of salvation for himself and his fellows in order that he may be stirred into action. If they do this, or even arouse the reader's interest so that he will want to read a more complete biography of these God-sent men, they will amply justify their publication.

"Social Christianity. The Gospel for an Age of Social Strain," by Charles Reed Zahniser, Ph. D.

This is the most interesting and helpful book of the kind that has come into our hands. It is loyal to the Bible and the Gospel of Jesus Christ, while sincerely and intelligently sympathetic with the toiler, whether considered as in Christ or apart from Him. One or two expressions it contains raised a question in our minds, but correspondence with the author satisfied us as to the sense in which they were applied. We can cordially recommend it to pastors and Christian laymen alike, who desire to be informed on the causes of the social strain of these days, and the best way of dealing with it from the point of view of the Church of Christ.

"Children's Story-Sermons," by Hugh T. Kerr.

"The proof of the pudding is in the eating" and judged by this standard Dr. Kerr's book is a good one, for it is composed of eighty-two story-sermons that have been highly enjoyed by the boys and girls of the Fullerton Avenue Presbyterian Church, Chicago, of which the author is pastor.

The stories are short, and almost any of them can be read aloud in five minutes, or less. They are drawn from history, mythology, the daily newspapers, biography, and fiction. They are all interesting, and the author always makes a plain, sensible, evangelical application of them. The Gospel and related truths are presented in a manner well calculated to help our boys and girls.

We wish more preachers would adopt Dr. Kerr's plan and remember the children in their audiences. Parents, Sunday-school teachers, and others dealing with children, will find the book very useful.

"Orientalism in Bible Lands," by Edwin Wilbur Rice.

The author of this helpful book is well known to a large circle of Bible loving readers through his "Commentaries on the Gospels and the Acts," "People's Dictionary of the Bible," and "Our Sixty-six Sacred Books."

The sub-title of the volume under review reads: "Giving Light from Customs, Habits, Manners, Imagery, Thought and Life in the East for Bible Students," and this is a good, and correct, summing up of its thirty-seven interesting chapters. Among the topics treated are: The oriental family, betrothals, marriage processions, marriage feasts, the households, children, education, oriental women, social intercourse, neighbors, kinsmen, salutations, eating and meals, dress and ornaments, disease and medicine, dwellings, religion and morals, prayers and vows, offerings and sacrifices.

The wide range of authorities cited, the number of well-printed half-tones reproduced from actual photographs, the arrangement and titles of the chapters, the simple and practical language of the descriptions, the application of the description to the Bible text, the convenient table of contents and index, all go to produce just such a book as thousands of Sunday-school teachers will welcome as a real lesson help. Every Bible student, Sunday-school teacher or not, will find the book worth keeping beside the Bible, so that it can be readily consulted for information along the lines indicated.

"A Prayer Before the Lesson," by Philip E. Howard.

One of the great needs of the day is that we revamp our religious phraseology. We have so long used some of our religious expressions that they make no impression whatever upon calloused minds. This is particularly true of public prayer. To attract attention and to direct thought we do not have to resort to fantastic phrases or vulgar slang. Mr. Howard has done us a real service in putting before us examples of prayer, earnest, definite, brief, in the most choice language. For those not accustomed to lead in public prayer and for those who appreciate the dignity and importance of this service and are earnestly desirous of improving their public prayers, this book is invaluable. It contains 153 prayers each bearing upon some subject as set forth in a particular scriptural reference.

"The Book of Courage," by W. J. Dawson.

The name of the author of these essays is a sufficient guaranty that they are charmingly written. The tone of the essays is highly optimistic in the style of the new optimism that shuts its eyes to certain ugly facts. Such optimism, however, has at least a temporary value.

Mr. Dawson is so sure of his readers' interest that he does not write sensational titles over his essays and is willing that his essays should bear very commonplace titles. He says old things far better than most others, and says some new things.

We are not pleased to have Jesus put in the same category with Gantama, a linking of the founder of Christianity with the founder of an anti-Christian religion. As Mr. Dawson is really a poet, poetic license may be an amelioration of some doctrinal offences.

"Life Worth While," by Frederick A. Atkins.

This is a fine collection of seven spicily written talks designed for young men. "Building a Career," "The Young Man and the Church," and "Religion That Works" indicate the subjects treated. The little volume is healthfully stimulating and young men should read it.

"The Beauty of Self-Control," by J. R. Miller.

To not many men has God given the knack of speaking to the hearts of his fellows as He has given to Dr. Miller, and this new book is one of the best from his busy pen. In an introductory word he says: "A good many of us need to be cheered and encouraged in order that we may do our best in duty and struggle. We can do nothing better in life than to be encouragers of others and helpers in little ways as we go on our pilgrimage." This indicates the spirit that runs through the book, the first chapter of which supplies the title for the whole volume. Some other chapter titles are: "The Work of the Plow," "Finding Our Duties," "The Indispensable Christ," "What About Bad Temper?" "What Christ's Friendship Means," "What Christ Means to Me," "People as Means of Grace," "Our Unanswered Prayers." The book cannot fail to give the reader a lift upward.

"The School of the Church, Its Pre-eminent Place and Claim," by J. M. Frost, D. D.

A sane, strong presentation of this great agency of the church by one who speaks with authority. Dr. Frost has devoted years of work as Secretary of the Southern Baptist Convention; he deals with his subject logically and with no uncertain meaning.

The book shows careful preparation and a wide knowledge of the history, development, and present status of Sunday-school work. His discussion of the teacher, his preparation, life, work, etc., is strong, and his defense and comparison of the teaching with that of the public schools is timely. He, however, advocates all that any consecrated pedagogue would demand.

Dr. Frost intelligently presents the pastor's relation to the Sunday-school. There is a constant succession of strong phrases like the following: "The teacher who is dumb before his class concerning the cross or has uncertain words concerning the empty sepulchre is but sounding brass."

The book will provoke thought and perhaps discussion, but deserves careful reading, and should commend itself to all thoughtful Sunday-school workers.

"The Shadow," by Harold Begbie.

The readers of "Twice Born Men" and "Souls in Action," will enjoy this volume of fiction from the same author.

A young widow, poor, with wealth within reach, and yet for principle choosing poverty; her son, an artist, lacking his mother's simple faith in God, and only coming into it through temptation and suffering; a sweet young girl who also suffers and triumphs; and a gentle-souled old parish clergyman who knows what it is to abide "under the shadow of the Almighty," are the most important characters and they grip and hold the reader's attention.

The closing words, put in the mouth of the old clergyman, will express the truth the author wishes to set forth:

"This learned I from the shadow of a tree
That to and fro did sway upon a wall,
Our shadow selves, our influence, may fall
Where we can never be."

It is not a great book, but it is a good book that should prove helpful to every reader.

"Truths that Abide," by W. W. Dawley.

This is a theological "compend" for young people. It discusses the principal fundamental doctrines but in a popular, untechnical way. A "quiz" and suggestions for "topics for further study" follow each chapter. The author is candid, presenting, for instance, the several prevailing views regarding "the last things"—the second coming of Christ, etc.

There is need that the young people of the church be wisely instructed as to the leading truths of God's Word. "Truths that Abide," may help in this respect.

"Temptation," by Philip E. Howard.

This book of pocket size brings together a series of articles that have appeared editorially in the Sunday School Times.

In defining its subject it emphasizes the fact that every temptation is a test, and that it is never trivial. One of the most helpful chapters is on "The Peril of Careless Thinking," which sets forth the necessity of having the mental processes always well in hand if the enemy is to be successfully met. Some particular phases of temptation are discussed, also the proper attitude of the Christian toward it. The closing chapter shows the way of victory, not through Christ's teachings or example, but through His living in the believer.

The book is interestingly written, and will be of positive assistance to many a sorely tried follower of the Lord.

This book will be a regular God-send to chairmen of social committees, Bible-class teachers, and pastors, who are wondering what they can do to care for the social side of their work. It treats, and treats well, of socials, money-raising plans, missionary meetings, methods of church work, work among boys and girls. The plans presented have been tried and proved. Thousands of persons, especially in the Middle West, need no personal introduction to Mrs. Cooke, or "Auntie Cooke," as many know her. Mrs. Cooke's simple, earnest and consecrated life has commended her to a very wide circle of Christian workers. The book was written and published at the urgent request of friends. There are twenty-six chapters and a number of half-tone illustrations of Christian workers with whom at one time or another Mrs. Cooke was associated.

"The Heart of the Bible," edited by Ella Broadus Robertson.

We have been hesitant in approving any form of "abridged" Bible, but here is one which, for the purpose intended, we feel drawn towards.

There may be several valid reasons why the average child should not be expected to read all parts of the complete Bible.

We like "The Heart of the Bible" because (1) the selection of matter is comprehensive—covering the entire general scope of the Bible; (2) the readings are connected and well headed; (3) the American Standard Revised text is used (at times necessarily condensed to give vividness and brevity to the narrative); (4) the type is of a large, clear face, making the reading a delight.

"Modern Church Brotherhoods," by William B. Patterson.

This book is opportune for it will help to vitalize many a moribund organization of men known as a Brotherhood. The Brotherhood movement has thus far failed to find itself or to produce an outstanding effect. This book is at once a rebuke and an inspiration; a rebuke in revealing the need of special work for men, an inspiration in its account of what has been accomplished.

The book reviews the history of church brotherhoods, explains the denominational expression of the movement, and illustrates the practical working out of the Brotherhood idea with an abundance of concrete examples. Ignorance of plan or practice with such a book available, is inexcusable.

GLEANINGS FROM THE MAIL.

"W. L. Walker and I are in the midst of a gracious meeting here (Memphis, Tenn.), at the First Baptist Church. It is a beautiful building, well furnished, and seats 1,500 people. Dr. A. C. Dixon held a meeting in this same church eighteen months ago. We go from here to Columbia, Ala." —E. L. Woelslagel.

"My work this winter, from Nov. 12 to May 1, will be with Evangelist Neil McQuarrie on the east coast of Florida, with the Florida Gospel Navy."—A. H. Clark.

"Mrs. Blankenship (formerly Miss Mildred Church) and I are employed by the Home Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention and travel with H. R. Holcomb of Mississippi. We are in a great meeting here (Washington, N. C.). Our street meetings are reaching a class that none of the churches here seem to have an interest in."—J. L. Blankenship.

"We are in the midst of a glorious revival here (Middlebury, Ind.). An old-time revival is in full swing. The stores are closed each night and the business men attend the meetings. We cannot accommodate all the people. There were over sixty bright conversions the past week. We will open for a month's campaign next Sunday at the First M. E. Church, Richmond, Ind." —H. D. Kennedy.

"I am now in my third meeting since I left Arvada, Colo., on Sept. 6. At Lebo, Kan., and Grove City, Ill., God was pleased to pour out His Spirit upon us. The churches were revived and souls were saved, praise His dear name. I started the meeting here (Cadwell, Ill.), Oct. 29."—G. A. DeFlone.

"Since graduating from the Institute in August I have been in evangelistic work and have had some blessed revivals. At both Dallas and Clio, Ia., I had E. C. James as my singer. Since coming to Colorado I have been alone. I expect my future work to be largely in those two states."—Charles R. Goff.

A report received Nov. 5 stated that the results of the campaign of French E. Oliver and party at Sidney, O., were 1,859 conversions. The meetings continued for several weeks.

"We have just closed a splendid meeting at Columbus City, Ia., where all the churches united in a revival meeting. This meeting was said to have been the greatest evangelistic effort in the history of the town. Whole families were won to Christ. Many precious souls were won for the Master. One hundred entered a soul winners' league."—A. H. Griffith.

F. M. Warren, pastor of the First Christian Church, Deepwater, Mo., writes: "Evangelist Charles Hadden Bloom, of Elmira, N. Y., commenced a revival here Oct. 22. Although we are using the largest building in town, it is inadequate to accommodate the crowds. A company of men will proceed to build a temporary tabernacle at once."

B. F. Campbell, assisted by C. D. Pewterbaugh, conducted a ten days meeting at Liberty Valley, Pa., early in October. Twenty-five conversions were reported.

"The work in Pittsburg closed Oct. 22, and I am glad to say the Lord blessed our efforts there. We will have a meeting at Wolverine, Mich., until Nov. 20."—John W. Erskine.

"Just closed a short eight-day meeting at Oakland, Kan. Twenty conversions so far. Twenty-two added to church, and church revived."—John H. Fazel.

Clifton Powers, formerly employed in the field of evangelistic singing, will supply the pulpit during the present winter for the First Baptist Church at Bar Harbor, Me. He will also take some studies in the Bangor Theological Seminary.

"Just reached here (Athens, Pa.), to begin meetings tonight in M. E. Church. We closed a three weeks service in Brooklyn, N. Y., last night and the church was gloriously revived. There were some decisions for Christ."—Benjamin Franklin Butts.

"We closed a meeting at Stronghurst, Ill., Sunday, Nov. 12. Had favorable weather, good interest and attendance and a considerable number of conversions. We began a meeting in the M. E. Church at Farmington, Ill., Nov. 19. The time intervening I spent at Stronghurst assisting in meetings at a country church four miles out."—A. E. Laraway.

J. DIMMICK TAYLOR TO ENGAGE IN EVANGELISTIC WORK AGAIN.

J. Dimmick Taylor, who for some time has been pastor of the First Baptist Church at Gardena, Cal., has resigned his charge to re-engage in evangelistic work. His first engagement will be at San Diego, Cal. Mr. Taylor is a member of the Interdenominational Association of Evangelists, and is open for engagements for this season.

CHAS. CULLEN SMITH AT MINNEAPOLIS, KAN.

During the month of October Chas. Cullen Smith and C. S. Colburn conducted a union tent campaign at Minneapolis, Kan. No such meeting had been held in the town for years, owing to lack of harmony among the churches, and for the first two weeks it was necessary to "work" with that in view. The pastors express the result in a voluntary letter by saying: "The prejudice against such campaigns was broken down, and the religious forces united as never before. The results were excellent. The Christians have been revived and the spiritual life of the community deepened and many have decided for Christ." Among the converts was a man 83 years old, who took his first stand for Christ. By some it was said to be the greatest campaign in the history of Ottawa county.

G. W. LEWIS AT ASHLAND, O.

George W. Lewis, of Ashland, O., is being assisted this season by Mr. and Mrs. Alva R. Willgus. On Oct. 15 they conducted a meeting in the Evangelical Church, which was crowded, many being unable to gain admission.

GIPSY SMITH IN SEATTLE.

Gipsy Smith closed the first week of his mission in Seattle with a rousing singing meeting. The Mammoth rink would not hold the crowds that thronged to hear him. Those who went home in groups sang on the street cars at the request of the evangelist. The attendance for the first week was 60,000.

"I should like to lead 5,000 or 10,000 Christians singing through the streets of Seattle," said Gipsy Smith. "How many of you will follow me?" Four thousand hands were in the air instantly. "Thank you," answered the evangelist. "I shall call on you before I leave this city."

Gipsy Smith paid a tribute to Rev. Ralph Atkinson, pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church, who conducted the singing. Under his leadership the audiences, which comprised more than 6,000 persons nightly, sung until the roof beams in the rink vibrated with the sound.

M. F. HAM IN WICHITA FALLS, TEX.

M. F. Ham conducted a series of meetings at Wichita Falls, Tex., during November, with good results. There were many conversions. The sermon that seemed to bring conviction to the greatest number was on the reference of the Lord to the rich man and Lazarus. Mr. Ham said that ordinarily those who questioned the existence of a hell could be placed in one of three classes: Those living in sin who knew if there was one they were going to it; those who had loved ones to die without Christ and were hoping they were happy; and professed Christians who had little conviction of the enormity of sin.

JOHN S. HAMILTON AT MT. PLEASANT, IA.

John S. Hamilton and party recently closed a meeting of unusual power at Mt Pleasant, Ia. The meetings were held in a large tabernacle. Despite the three weeks of bad weather out of the four, the results were very gratifying. There were several hundred decisions for the Master. Many backsliders were restored, scores of family altars were erected, and the spiritual tone of the city and community was lifted.

Among the converts was a man who is a very clever sculptor. Ten days after his conversion, at one of the men's meetings, he told the story of his life and conversion. So impressed were the men by his story that a purse of more than $200 was raised to send him to the Moody Bible Institute, to prepare him for Gospel work.

LOCKETT ADAIR IN ARDMORE, OKLA.

What proved to be one of the best meetings in the experience of Ardmore, Okla., was held during October under the leadership of Lockett Adair. Charles C. Weith, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, said: "While the large tabernacle was under construction many wondered whether the people would ever fill more than half the space. From the opening night, when more than four thousand were present and more than a thousand stood, this question has been answered. Ardmore's religious spirit has been awakened as never before. This religious spirit seems to have become a town spirit and there are very few who have not been in attendance at some time during the progress of the meetings. Although at the height of the cotton season and brisk business, yet our citizenship has had time to turn aside and listen. A prayer meeting, held in a business house every afternoon during the busy hours, well attended by business men, was a sight daily witnessed during the meetings. Added to this were cottage prayer meetings in all parts of the city and well attended by our women. These things answer, better than any argument, the question: 'Is religion declining?' When a whole city can be so awakened, we expect to see churches and church members enthused and many wandering ones brought back to the Kingdom. Yes, these meetings were the best that ever came to Ardmore. They have enabled us to see real values and to cause us to shout with Israel of old, 'The Lord, He is God!' These meetings will lighten the load of every pastor, for they have developed a large number of willing and efficient helpers. Every church in the city is greatly strengthened and every Christian has received new inspiration and courage."

THE CRABILL MEETINGS.

"We have conducted tabernacle meetings in Manlius, N. Y., Fair Haven, N. Y., Pulaski, N. Y., since June. The meetings have been highly successful in reaching souls. We finished at Pulaski, Oct. 31, what was said to be the most successful evangelistic campaign in the history of the place. The converts numbered 420. Men came from all walks of life. One of the leading physicians was among the number, also one of the leading horticulturists of northern New York. The meetings closed there with great enthusiasm. Never have I seen greater personal effort to win men than was displayed in the closing days of the campaign. We are in what promises to be a good meeting here at Phoenix, N. Y., in a fine tabernacle. Our next field will be Moravia, N. Y."—Ernest G. Crabill.

E. R. HERMISTON IN GOLDENDALE, WASH.

"We have had a great revival at this place and over fifty have been converted. Backsliders have been reclaimed and many very hardened sinners have turned to God. The largest building was too small for the crowds, so we had to have overflow meetings. The Christian people are on fire for the salvation of the lost and the entire community is being stirred. Pray that the good work may continue."—E. R. Hermiston.

THE CARLETON AND FAUST CAMPAIGN AT DODGE CENTER, MINN.

The Carleton and Faust evangelistic campaign at Dodge Center, Minn., closed Sunday evening, Nov. 5. In spite of rain, crowds were good, and at times taxed the capacity of the hall. Altogether about 160 people were at the altar, some forty of whom were already members. On Sunday evening, Oct. 29, fifty-four persons were at the altar. Young men and women in the flower of their manhood and womanhood, prominent business men, some aged ones seeking Christ for the first time. The whole town and community were stirred, backsliders reclaimed, members quickened into new life, Christians who had before been silent in the churches were taught to pray and do personal work. The Bible teachings upon tithing were preached. A factor of the campaign were the solos and chorus choir lead by Charles Edward Faust, of Chicago.

BEADLES-FISCHER PARTY AT RUSHVILLE, ILL.

Six hundred and ten conversions were reported at the revival meetings conducted by the Beadles-Fischer party in Rushville, Ill., during October. The last Sunday afternoon of the meetings was the record breaker, when Mr. Beadles spoke on the subject, "Booze." He appealed to the voters to vote out the saloons at the election just about to be held. The results of the work were very satisfactory to the pastors and plans were made to help the new convert. "The total results of the five and a half weeks of meetings have surpassed the hopes of the most sanguine," said the Rushville Times, in commenting on the meetings. "Many prophesied nothing great in religious life could take place in Rushville, but our community has had a vivid illustration of the power of united prayer and Gospel preaching in overcoming sin and apathy."

R. A. TORREY IN BRISTOL, ENGLAND.

Lamb's Hotel, Dundee, Scotland, Oct. 17. —We closed our Bristol mission Sunday night, Oct. 15. From the beginning to the close of the mission the tide rose constantly and thousands of people are rejoicing in having found Christ as their Saviour, or in being brought to know Him and to love Him as they have never known Him and loved Him before. The mission began Sunday morning, Sept. 24, with a meeting for workers at 9 o'clock. At that early hour hundreds of Christians had gathered from all parts of Bristol. These meetings were kept up for three weeks with an increasing interest and attendance. Though, of course, they were not so largely attended as the meetings of the afternoon and night, nevertheless many thought they were the most important meetings of the mission. Certainly God was present in a wonderful way and hundreds of professing Christians, many of them active workers for years.

have gone to work for their Master with a new enthusiasm and understanding of how to do effective work. These morning meetings were followed up by Mr. Jacoby with a class every night in the smaller Colston Hall from 7 until 7:30, just preceding the meetings held in the larger hall. Mr. Jacoby's meetings increased in attendance, interest and power from the very start. The people loved him in Bristol just as they have everywhere else we have gone, and did not want him to go, and he already has had invitations to go back again. Even the most experienced workers testify that they have received great help on the use of the Bible in personal work from his instruction.

Meetings were held Sunday afternoons at 3 o'clock and at night at 8 o'clock. It was aimed to have them at 8 o'clock after the evening services in the churches were over, but the hall would be full long before that hour, so on the second Sunday we began at 6:45, and the third Sunday at 6:30. It was necessary then to have an overflow meeting in the smaller hall and many hundreds were outside at 7 o'clock after the filling of the two halls. The last Sunday we did not dare to have but one evening meeting, as we knew the crush in the street would be great, and perhaps dangerous. So we held a meeting at 3 o'clock, another at 6:15, and another at 8 o'clock. The people were told that any one who came to the 6:15 meeting could not attend the 8 o'clock meeting. The hall was packed long before 6:15 and others were clamoring for admission, but the doors were shut and an open-air meeting held. When this meeting came to a close, the people were dismissed through doors on one side of the building and the other crowd admitted from another street when the last one had been sent out. The police sent in word that the crowd outside waiting to get in when the first meeting should be dismissed was dangerous and they took charge of the way in which the people should be admitted, first to the top gallery through a separate entrance. The building was soon filled again and crowds were still clamoring for entrance. It was too late to hold a third meeting that night, so meetings were held in the open air for those who could not get in. The Colston Hall will comfortably accommodate 3,500, but sometimes 4,000 were packed into it, many standing.

There had not been the preparation for these meetings that there had been for our first mission in Bristol seven years ago. It came immediately after the summer holidays and the most prominent workers were out of the city, so it was necessary from the very beginning to stir the people up to prayer and to work. But God laid upon many a burden of prayer for the city and He has abundantly answered these prayers.

On most week days three meetings were held—one at 1.10 for business people. In Bristol, we always admit women as well as men to the business meetings, because there are so many women employed in the heart of the city. The second meeting was at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. This was given up to the study of the Word of God, considering its teaching concerning prayer and the Holy Spirit. The third meeting began at 8 o'clock and was preceded by a half hour's song service. This meeting was evangelistic in character. We took Friday for our rest day and on two of the Saturday afternoons at 3 o'clock had a meeting for children. At the first meeting the children more than packed the hall. It was estimated there were 5,000 children in the building. God blessed the Word to them and a great many professed to accept Jesus Christ. Those who dealt with them personally said that many of them were very clear and intelligent in the stand that they took.

Mr. Jacoby also held three meetings for the children in the George Mueller's Orphanage, and a large number professed to accept Jesus as their Saviour. Mr. Jacoby and Mr. Parsons also held meetings in the shops, which were attended by thousands—in fact, he had 1,000 at one, in Fry's Cocoa works.

One of the most fruitful meetings was that on the last Sunday night, when Mr. Jacoby told the story of his life. The floor of the Colston Hall was reserved for men. The building was packed to its utmost capacity and many could not get in. Mr. Jacoby spoke for more than an hour and held the whole audience spell-bound. Many men came to the front to accept Christ and a large number of others went into the inquiry room.

One of the most encouraging things about the Bristol mission was the number of people who came to me or wrote to me about having accepted Christ at our former mission in this city. I have not yet received the report of the exact number of those who have made a public profession of accepting Christ at these meetings and who were recorded. I think it will be somewhere in the neighborhood of 1,200.

The interest was at great height and it is impossible to say what might have been accomplished if we could have remained another week, but we had promised to begin in Dundee a day and a half after closing at Bristol and we had only time enough to take the train early Monday morning to get here in time for the meetings. We shall hold our first meeting here this afternoon. We shall be here but two weeks and a day, but everything seems to be thoroughly prepared and we are looking to God for great things.

Sincerely yours,

R. A. Torrey.

DR. TORREY IN DUNDEE.

Dr. Torrey writes en route from Dundee, Scotland, to Cambridge, England, that the mission at the former place was a time of remarkable interest, which he attributes in large measure to the prayerful preparation for it. He speaks of a daily prayer meeting which began in that city with Mr. Moody's mission there some thirty years ago.

There were conversions from the outset—four meetings a day being held on many of the week days. On Sundays it was necessary to divide the audiences, having women only in the afternoon, and men only at night. The mission was under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., but supported by ministers of the various denominations.

A very interesting feature of the mission was the meeting with those who were converted eight years previously at the earlier mission held in the same city by Dr. Torrey and Mr. Alexander. Some of these were children then who have remained true to the Lord and are now active in the work of the churches.

While between seven and eight hundred were converted, it is the thought of many that the best part of the present work was the deepening of the life of Christian people and the encouragement they received for definite service.

It is regretted that our space prevents the publication of many interesting details of the work, including the stories of remarkable conversions of men and women, rich and poor, high and low. One was a professional gambler who gave up his livelihood for Christ. Two sons and two daughters in one minister's family were converted. Two sons of one family. Seven fallen women, inmates of a rescue home. A man who had been a bartender for twenty years. There were many similar cases.

Dr. Torrey asks for prayer that the work in Dundee may continue and that there may be a great revival throughout all the churches.

TOPICS FOR THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

they may be truly spiritual, and have a high spiritual aim. For all elementary and secondary school teachers, that they may be true Christian men and women, and faithful to the spiritual side of their stewardship. For the continuance of Bible teaching in all schools, and that the spiritual book be spiritually taught. For all the teachers and students in universities and colleges, that the ethical and spiritual side of culture may be there emphasized, and the pure doctrines of the gospel be taught.

HOME MISSIONS AND THE JEWS.

Prayer that Christians may more widely recognize that Christ has given one commission, and that there is an organic union between the home and foreign branches of His church. That all forms of social work among the people may be kept on true spiritual lines. That Christian men and women may see it to be their duty to seek the restoration of those who have fallen, and to bring them to Christ and His worship. For missionary work among the Jews of all lands. That the persecution of Christ's kindred after the flesh, by those who are called by Christ's name, may speedily cease. That the gathering in of Jews to Christ and His church one by one may go on, and that the church may cleave to the Lord's great promises concerning their conversion as a race in the future. That governments may be moved to take up the Jewish question, and devise means to open the lands of their forefathers to Jewish colonization. While we pray for all work that seeks to brighten dark lives, let us especially pray that all Christian workers may see that real rescue work means regeneration.

SCRIPTURE READINGS.

Psalms 126; Gen. 12:1-3; John 1:35-51; Rom. 11:25-31.

RESCUE MISSIONS AND THEIR WORK

NATIONAL BIBLE INSTITUTE MISSIONS,

New York City.

The four Gospel Halls conducted in New York City by the National Bible Institute, of 156 Fifth Avenue, were all carrying on a vigorous evangelistic campaign during the summer months. The combination of outdoor and indoor work, which was put into operation this year, kept the interest in the work at high pitch, filled the different halls, and brought many to the foot of the Cross.

During the vacation of John Hollis, the superintendency of the Mission of the Living Waters, 344 Bowery, was placed in the hands of William McQuere, who at present is a student in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.

The Manhattan Gospel Hall, 111 Manhattan Street, although founded but a couple of years ago, was very successful in its work throughout the summer. Robert M. Hay is the superintendent.

SUNSHINE RESCUE MISSION IN LOS ANGELES.

The Sunshine Rescue Mission is the name of a new mission recently opened at 120 Wilmington Street, near First, in Los Angeles, Cal. "A Lighthouse in the City of Angels" is appended to the name on the small cardboard invitations distributed in the vicinity of the mission. Meetings are held every evening at 7:30. The work is under the care of W. M. Driver.

MISSION SUNDAY IN ST. LOUIS.

On Dec. 17 Edward Card, superintendent of the St. Louis City Rescue Mission, will be assisted at the mission by Mel Trotter, U. V. Sillaway and Peter Quartel, in conducting "Mission Sunday" services. The work at this mission is increasing and a new building is needed. Mr. Card writes, "The work is great, many are coming to Christ Jesus, and thousands of the poor are hearing the Gospel in St. Louis."

"COME AND SEE,"

Said Jim Goodheart on a card invitation to the services held at the Sunshine Rescue Mission, Denver, Colo., Nov. 12. He told the story of his conversion, this being the fourth anniversary of the event.

JESUS, THE ONLY SAVIOUR.

By Farnum St. John.

Painting the pump won't sweeten the well;
Outward reform can't save you from hell.
Tying on fruit won't make the tree grow;
Doing good works can't save you from woe.

Washing the face won't cleanse the black heart;

Joining the church can't give you a start.
Mending the jug won't gather what's spilt;
Sorrow for sin can't undo your guilt.

These may be good enough in their place,
But they must follow the working of grace.

You may be saved, though, just as you are;
No one has wandered in evil too far.
Trust in the Saviour, let Him come in;
He will the work of salvation begin—
Begin and complete it and victory give;
Let Him come in, then, forever to live.

He bore your burden of guilt on the cross;
He died for you, friend, to save you from loss;

He rose again and ascended on high
To prepare us a "home with Himself by and by."

He'll give a new heart all spotless and pure;

He'll give a life that will ever endure;
He'll plant a tree that forever will grow;
He'll start a spring that will sweetly o'er-flow;

He'll give you victory over your sin!
Trust in the Saviour and let Him come in!

The Moody Bible Institute

DR. GRAY'S ENGAGEMENTS.

Besides his regular duties and engagements connected with the regular work as Dean of The Institute, Dr Gray has been absent twice within the last month in order to speak at Conferences for Bible study and exposition. The first was at Scottdale, Pa., and the last at Harrisburg, Pa. Both conferences were under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association.

THE ORDINATION OF JOHN H. HUNTER.

We are pleased to say, that just as we are going to press, Mr. Hunter has been received as a candidate for the ministry by the Presbytery of Chicago, and was examined for licensure and ordination on November 6. His unusual acquaintance with the English Bible and his long service in Y. M. C. A. and the Moody Bible Institute work were taken in lieu of a knowledge of the dead languages and the arts. His examination was confined to theology, the English Bible, church government and the sacraments, and was most heartily approved.

The following arrangement was made for the ordination in the Moody Church, with which Mr. Hunter has been connected officially for many years, the evening of November 27, by invitation. The moderator of the Presbytery, Rev. R. D. Scott, D.D., to preside and propose the constitutional questions. The opening prayer to be offered by Rev. E. G. Woolley, and the Scriptures to be read by Rev. B. B. Sutcliffe. The sermon to be preached by Rev. W. S. P. Bryan, D. D., and the ordination prayer to be made by Rev. Alexander Patterson, D.D. The charge to be given the newly ordained minister by Rev. E. P. Hill, D.D. Dr. James M. Gray will make some remarks with respect to Mr. Hunter's long service in the Moody Bible Institute. The service is to be closed with prayer by Rev. N. B. Barr, and the benediction to be given by Rev. Mr. Hunter.

GIFT TO MR. HUNTER.

Announcement has been made of the fact that Mr. John H. Hunter, Director of the Evening Department, has resigned in order to go to the Los Angeles Bible School. The members of the faculty took advantage of the opportunity afforded by the regular faculty meeting in November to present a testimonial to Mr. Hunter. Dr. Evans read the testimonial adopted by the faculty, and after the reading presented to Mr. Hunter a fitted suit-case as a slight material evidence of the affection of his fellow-workers.

Mr. Hunter was hardly in possession of his usual self-control and quiet manner, but he responded feelingly to the testimonial and in appreciation of it and the gift and of all that this signified. After Mr. Hunter's response Dr. Towner offered prayer for God's blessing upon him and upon the work which he is to undertake in Los Angeles.

C. P. MEEKER'S EVANGELISTIC WORK.

Rev. C. P. Meeker, who is in charge of the Gospel Wagon work during the summer season, is devoting his time this year to evangelistic work in smaller towns, and rural communities. In October he held meetings in Isle and Mt. Chestnut, Pa. The meetings were held in a Baptist and United Presbyterian church respectively.

The Baptist church was located in a rural district, Rev. Wm. E. Rix, a former student, being pastor. The engagement was for three weeks, and although there was much rainy weather in this time, yet the Lord's blessing was upon the work. The pastor had made good preparation for the meetings and had arranged a prayer list, and quite a number on the list confessed Christ during the meetings.

The Mt. Chestnut church is located in a village of about one hundred inhabitants. More than thirty took a public stand in the meetings and at the first communion service in the church nineteen were received into membership. Two noteworthy features of this series of meetings were the conversion of a very wicked woman and eight members of a Sunday-school class that had a praying teacher.

November 5-24 Mr. Meeker conducted meetings at Crystal, Mich., and on November 26 he began meetings at Linden, Mich.

INSTITUTE STUDENTS AT CONFERENCE.

The American Sunday School Union held its first general conference for missionaries of the central district at Silver Lake, Ohio, September 21-26. Rev. G. P. Williams, D.D., secretary of missions, Mr. E. P. Bancroft of New York City, and three ministers of Akron, Ohio, and a number of the missionaries present took part in the program.

In answer to the customary call at a Conference for those who had attended The Moody Bible Institute, nine were present, their picture was taken and is shown herewith.

Those in attendance were: A. O. Cravener, 1904, Indiana, Pa.; M. C. Currens, 1906, Johnstown, Pa.; S. F. Eastman, 1899, Uniontown, Pa.; J. E. Kirkwood, 1905, Reynoldsville, Pa.; H. O. McClaren, 1899, Bradford, Pa.; D. F. Rankin, 1896, Brownstown, Ind.; O. E. Liggett, and wife, 1910, Nashville, Ind.; P. R. Van Blarcom, 1902, Cambridge, Ohio.; Florence A. Wilson, 1899, Cleveland, Ohio.

THANKSGIVING AT THE INSTITUTE.

In accordance with its usual custom the authorities of the Institute arranged to make the day one of general home gathering, festivity and rejoicing, and everything possible was done to have the students forget that they were away from home. The following program was arranged:

- 1 p. m.—Dinner for Faculty and students.
- 3-5 p. m.—Recreation, games, musical program.
- 6-7 p. m.—Informal social hour and supper.
- 7:30 p. m.—Praise service.

A REUNION AT TERRE HAUTE, IND.

Three former students of the Institute met in reunion Friday afternoon, Oct. 13, at the home of William Lloyd Crist, Terre Haute, Ind. They were George Rockwell, who at the time was conducting the music for the Scoville evangelistic meetings, M. Massey, who is head book-keeper at the Vandalia freight office, and William Lloyd Crist, pastor of the Plymouth Congregational Church. The house was artistically decorated with dahlias and marguerites.

Refreshments were served, and the photograph shown on this page was taken as a souvenir of the reunion, which was closed with prayer for the Moody Bible Institute, its old and present students, and the Faculty.

PERSONALIA.

The former students here mentioned will deeply appreciate the prayers of our readers for God's blessing upon them and their work.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Sheldon, and Dr. and Mrs. F. J. Betts, are conducting evangelistic meetings in a rural community near Frewsburg, N. Y. They report a very busy and successful season thus far this year.

The October Number of China's Millions contains a splendid picture of Mr. Carl G. Gowman, a new missionary who sailed for China from San Francisco, and who was a member of the class that was graduated in August last.

Miss M. L. Steckel sends word from Mombasa, that she has arrived safely, and is well on her way to her missionary work in British East Africa. Since leaving the Institute Miss Steckel had been taking special training in a hospital in Chicago, and also in the Kansas State Normal College.

Rev. T. Bradley Hyde, who was a student in '91-'93, has been appointed secretary of the Toronto Bible College. He succeeds Dr. William Stewart, who has held the secretaryship for eighteen years, and is retiring because of old age.

The Seattle Post-Intelligencer of November 6, gives a half column to an account of the splendid work which was done by Rev. Ralph Atkinson, D.D., pastor of the First United Presbyterian Church of Seattle, in connection with the meetings held in that city by Gipsy Smith. The article states that the success of the campaign was due largely to the untiring work of Dr. Atkinson and today he is one of the greatest figures in the religious life of Seattle. "Seattle was prepared by him for an event which has been unique, and the success that has attended the undertaking is doubtless due in no small measure to this man." Dr. Atkinson was a student of the Institute in the 90's.

The Omineca Herald of Hazelton, B. C., gives much prominence to the work which is being done by the Y. M. C. A. for the railway workers along the banks of the Skeena river. This work is in charge of Mr. W. H. Morrison, secretary. Mr. Morrison has had erected a building in which are found many comforts of civilization. He has provided a large reading room, and in connection with the headquarters there are bath-rooms, and other things which make life pleasant and profitable for men who are employed on the railroad construction. "The weary, sick, discouraged and discontented all go to Mr. Morrison who is the mental and spiritual physician of the camps."

Mr. John A. Howe was engaged last month with Mr. Edgar in evangelistic meetings at Woonsocket, S. D., and is now at Jackson, Mich.

Rev. Elmer O. Chappel is now pastor of the Congregational church at Crockett, Cal. On Sunday, October 29, twenty-one persons were received into the fellowship of the church. The church attendance has doubled, and the attendance of the Sunday-school has increased one-third. The spirit of evangelism is being awakened, and the spirituality of the church is being deepened.

Rev. R. G. Heddon, pastor of the Congregational church at Elkader, Iowa, reports splendid work in all departments of his church. Recently he organized a Sunday-school in a school house nine miles out in the country, and preaches there every two weeks; also at another place nine miles in another direction the other Sundays of the month.

Rev. Thos. Campbell, pastor of Grace Congregational Church in Chicago, reports the church property improved and seven new members received on confession.

Rev. W. R. Marshall, pastor of the Ewing Street Congregational Church, of Chicago, reports additions to the membership on November 5, and encouraging growth in the work of the church.

Mr. W. H. Crapper has just closed a meeting near Winamac, Ind., and reports a good interest, large attendance and a goodly number of conversions.

Mr. Tadaschaige Suzuki writes that he is in charge of the church at Shiroeshitwon, Japan, having arrived there July 9, on his return from Princeton, N. J. This is a small mission in the northeast of Japan, but he feels greatly encouraged in his work.

Rev. Theodore T. Hayes, until recently pastor of Immanuel Church, Buffalo, N. Y., has accepted a call to the Presbyterian church at Byron, N. Y.

Rev. H. W. Chamberlin, superintendent of the Kalihi Settlement, Honolulu, reports that their work has outgrown the old grounds and buildings, and that during his summer vacation he raised $10,000 to purchase a new property consisting of nearly seven acres, for their settlement work. Last year they raised nearly $5,000 for running expenses.

Mr. A. H. Norum recently spent three weeks in Warren, Ill., assisting the pastor there in conducting evangelistic services.

Mr. Harold Coffin was in charge of the music in an evangelistic campaign at Evansville, Ind., but had to return to Chicago hastily, and underwent an operation for appendicitis. He is convalescent and will be ready for work again after the holidays. His place at Evansville was taken by Mr. H. Hammontree.

Mr. J. Q. Brown, assistant to Rev. H. W. Pope, was in Goshen, Ind., November 8-12, directing the music for the meetings in connection with the Men and Religion Forward Movement.

Mr. E. O. Sellers has devoted considerable time during the last month to the Men and Religion Forward Movement, having assisted in Laporte, South Bend, and Michigan City, Ind., and more recently in a two weeks campaign in Paris, Ill.

Mr. D. Vandyke of Munasa, German East Africa, writes a most interesting letter under date of June 26, concerning the progress he is making in the study of the language and in assisting the people in becoming acquainted with the teaching principles of Christianity. He says the natives are busy making sun-dried brick, of which he will use ten thousand for a house of three large rooms. The bricks are one foot long, six inches wide and four inches thick. He requests the prayers of the Institute friends on behalf of his work.

Dr. C. W. Sensibaugh is now in meetings in Richland, Iowa, and in January he goes to New London, Iowa.

Mr. Arthur L. Cannon, who is in charge of the work at Jaochaw, China, reports that they are being prospered in their work and that souls are being saved every year in their station and out-stations. They now number about 70 baptized members, besides inquirers and adherents. This is the fruit of ten or eleven years' work. He expresses his pleasure at learning that some of the students of the Institute are going out to China at this time.

Miss Rosie is taking an extended vacation. At present she is in Montreal, Canada.

We have been greatly favored this last month in a visit from Rev. Geo. Atkinson, President of Albemarle Institute, N. C. Five of our former students are associated with Mr. Atkinson in his work at Albemarle, Misses Eva Rupert, Oberia Houser, Ruth Houston, Mary Strong and Ida Wescott.

John Porter is now pastor of the Congregational church at Oleander, Cal. In a recent letter he says:

"God is blessing us in the work of our new field. There had been no additions to the church membership for one and a half years before we came, but during the first three months of our pastorate here we received eighteen into membership, ten of which united with us on confession of faith. Five young men between the ages of twenty and twenty-five went forward and expressed a desire to live the Christian life in one evening service. Three of these have united with the church. We have dismissed one by letter, so the first three months gives us a gain of seventeen."

Miss Martha Switzer sailed in November for missionary work in Korea.

Miss Cora Obert left in October to take a position in Tampa, Fla.

Misses Elizabeth and Alberta Patterson are connected with the Martha Betty School in Rome, Ga.

Miss Bertha Harris has gone to Minneapolis, Minn., as extension secretary of the Young Women's Christian Association.

Miss Muriel Cooper is now in Winnipeg, Manitoba.

Miss Lena Dunn spent a day at the Institute this month. She is engaged as Bible teacher with the Evangelist, Rev. French Oliver.

Mission study classes seeking a text book will do well to consider the use of "Christianity and Non-Christian Religions Compared," by E. A. Marshall. Specimen pages free.

"Living by Faith" is one of the most helpful booklets of recent years. Its mission is to promote faith in God and to quicken the prayer life. Read the review on page 119 of the October issue.

December, the month of D. L. Moody's decease (Dec. 22, 1899, being the exact date), will remind many of the life and work of that great man. "Early Recollections of D. L. Moody," by the late J. V.

Farwell, and published by The Bible Institute Colportage Association is full of interest to those seeking side-lights on the character and earlier activities of this honored servant of God.

"Good Tidings" (No. 19 in The Moody Colportage Library), contains choice sermons and addresses on the advent of Jesus. The authors are such well-known preachers as John McNeill, Joseph Parker, C. H. Spurgeon and T. DeWitt Talmage. Pastors, Sunday-school teachers and laymen generally need a book like this for distribution as the holiday season approaches. Price, 15 cents; eight copies for $1.00.

"The Story of Valentine Burke," Mr. Moody's well-known prison narrative, is now ready in three foreign languages—German, Italian, and Bohemian. Prices same as for the English, 6 cents a dozen, 40 cents a hundred.

Many are seeking a good tract to give unsaved business men. "A Business Man's Experience," recently published, meets this need admirably. Send stamped envelope for a sample copy.

THE GOSPEL FOR THE MINERS.

Herman W. Lambert, with headquarters at Joplin, Mo., is doing general missionary work in and around that region and reaches among other classes, the miners. He has several preaching places and outlying "stations." Of one of these he writes:

Smelter Hill is the most interesting of all my fields. It contains many mines, several large lead smelters, a plant for manufacturing white lead, red paint, etc. Many men are employed, and they are the most down-trodden class I have ever found. In poverty they far surpass the coal miners of Pennsylvania. I have watched the men before the hot smelters, working on shifts of fifteen minutes, with sweat pouring from their bodies, and keeping it up for ten hours for only $1.65 and $2.00 per day.

One strange feature is there are no unions among the men. "A union man is fired as soon as he is discovered on the job," are the words from one in authority. Of course, the men feel this and have become bitter towards employers, towards corporations and against God. One man told me, weeping, "No one cares for us poor devils, and you're getting paid or you wouldn't come over here, and I don't believe God cares either."

Into the midst of this poverty and depression comes the missionary with the Gospel in story and in printed tracts, telling of the "meek and lowly One who rests weary hearts."

Mr. Lambert asks especially that Bible "portions" and Gospel tracts be sent him for careful distribution among this neglected people.

Do you need a convenient leather tract case or "pocket" to aid you in carrying leaflets in good condition, yet ready for instant use? The Colportage Association has them for 25 cents each.

• Any one studying Old Testament history with especial reference to the kings of Judah and Israel will be profited by using some prepared slips, "Outline Biographies," as offered by the Colportage Association.

The Christian Herald for 1912

THAT famous divine, Joseph Parker, once remarked that the "front seats of his auditorium were in the Rocky Mountains and the back seats in the Himalayas." CHRISTIAN HERALD readers may say with Wesley, "The World is its Parish," for its activities literally embrace all lands. In the coming year it will set before its readers the most attractive variety of entertainment and instruction provided by any weekly magazine in the world.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, whether considered from its spiritual side or from the side of its mechanical make-up, is brighter and better than ever before, and during the coming year no pains will be spared to maintain this high standard. Every department will be conducted with the keenest appreciation of the desires of our readers to have us produce a clean weekly newspaper for the home. Our aim is to make THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the very embodiment of religious and moral uplift, and so we ask you to help us extend that influence for good until it is felt in every home in the land.

Remarkable Features for the Coming Year:

"Brander Cushing's Ambition"

By CHARLES M. SHELDON, Author of "In His Steps"

This new and powerful serial story, Brander Cushing's Ambition, is a splendid and dramatic presentation of two of the greatest of our latter-day problems. It is a story that will grip the hearts of its readers with interest and hold them fascinated to the end. There is a beautiful love story running all through it. No more thrilling serial than Brander Cushing, and no nobler characters than Sidney, his heroic son, and Pax Marston, the beautiful daughter of the Admiral, have ever appeared in modern fiction. Begun in the November 22 issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The American Pulpit

which has always been a strong feature of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, will in the coming year be represented by sermonic contributions from the leading preachers of all the Protestant denominations. The fifty-two greatest sermons of the year will appear in its pages, among the contributors being Rev. J. H. Jowett, C. M. Sheldon, Rev. C. H. Parkhurst, the Metropolitan divine; Dr. James Burrell, Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, Professor R. A. Torrey, Rev. A. C. Dixon, Bishops Quayle and Warren, J. Balcom Shaw, Charles F. Aked, C. A. Eaton, and Newell Dwight Hillis.

Stories by Famous Authors will be announced during the year, among the contributors being Wilfred Grenfell, the Arctic hero and philanthropist; Eleanor H. Porter, author of Margaret and Marco; Florence Morse Kingsley, Cyrus Townsend Brady, Susan M. Griffith, Miss E. L. Gebhard, Amelia E. Barr, Irving Bacheller, and many others.

In the Footsteps of St. Paul

Dr. Francis E. Clark, now traveling in the Orient, has undertaken to write "A Journey in the Footsteps of St. Paul," exclusively for our readers. Dr. Clark is the founder of the Christian Endeavor Society. He will visit the "Seven Churches of Asia" and will record his impressions. His articles will be finely illustrated.

Special Articles by Famous Writers will be a prominent feature for 1912. These will include Clayton Sedgwick Cooper, an authority on Bible propaganda, Professor Edgar J. Banks, Professor Mason P. Young, famous in Oriental travel; Rear-Admiral Charles D. Sigsbee of the Maine; Hon. Charles McFarland of the Federal Council of Christian America, who will write on the "Relation between the Church and Social Service"; John L. Harbour, E. Ryerson Young, son of the famous Canadian explorer, and others.

Cyrus Townsend Brady

the author of so many successful historical novels, has written for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a stirring tale of the Frontier in the days when the life of the settler hung hourly in the balance.

Our Women Contributors

Special attention will be paid to the Women's Department of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and our Contributors' Staff this year will be larger than ever before, among them being Madeline S. Bridges, Kate Upson Clark, Miss Janet Porter (who conducts the Department for the Young), and Margaret E. Sangster, the counselor of the whole CHRISTIAN HERALD Family.

Samantha at Coney Island AND A THOUSAND OTHER ISLANDS

By JOSIAH ALLEN'S WIFE (Marietta Holley)

SAMANTHA was living happily enough as Josiah Allen's wife when they returned from their trip around the world, and all might have gone as merrily as a wedding bell, had not Serenus Gowdey put the idea of Coney Island into Josiah's head. After that Josiah could talk of nothing else.

Samantha gave him catnip tea, but that didn't get the "pizen" out of his system. She planned a trip to the Thousand Islands, thinking to turn him from the subject, but Josiah would not be turned; he spoke of it day and night, and Samantha was more shocked than surprised one morning to find that he and Serenus Gowdey had run away to the great amusement city by the sea.

Of course Samantha followed him immediately. How she pursued Josiah through the mazes of the concessions, how she rode the witching waves, went on a voyage to the moon, watched the circus, looked in the magic mirrors, sank through the floor, got lost in the maze, trod the rocking steps, lectured the Head Hunters, discovered the fire, rescued the incubator babies from the flames, and finally saved her beloved "pardner," Josiah, from the jaws of the blazing lion, etc., etc., are all told graphically with humor and pathos in Samantha at Coney Island and A Thousand Other Islands. Handsomely cloth bound, illustrated, 350 pages.

SAMANTHA AT CONEY ISLAND will be sent prepaid with a year's subscription to The Christian Herald (52 issues) and our New 1912 Almanac—all for only $2.00.

Entered as Second-Class Matter Oct. 7, 1910, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under Act of March 3, 1879.

Copies of any issue of this Magazine not a double number, may be obtained in lots of five or over, at only 7 cents each, post-paid to any address in the U. S., except Chicago. Lovers of the truth are thus enabled to scatter good reading at the minimum of cost.

A year's subscription to The Christian Workers Magazine would make a very desirable Christmas gift for some friend or acquaintance—or possibly a missionary on a lonely field. Your personal card, if requested and provided, could be attached to Magazine's receipt for subscription price.

Occasionally, for some reason—and not always a valid one—a subscriber will be missed in the regular delivery of his Magazine. We greatly desire that irregularities of this kind shall be promptly reported. We will "make good."

Copies of The Christian Workers Magazine for April, 1911, are wanted at this office. For each one returned by any subscriber, we will extend his subscription for two months. Wrap copy well. Mark it "Magazine"; give your name and address clearly at corner of wrapper; direct plainly to The Christian Workers Magazine; affix a 2-cent stamp; and we will do the rest. Thank you!

And there is a moral to be deduced from the foregoing paragraph. Save your back numbers! We do not reprint former issues and persons wishing to retain valuable matter published in consecutive numbers must take "warning."

Think of the names of five friends, earnest Christians, not now receiving our Magazine but likely to subscribe after examining a specimen number. Send us these names (with addresses) and we will be pleased to mail a sample copy to each, and to yourself—our hearty thanks!

in a School that will successfully instruct you in the highest branch of knowledge. The story is told by its name

The Scofield Bible Correspondence School

The Founder and Instructor is the

of world-wide fame as Minister and Bible Teacher, and more especially known as the Editor of published by the Oxford University Press. The pictures of the author and the text-books are herewith reproduced.

The Scofield Reference Bible

This School is

1. A Correspondence School for Home Bible Study, bringing, as someone has aptly said, "A Bible Institute to Your Door." This School is not an experiment, but has been in operation for twenty years, and has thousands of students in all parts of the world, among them many ministers. Its sterling worth is attested by leading authorities, among whom are G. Campbell Morgan, F. B. Meyer, George F. Pentecost, A. T. Pierson, J. M. Gray, George Soltau, and W. G. Moorehead.
2. A Bureau of Information on any Biblical subject. What do you wish to know in relation to Scripture truth? As a member of this School you have full privilege of correspondence with Dr. Scofield, perhaps the greatest Bible Teacher of the day. Think of what such a privilege means.
3. Bible Commentary and Work of Reference of more value than any of the merely textual Commentaries to be had. This Commentary is handsomely cloth bound, in three volumes, which are interleaved for notes, and is accompanied by an Analytical Index of great value. It may be purchased alone without examination and correspondence privileges.

"Just as has been said of the making of books, so it may be said of the making of Bibles—'there is no end.' But at last a Bible has been produced which will doubtless meet with unusual favor—'The 1911 Bible.' . . . We are sure that this Bible will meet the fullest expectations."

—Moody Church Herald, September 1, 1911.

"We believe, unqualifiedly, that 'The 1911 Bible' is far the best translation ever given the English-speaking people, and the worthiest of their confidence and affection."

—The Herald and Presbyterian, September 13, 1911.

"There is no question but that this '1911 Bible' will win rapid favor from a discriminating public."

—N. Y. Observer.

"A Bible gotten out 'the Oxford Way' needs no commendation. Nevertheless this new '1911 Bible' is so striking and exceptionally well edited, planned and put up, as to make it a treasure even among Oxford Bibles for the Scholar or Student, and for household reading."

A Scottish Spiritual Leader in The Sunday School Times

It was a book of his, "The Cross in Christian Experience," that convinced The Sunday School Times that the Glasgow preacher and teacher, the Rev. W. M. Clow, B. D., has a message of rare insight and inspiring reality for every teacher and student of the Gospels.

Mr. Clow is a spiritual force in a notable group of religious leaders across the sea. His writings are exceedingly rich in evangelical motive, in the most searching appeal to the heart-life, and in their wonderfully clear revealings of the personality and work of Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord.

Mr. Clow will write the leading lesson-article for the enlarged Sunday School Times during 1912, covering the year's study in the Gospels of Matthew, Mark and Luke. The Times counts it a great privilege thus to introduce Mr. Clow to a world-wide audience of Bible teachers and adult students.

Don't Handicap the Preacher with Dead Hymns

"I wish our preacher would announce some new songs. We sing the same old hymns over and over again until we have worn them threadbare."

Ever hear anybody say that in your church?

It's a frequent expression, but the blame doesn't belong to the preacher, most of the time.

The song book you have is probably one that was compiled a number of years ago. So many of the songs are expressive of discarded ideas that no intelligent preacher or chorister would ever announce them. Nothing, therefore, remains, but to fall back on the relatively small number that are acceptable today and these few are sung over and over again until in truth they do become threadbare, and lose their inspiration.

No condition could be worse. A singing church is a live and growing church. A singing church is a power behind the preacher. Give him the encouragement that comes from singing "GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS" and you'll find him doing better work because his people are doing better work.

"GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS" is not simply a song book. It surges with the power that makes men and women the more willing to work for the souls of human kind. It is the book that Billy Sunday uses in his wonderful tabernacle meetings.

Send 25 cents for a sample copy, $1.00 for five. If the books aren't filled with the inspiration most needed in every church today, we'll buy them back.

A VALUABLE HELP ON INTL. S. S. LESSONS FOR 1912

Studies in the Life and Teachings of Our Lord

By R. A. Torrey, D. D.

Author of "What the Bible Teaches," "The Bible and Its Christ," "Difficulties of the Bible," etc.

What It Is A consecutive, systematic course of studies in our Lord's life and teachings, divided into 140 lessons, and adapted either for individual or class use.

The Plan The method is workable. It is not too laborious in quantity or in manner for the everyday Christian. It is the method of modern science: first, a discovery of the facts; then, a classification of the teachings. The facts are discovered by questions and answers. Dr. Torrey asks the questions, the student answers the questions from the open Bible.

Results No subject of Bible study is more vital, fruitful or popular than the life and teachings of our Lord. Obviously, every young convert ought immediately to get well acquainted with His person and work, while every Christian is exhorted to grow in the grace and knowledge of Him.

As a suggestive commentary on the four Gospels, it has special value, bringing together the teachings of Christ on a given subject, also awakening in the student a desire for personal Scripture research. Constant use is made of parallel passages and pertinent reference to other parts of the Bible.

"If people would read and think, this book would be as good as a course in theology. A great help to Sunday-School teachers"—Watchword and Truth.

BIRD'S-EYE BIBLE STUDY

By REV. ALEXANDER PATTERSON

Director, Presbyterian Training School, Chicago

A synopsis of all the books of the Bible, with statement as to their classification and interrelation; a summary of the broad teachings of the Scriptures, with general view of the development in the revelation of divine truth. Also suggestive chapters on "How to Study the Bible," "The Way of Salvation," "How to Win Souls to Christ," "Power in Prayer," "The Work of the Holy Spirit," etc.

Important facts and teaching points are vividly represented by several simple but comprehensive diagrams and charts.

Any person wishing to comprehend quickly the "mountain peaks" of Bible truth will find "Bird's-Eye Bible Study" an invaluable aid.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman says:

"It was at my suggestion that Dr. Patterson prepared the manuscript for this book.

"To be familiar with God's Word is the secret of a successful Christian life. It is likewise the secret of holy living. Most busy people do not study the Bible, and this, not only because they are busy, but because they are unable, on account of training or occupation, to quickly grasp the spirit of the book.

"Dr. Patterson in these pages presents the subject in such a way that a ten minutes' study each day would, in a very short time, familiarize the student with the spirit of the Bible, and once gaining a taste for it, no other literature could satisfy him."

Especially adapted for use by pastors, evangelists, Sunday-school teachers, Bible class leaders and Christian workers generally. An excellent book for broadest distribution among Christian young people of all denominations.

Editorial Notes

"And the books were opened: and another book was opened, which is the book of life: and the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books, according to their works. * * * And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." Rev. 20:12, 15.

A noted infidel said some time ago, "I do not wish to go to heaven unless I can settle by the books, and go because I ought to go there."

Cut from the Loaf. God keeps a ledger account with those who desire to settle by the books.

The text speaks of it. In other words, all who would be judged by their works will have a fair hearing before Him. Nothing is forgotten which they have done or left undone.

But it is sad to think what the result of this judgment must be in every case and without exception. The text says that "whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire," which can only mean that those who appealed to the books were found wanting in every instance. Happy the man who casts aside his own works and is willing to go to heaven on the ground of the work of Jesus Christ. It is thus only that his name is written in the Book of Life.

A solemn thought this at the beginning of the new year when so many are balancing up the world's books. Have you yet taken account of what you owe to God, confessed bankruptcy, and received a free pardon through Jesus Christ? Why not now, as you read these words?

"The camera is nothing but fair; it overlooks nothing and it can not forget." What a symbol or illustration of the judgment day, or of the eye of Him who sits upon the Remembrance judgment seat! of Sin. The sentence is quoted from an advertisement of a contemporary exploiting a photographic history of the civil war. Hundreds of photographs taken by an artist of those days, have recently been discovered in an old garret and brought at last to the light of day. They deal with an inner and human side of that struggle—the pathos, the laughter, the tragedy, the comedy of those four years. The artist penetrated the most unexpected places. Quoting the advertisement, "For many years it was thought that nobody was present at the hanging of the Lincoln conspirators except the officials, but this collection was found to contain half a dozen important pictures of these gruesome scenes. Southern soldiers, often cut off from all supplies, would have been surprised had they known that venturesome men were risking their lives to catch on glass plates the actual scenes of southern pluck struggling so gallantly against overwhelming odds." A noted scientist, head of an observatory on the Pacific Coast, found himself in one of the pictures of the Peninsular campaign. A famous scout of the Union army looks at a picture, and exclaims, with a strange shock, "There am I." Speaking of it later, he said, "I got shot the day after the picture was taken, and I hadn't thought about it from that day until I looked out at myself after all these years. I had forgotten what sort of a young fellow I was those days."

"The camera is nothing but fair; it overlooks nothing and it cannot forget." Oh, to have the eye of an absolutely righteous God resting upon one continually, what a photograph it takes! The hidden secrets of the heart are there. It gets in behind closed doors. You forget, but God remembers. Oh, that terrible day when, like a flash of lightning it is all revealed to you in His sight. All revealed, nothing covered. In His sight before whom angels veil their faces and the heavens themselves are not clean!

These soul photographs can never be destroyed, but they can be washed clean—whiter than snow. The God who took the record can remove it, and He has promised to do it in Christ. Let us not be stubborn. Let us accept His grace. Let us confess our sins. Let us seek Him while He is near and call upon Him while He may be found. Begin the New Year right!

"Grant, we beseech Thee, Almighty God, that we, who for our evil deeds, do worthily deserve to be punished, by the comfort of Thy grace may mercifully be relieved; through our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Amen."

Theodore Roosevelt says that nations never will arbitrate questions of vital honor. This may be true.

The Bible teaches that peace never can be effected on this earth until justice and truth prevail, and that these never will prevail until Jesus Christ returns again. This certainly is true.

And yet if the present arbitration treaties with England and with France fail of ratification by our Senate, it will seem not only unchristian but hardly less than barbarous.

It is a hopeful sign that so strong a fight is being waged for it by the Citizens National Commission, made up of several hundred leading men of the United States, and by the Federal Council of the Churches. We wish them every success, and would that our little might be done to aid them. We do not remember stronger words upon the subject than those of the last-named, which we quote:

"The present armed peace of Christendom is a scourge and a scandal. There are today more guns and bayonets, more bombs and shells, more soldiers on the land, and more ships of war upon the seas, than in any preceding century in the history of the world. More money is now expended in getting ready for war than was spent in former times in waging war. The burden of this military and naval equipment is stunting and demoralizing the life of the nation, and handicapping the progress of all humanitarian movements. Militarism is one of the gigantic evils of our day. Against it the church of Christ must set itself in open and determined opposition. The burden of the people must be lightened, the nations must be delivered from their fears. The instruments of slaughter must be beaten into the implements of industry. The world must know that Christians are indeed followers of the 'Prince of Peace.'"

The statement of Prof. Richard Gottheil, that the Zionist Congress has completely abandoned the project for a separate state in Palestine, through a concession from the Sultan, is exceedingly interesting. The ambition now is for "a prosperous Jewish people in a prosperous Ottoman empire," which is thought to be a more practical step in the direction of ultimate Jewish hope.

But however this may be, it is clear from Holy Writ, as a contemporary has pointed out, that at some future date Palestine, cultivated after modern methods, and populated by a majority of Jews, will be in a position to arrange terms of autonomy with a consort of European powers, regardless of Ottoman wishes.

If the statesmen of the world knew and believed the Bible, it would save them a lot of thinking; and if the same were true of financial investors, they would be in the way of making "easy money."

In a recent issue an editorial appeared, entitled "For Some Reason," in which an injustice seems to have been done, unintentionally, to a well-

Apologetic. known clergyman, whose name, however, was not mentioned. Indeed, it did not concern him so much, as the concept of Christianity and the Christian ministry for which he stands. We were misled as to the situation by the general report in the newspapers, which we now learn to have been partially false. Lest some of our readers should have identified the clergyman in question, we feel it our duty to make this explanation and apology.

In the same issue the A. B. C. F. M. was referred to as reporting a falling off in receipts, both from churches and individuals, which we understand on good authority to be an error, and which we very much regret. We reflected on the commercial appeal for missions so frequently employed in these days, and it was supposed that our remarks were applied to the missionary boards as such. This was a misunderstanding on the part of our kind critic, however, as we had in mind utterances of the platform and the press for which no board can be held directly responsible.

The Methodist Ecumenical Conference at Toronto was a great gathering as things are counted in these days, and ought to give a strong stim-

Bishop Hoss ulus to the activities of that and mighty church. The news-
Church Union. paper reports interested us, but especially the one speaking of the debate on church union.

"Bishop E. E. Hoss of the Church South made the only protest against it. 'I am amazed,' he exclaimed, 'at the demand that all people should come into one church.'

"Cries of 'No, no, no!' came from all parts of the house.

"History points out that such a church becomes first proud, then arrogant, and then corrupt."

"Again the cries of 'No, no, no!' were raised.

"I knew," the bishop said as he took his seat, "that I would not get unanimous consent, but if the day of universal organic union comes in Protestantism I will be a broken hearted mourner."

"The protest fell upon unwilling ears and the demand for union continued to be made by other speakers."

The bishop's protest reminds us of that of President Patton in the General Assembly, when he, too, was practically alone in the debate on the union with the Cumberland Church. But, nevertheless, we stand with Bishop Hoss and President Patton. A wise man and a great student of the Bible has said, that "Catholicity in a dispensation of failure is a token of apostasy." The motives of its projectors are not impugned when we say, it is simply the Tower of Babel over again. The speed of a fleet is gauged by its slowest vessel, and a union of churches in this age is effected only by minimizing the truth.

"A new broom sweeps clean," the particular application of which adage is found in a new force that has come in to our publishing department,

Our New and who insists that we give Broom. a new size to our type page, which, beginning with this issue, is 5 1-2 x 8 inches where before was only 4 5-6 x 7 1-2. Our former page, in other words, contained 36 1-4 square inches while this contains 44, a gain in space of about 21 per cent. The copy that required 50 pages to print, can now be compassed in about 41. We mention this to assure our readers that although the Magazine may not have as many pages as hitherto, it contains the same amount of matter. It is thought the effect is a little better also, while the cost of production is less. This last is an item, inasmuch as every copy issued is a financial loss. But our hopes are high, as the steady and safe progress being made points to a different kind of a balance sheet before very long.

He said "Whatsoever ye shall ask in My name I will give it." He will keep His word, and I can come and humbly present my petition, and it will all be right. Doubt is here inadmissible, surely.—Dr. Livingstone.

A Mid-week Service at Dr. Jowett's.

By A. P. Fitt.

T could not be called a prayer meeting, since prayer received no unusual prominence. The order of service was: Hymn, prayer by Dr. Jowett, hymn, reading of Scripture, prayer by a member of the audience, hymn, address (closing with prayer) by Dr. Jowett, hymn, benediction.

The gathering was dominated by the pastor. The Fifth Avenue Church is the metropolitan cathedral of Presbyterianism, and the main auditorium is an impressive hall. The chapel, or lecture room, however, in which this mid-week service was held, has nothing in its arrangement or equipment to attract attention. So it is a good setting for Dr. Jowett, who is entirely free from the spectacular and sensational.

Dr. Jowett's Personality.

The impression one receives under his ministry is of the reality of his sense of God. He generates an atmosphere of reverence, holiness. His voice is restful, his mien and actions all in quiet taste. One's interest is maintained without a break, one's thought and imagination are sustained on a high plane of spiritual expectancy.

Promptly at 8:15 Dr. Jowett appeared, took his place on the platform, and gave out the hymn:

"Come, let us join our cheerful songs
With angels round the throne."

There was an audience of two to three hundred, and the singing was taken up heartily, to the accompaniment of a piano.

The pastor's opening prayer gave tone and direction to the meeting. He prayed that the Holy Spirit might give us the promised energies of grace; a restful evidence that the Lord was in our midst; power of detachment from the seen, and of communion with the unseen, that when we returned to the seen we might know how to use it for God.

The Scripture reading was John 1, verse 35 to the end of the chapter. Dr.

Jowett reads with a sense of awe—one might say, of newness and surprise. One listened to this familiar passage as if it was news, such fresh emphasis was put upon it—without any tricks, however.

Revivifying Scripture.

His half hour's address was based upon this passage, and he began by unlocking one of the secrets of his power. He had a very simple purpose, he said, yet a difficult task, namely, to read between the lines of the record, to revive the actual happenings, and grasp the story of Andrew's call and ministry with his brother Peter in all its vividness and humanness. If only by the use of reverent imagination we could recover these New Testament stories from the phenomenal and remote, we should learn their lessons more readily. To accomplish this requires fine spiritual instincts, a deep experience of grace, knowledge both of our Lord and of men, the power of a rare expression, a kind of Pauline Dickens in ability.

Character Sketch of Andrew.

Andrew was pictured as a quiet, reserved kind of man, one whom his neighbors and friends would regard as moody. When the fishermen gathered together after their work was done and their catch got off to the market, and sat and discussed the latest gossip of the town or of Herod's court, Andrew would be apart, preoccupied with deeper things. He was versed in the Old Testament, especially such portions as the last chapters of Isaiah. He brooded on the great Messianic passages that pointed to a Coming One. Out on the waters his fellow fishermen often heard him sing a Messianic psalm. Wordsworthian in spirit, ever looking through the shadow to the substance behind it, regarding everything as a vesture enshrining something infinitely more valuable than the seen. The choice of a fisherman by Jesus was not the choice of a commonplace man.

How Andrew Met Christ.

One day it was whispered around: "Where's Andrew?"

"He's gone away to John."

So he had. In that recluse of the desert Andrew found a kindred soul; both brooders, both watching, expecting.

One day a third appeared, Himself absorbed. And John whispered to Andrew: "Behold the Lamb of God!"

Andrew is speechless with awe. Here at last is the One prayed for, longed for, looked for. And Andrew followed Him.

Andrew Brings Peter.

Back to his work he went, unusually quiet, because a really big experience changes everything for a man. A big love, a great bereavement alters even the flowers of the field. Everything in Andrew's regular work had new significance. And next morning before the rays of light had appeared, while the western slopes of roof were still dark, and perhaps the eastern sides of Galilee were reddening with the dawn, Andrew said to Peter:

"I've found the Messiah!"

Now Andrew had a great influence over Peter—such quiet brothers always have. When Peter looked into his face, and listened to the tones of his voice, he was full of questioning and feverish with haste to get to Jesus. As soon as work was done and they came ashore, Andrew took Peter to Him. The same constraining word was spoken: "Follow me," and Peter joined the circle.

Dr. Jowett emphasized three lessons in the story.

Jesus needed both men, strangely diverse in capacity and endowment as they were. The speaker instanced the modern case of John Wesley and Zinzendorf, and related an anecdote of George MacDonald, founder of the Scottish school of novelists, whose books (he said) are superbly fine in depth of spirit and trend of purpose.

An Anecdote of George MacDonald.

At Newcastle, England, MacDonald was once the guest of a well known Quaker philanthropist, Spence Watson.

Something was being said of Watson's work for the poor.

MacDonald, stroking his beard, said: "Aye, mon, but I envy ye!"

"Nonsense," replied Spence Watson, "you go to Italy, and live under sunny skies, and have wonderful visions, and write wonderful books. I read them, and am inspired by your words to go out and do something for the needy."

Two men, continued Dr. Jowett, utterly diverse—one practical and the other mystical—one a hand and the other an eye—yet both needed.

Both Andrew and Peter would serve their Lord according to their natural endowment. Andrew was a man of vision, of plans; Peter was intense, practical, full of deeds—never quite sure of his judgment, but always sure of his love. Andrew might write a meditative article, but it would take Peter to distribute it.

Both found their satisfaction in Christ. That Andrew found satisfaction is no wonder; that Peter found satisfaction is no wonder; but that both could say: "Thou, O Christ, art all I want," is very wonderful!

That the exquisite Newman, refined in mind and soul, should find satisfaction in Christ is not wonderful. That Peter MacKenzie, the rough, untutored evangelist, should find satisfaction in Christ is not wonderful. But that both should meet at the mercy seat is very wonderful!

The secret, said Dr. Jowett in closing, is that everybody finds his missing peace in Christ. Just as the ocean rolls in and fills up all the bays and coves along the shore, so the Lord of glory fills all the spaces of our soul and spirit. In this faith may we live and die!

The people dispersed quietly after the benediction. Dr. Jowett lingered on the platform, and presently stepped down and engaged in conference with one who might be a leading elder. The service was over within an hour.

The spirit of missions is the spirit of our Master; the very genius of His religion. A diffusive philanthropy is Christianity itself. It requires perpetual propagation to attest its genuineness.—Dr. Livingstone.

Up-To-Date Preaching.

[There is an appropriateness in publishing Dr. Francis L. Patton's charge to Dr. Jowett (for which we are indebted to The Bible Record), in the same issue which contains Mr. Fitt's pen picture on another page.—Editors.]

So, when we speak, as we sometimes do, of what we call up-to-date preaching, I suppose we mean that the change which may have taken place is a change of form and not of matter. The message is the same, but it may be couched in different phraseology. To use the changing fashion of literary form in presentation of the unchanging truth of God, to serve the pure wine of the Gospel in a cup of the finest gold—this I take it is the preacher's art.

Has the Message Changed?

Some will tell us that the message itself has changed and will say, for instance, that the Gospel of today is not the same as the Gospel our fathers believed in. This is due sometimes to a superficial view of Christianity, sometimes to a very false attitude toward Christianity, and sometimes again it is due to the studied abandoning of the accepted meaning of Christianity.

You will find here in this country, just as I suppose you have already found it in England, that there is a very common tendency among men to lay special stress upon the social, or I should say the sociological trend of Christianity, and when men tell us that the main function of the Gospel is to promote good will among mankind and enlist the offices of love in behalf of those who are the victims of poverty, disease and crime, I can only say that they are putting the emphasis in the wrong place. The commandment, it is true, is given us, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself," and it is one of the glories of philanthropy to put that into practice, but we should belittle Christianity if we thought that philanthropic endeavor exhausted its meaning, for that endeavor is the reflex in us of our belief in the loving mission of Him who came to give His life for us; and the danger at the same time is not only that men shall misread Christianity and lose the Gospel, but in losing the Gospel they may lose also those very fruits of the Gospel which they now claim to substitute for the Gospel itself.

Morals, Ideals and Moral Initiative.

You come to a city, sir, whose philanthropic agencies cannot be spoken of too highly, but you come at a time also when men need to be told that moral ideals are not worth much to men who have no moral initiative; that external efforts at moral reform need the enforcement of the power that can touch the inner springs of action and that after all the only real moral dynamic is to be found in the grace of God.

I look at these monumental expressions of the altruistic spirit and have no words in which to express my admiration. They seem to me to be the very efflorescence of Christianity; and yet when I find sometimes, as I do, a disposition on the part of men to let their religious life exhaust itself in transmitting material improvement to their fellows, in plans that take a care for those whose lot in life has been cast in unfortunate circumstances, I think I hear the Saviour say once more: "Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat; neither for the body, what ye shall put on. The life is more than meat and the body is more than raiment. But rather seek ye the Kingdom of God and all these things shall be added unto you."

Man Superior to His Environment.

Do not worry over the question of your earthly existence, but give your all to the essential problems. Life is more than meat, the body is more than raiment. Man is always superior to his environment. We may abolish poverty, but we can never abolish death, and until we do the dark secret of destiny will baffle us all unless we believe that that secret has been unlocked in that lesson.

My dear brother, I know that it is unnecessary for me to give you a formal charge. I know the Gospel that you intend to preach, and it is because we know it that we are glad to see you here and bid you Godspeed in the great work you have undertaken here, but if I felt that the appointment of the presbytery laid me under an obligation to close these remarks with a single word of injunction I would say: Let these truths be the basis of your preaching, let them give it form and force;

The revealed word,
The divine Christ,
Atoning blood,
The indwelling Spirit of God.

Moses, the Man Who Built According to Plan.

By Rev. R. P. McKim.

Rector St. Luke's Church, St. John, N. B.

GOD is surely looking for such men today. Many have given so much earnest thought, and there are so many carefully devised schemes. God's plan has been altered and presumably improved upon. I sometimes think God is looking for men who will be sufficiently simple and old-fashioned to take the pattern shewed in the Mount, and construct according to it; men who will know little enough to let God know something; who really believe that God does know something. Men who will be willing to build the Tabernacle with no windows in it, and to depend for light upon the radiance which burned and shone over the mercy seat.

It is inexpressibly sad that there is so much wisdom in the church today that is not the wisdom of God. What we need are men like Moses who will be prepared to set aside the wisdom which cannot know God, and who will go up into the Mount for God's pattern and God's wisdom, and then come down and work by it. We need more of the manifested presence of God; more of the marvelous radiance of the glory of God. The world looking at us sees so little supernatural light; so little supernatural power; men are not impressed, not convinced, not even attracted. I read of the glory of the Lord filling the Tabernacle and Temple. I read in those early chapters of Acts of the manifested presence working with mighty power, and I cannot help asking why we do not have more of it today. Why is the church not more of a compelling factor in the world today? Why are there not more conversions? Because we have not the presence and glory of God among us as they had. And we have not, because we have not built according to the pattern.

The work given to Moses divides into two parts. The first part was deliverance. The people in whom God is interested are in bondage in Egypt. Moses is commissioned to preach a deliverance, and to demonstrate God's ability to consummate it. The latter part is devoted to construction, making those delivered people what God wanted them to be, a witness to Himself. Our work, as servants of Jesus Christ, corresponds closely with this: we are to get people out of the world, for Egypt is the world and the world is bondage. And when by God's grace and power that is done, these rescued, delivered, emancipated people are to be constructed into living witnesses to God who saved them.

The Deliverance.

Two elements contributed to Moses' education. He was the son of godly parents, who with simple faith believed that though Pharaoh's edict had condemned all Hebrew male children to death, God would somehow make a way for their boy to live, and afterward, when the mother was made the nurse, she would teach the boy those deep things of God which she knew so well herself. On the other hand, Moses was also the protege of Pharaoh's daughter, and consequently brought up in all the wisdom of the schools of Egypt. We do not know what thinking Moses may have done, in those early days, upon the political situation and upon the relative positions of Hebrew and Egyptian. We do not know that God told him to take any active part in the matter. All we know is that one day Moses saw an act of oppression, threw himself into the struggle and failed. The arm of flesh could not succeed in God's work. And then there came a death that there might be a new life. Moses became a shepherd in Midian. What a mortification to the man who had lived in the court of Egypt as the son of Pharaoh's daughter! But in God's procedure death comes before life, and at the place of death, God met Moses and began to tell him about life, a new life. There was the bush, burning but not consumed, the old and the new and Christ. And there and then, at the place of death and of life, Moses is given his commission. The old marked by failure will die, and the new will open up with possibilities made by God.

It was a huge undertaking, and there were tremendous difficulties. But Moses could always remember two things God said to him that day: "I AM hath sent thee." The One who is yesterday, today, and forever. The unchanging One who afterward said, "Lo I am with you always." Again God said, "Certainly I will be with thee, and this shall be a token unto thee that I have sent thee: when thou hast brought forth the people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God upon this mountain." Always afterward there were with him the sound of that voice, and the sight of that mountain. God also gave him something to help him remember. A very ordinary thing it was which God selected, but God made it a very extraordinary thing. "And the Lord said unto Moses, 'What is that in thine hand?' And he said, 'A rod.'" Whenever afterwards Moses felt his fingers tighten on that rod, he remembered. We need some rods like it, and need them very much. There is a strong, cruel taskmaster. There are sore and weary shoulders, and heavy and broken hearts. There is need today for a deliverance, a rod that will bring with it just such power.

What was this rod? Where did it come from? Cut from some bush there in the wilderness. I have sometimes thought it might have been cut from the bush that was burning but not consumed. But at any rate one like it might be cut anywhere in that wilderness; just a common rod, grasped in a human hand. A hand strong and big? More so than most men's hands? It is said that character shows itself in one's hands. What do these hands show? Trustworthiness. And that is what connects the ordinary hand and the ordinary rod with the extraordinary power of God Who is Wonderful. And the rod of Moses in Exodus 4:2, becomes the rod of God in Exodus 4:20.

Moses has received his commission. He forthwith enters upon his controversy with Pharaoh. Egypt is a place not altogether wanting in religion. The man of the world will not admit that he is wholly irreligious. He has a religion and considers it sufficiently good to make the proposal to change something to debate upon. The magicians have much power and their enchantments are impressive. One must judge by results. Moses, sent of God, comes, presents his arguments and gets a hearing. There is discussion and deliberation, with the result that Pharaoh proposes compromise. But Moses contends that "the Lord doth put a difference." A difference in regard to the Word of God. Some received the message while others rejected it. A difference in regard to the Lamb of God. Some sprinkled the blood, others did not. A difference in regard to direction. Some passed out of Egypt, others did not. Moses was able to see that there was a difference and that it was a fundamental difference. And what was different from God's plan was something to which Moses could not but be opposed.

It takes a strong-hearted, stiff-lipped man to believe that those who are down in Egypt are lost; that there is only one way out—by the Word of God and the Lamb of God. Moses was trustworthy. He delivered his message and stuck to it. God is looking for men who are dependable.

The Construction.

The second great part of Moses' work was construction. It ought always follow deliverance, and it can only come after a deliverance. Everybody who is delivered should be a witness and only delivered ones can bear witness. Moses must teach these delivered people how to worship. Let us consider one of the methods used in teaching.

A tabernacle was to be built which should stand for God's love, His wish to be near the people whom He loved, and to have them near Him; a tent of meeting where God and man might meet one another; a place which would localize God's presence, and make it approachable for man. In it were to be a series of finger-posts marking the way by which men were to come to God, and what there was to do when they came into God's presence. This Tabernacle, then, was a very important institution. Toward its construction there were to be two contributions, God's, and man's.

God furnished the plan. Man furnished the material. And that material, the wood, the gold, silver, brass, and hangings, the goat's hair and skins, all were to be given, and out of them a place constructed in which to worship God. What are the best methods of securing all this costly material? And what are the best building plans? How many and what varying answers to these questions today! For these are some of the very important questions in church economy today. Moses exactly met those questions and found a very satisfactory answer. Indeed, I think, reading the story of what was done in those long ago days, they had better success than is obtained by many of the efforts of today.

According to Plan.

First, Moses went up into the Mount with God, "into the thick darkness where God was." There he spoke with God face to face. There God gave him the plan, including every outline, every detail of the building, and also full instructions as to obtaining the necessary material. There God warned him and said, "See thou make all things according to the pattern that was shewed thee in the Mount."

Then Moses came down and did what God told him. He secured the building material in the way God had instructed him (Exodus 25:2 and 35:5). He set people to work on the Tent, and every board and every socket, every vessel and every hanging, was made according to the pattern. May we suppose that there were any suggestions offered him to do otherwise? Had somebody a more approved scheme? Something more modern? Or are these suggestions only made nowadays? I know that when Jesus was building His tabernacle; when He was starting out to mark down for sinful men the way of approach to God; the suggestion was made that He turn stones into bread, and we know where the suggestion originated. Very probably there were suggestions offered to Moses. But Jesus was faithful to Him that appointed Him, as also was Moses in all his house (Heb. 3:2). And the man who could be depended upon for implicit obedience, set aside all other suggestions, and went on doing as God told him, with three results:

(1) There was a sufficiency of material (Exodus 36:6, 7).

(2) There were wise-hearted, willing men raised up to help him (Exodus 36:1).

(3) When the Tabernacle was finished and set up according to the pattern, the glory of the Lord filled it (Exodus 40:34).

I will place no value on anything I have or may possess, except in relation to the kingdom of Christ. If anything will advance the interests of that kingdom, it shall be given away or kept, only as by giving or keeping of it I shall most promote the glory of Him to Whom I owe all my hopes in time and eternity. May grace and strength sufficient to enable me to adhere faithfully to this resolution be imparted to me.—Dr. Livingstone.

Recognizing the Divine Element in Christian Service.

By Charles P. Meeker.

HOW often we find things to be strikingly opposite to what they at first appear. This is especially true when these same things are set in contrast with the Word of God. Take, for instance, the thoughts and theories of men, good theories and beautiful thoughts not excepted—the best of which, if ever, unless they are conceived under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, coincide with God's thoughts as revealed in His Word.

There seems to be a jealousy on God's part to secure an exact reproduction of His own thoughts in man, and what He desires is that we adopt His thoughts and follow implicitly His way. For this reason we have many repetitions in the Old and New Testaments. Men who have studied this matter say that there is a divine and progressive purpose easily traceable in these constant recurrences of similar thoughts and passages. The uniqueness of this method furnishes one of the most forceful arguments in support of the verbal and plenary inspiration of the Scriptures. It is as if God were saying over and over again, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are my ways your ways." The difference between His thoughts and ways and ours, is as high as heaven and as vast as eternity.

A few examples might give point to these remarks. Take Cain and Abel and their two sacrifices. One man with his sacrifice was accepted; the other rejected. The question arises, Why was Cain and his offering refused? Was it because he did not bring the best he knew how? Or was it because he set aside God's specific provisions about acceptable sacrifices and brought what he thought would answer the purpose just as well? A study of this incident will convince the student that it was the latter. It was a case of substituting his thought about sacrifice for God's thought. God had not left it to Cain to bring the best offering he knew how. The form, the kind and the manner of offering was expressly provided for by God.

There are two scenes in the life of Moses in which the rod and the rock are before us, one at Rephidim in the Wilderness of Sin (Exodus 17:4-6), and the other at Kadesh in the desert of Zin (Numbers 20:7-11). God's instruction to Moses on each occasion was different. In the first instance he was to take the rod in his hand and strike the rock and water would flow forth. In the second, he was to take the same rod in his hand, and speak to the rock and water would flow forth. The rock in both cases was a type of Christ (1 Cor. 10:4). The smiting in the first case typifies the smiting of Christ before the thirst of the human soul for holiness could be satisfied. The fact that the smiting was to be done in the presence of all the people sets forth clearly that God would show the people the way of salvation through the judgment of the Cross.

In the second incident Moses was disobedient. He was not to smite the rock but to speak to it. Now, understanding the spiritual and typical significance of the rock, to smite it the second time was equivalent to crucifying Christ twice. This would be a perversion of all Scripture, "For in that he died, he died unto sin once?" "By one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified" (Heb. 10:14).

Moses, in smiting the rock the second time, destroyed the whole typical and spiritual significance of the incident, and his rashness cost him the coveted pleasure of leading God's people into the promised land.

And so other instances might be enumerated, such for example as Nadab and Abihu offering strange fire before the Lord; Saul's disobedience in sparing the Amalekites' cattle and King Agag; Samuel choosing a king in Saul's stead from among the sons of Jesse, and removing the Ark to Jerusalem from the house of Abinadab in Baalah of Judah.

Reading Leviticus.

One of the most profitable lessons the writer ever learned was in connection with his first attempt to read the Bible through. When he came to Leviticus he found it so dry and repetitious that he passed it by. When he had finished the Bible he thought, "I have not read it through after all." It was some time before he could make up his mind to read that book Leviticus; but after praying for a blessing in reading it he began its careful perusal. Among many other helpful things, this priceless lesson was learned—God is exceedingly particular. The patience-racking repetition, and minute attention to the smallest details about the sacrifices seem superfluous, but they reveal the fact most forcefully that God would not trust the details of those offerings to be worked out by man. Everything was to be after the pattern revealed in the Holy Mount.

Has Man a Divine Spark?

There is abroad a notion that there is a divine spark in man, that this spark needs but a little fanning, to bring about results which the Scriptures declare impossible apart from the new birth. This doctrine has many beautiful and attractive features to commend it, when viewed apart from the fact that it is wholly unscriptural. Yet despite this fact the idea persists, even though it does great dishonor to God whose thought is so radically different. He, acting upon the obverse, has planned and executed man's redemption in such a way as to make His actions inexplicable on any other ground than that man is utterly devoid of a divine spark. God's thought is that man is really bad at heart, and bad in fact, beyond the possibility of redemption through mere human endeavor.

On the ground of such a notion as that stated above, how can the atonement of Jesus Christ be justified? Why did God not develop the spark and spare His Son? He can have no justification for the rivers of blood that have flowed in expiation for sin, if man needed only developing, and mending, and not a new creation. But if there is one thing that the atonement of Jesus Christ demonstrates, and the cross of Calvary stands for, it is the total absence of any divine spark in man. In fact nothing brings into evidence the absence of this so clearly and so forcefully, as the natural hatred toward God in the human heart which culminated in the death of His Son.

It would be a matter of no difficulty to gather a hundred passages or more from God's Word setting forth the fact that there is positively nothing good to be found in man or expected from him apart from an entirely new and distinct act of divine impartation and blessing. "I know that in me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing" (Romans 7:18).

The Parable of the Sower.

The best we can say is, that man, after his Eden experience, when he lost his innocence, retained a capacity to receive God and respond to impressions made by Him. The parable of the sower strikingly illustrates this. In that parable there are four kinds of soil. The soil in three cases is represented as being inhospitable to the seed. Only in one case is it spoken of as good soil; but even here the good soil had no originating power. All that the good soil did was to receive the good seed that was sown upon it, for which it had a capacity, and assist in its development. Now if that parable teaches anything, it is that the soil is a very subordinate thing; that the important thing is the seed, not the soil. And if we are to accept the interpretation as generally given, the soil represents the heart and the seed the Word of God. It is, therefore, the planting of the Word of God in the heart, which has the capacity to receive it and assist in its development, that results in the reproduction of the divine image. This reception of the Word of God into the heart is definite, and more or less clearly marked in the experience of the individual, and is often effected by as positive a crisis as when a child is born into the world.

We now see the significance of Christ's conversation with Nicodemus and His three-fold repetition, so solemnly and emphatically uttered, "Ye must be born again." In the fifth verse of the third chapter of John He gives us the one instrument and the one active agent in effecting this new birth, when He says, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except a man be born of water and of the Spirit he cannot enter into the kingdom of God." The word "water" here can be clearly demonstrated as typifying the Word of God, and is consistently so used in the Scriptures. Eph. 5:26; Titus 3:5; I Pet. 1:23, and John 15:3 are in the line of this demonstration.

These Scriptures give us the active agency and the instrument in the process, theologically called regeneration. This divine nature, this Christ nature, this nature of Spirit thus results from receiving the Word, and the action of the Holy Spirit upon the heart receiving it. In which case the Holy Spirit is the divine agent and infinite efficiency, while the written Word is the perfect instrument in the hands of the Spirit.

Whenever, therefore, the Spirit is mentioned in connection with water it signifies the Spirit in operation with the Word; it then signifies the Word used by the Spirit as His instrument. To be born, therefore, of water and of the Spirit, literally out of water and out of Spirit, is the New Testament way of saying that the Spirit is the agent, and the Word the instrument in this new birth of a human soul. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit" (I Peter 1:22). "It is the Spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words I speak unto you, they are Spirit, and they are life" (John 6:63).

"In the new birth, then, the Word of God is the seed; the human heart is the soil; the preacher of the Word is the sower who drops the seed into the soil; God by his Spirit opens the heart to receive the seed (Acts 10:14); the hearer believes, the Spirit quickens the seed into life in the receptive heart; the new divine nature springs up out of the divine Word; the believer is born again, created anew, made alive, passed out of death into life." [R. A. Torrey.]

Now, what is the use of all this? Simply to set forth the absolute necessity, in all our service for God, of using His Word in entire dependence upon God's Spirit to quicken it; else we will find ourselves unhappily doing what the Apostle Paul prays he might not be found doing, beating the air.

Old Fashioned Doctrine.

One other startling fact in this connection is that the soil seems to grow weeds without any previous cultivation or planting; and the human heart seems to bring forth evil in the same way. Any one who will watch children will be amazed to find the ease with which they fall in with evil, and will be puzzled oftentimes to know where it was first suggested. But it is the enemy's business to sow these evil seeds, and he rests not night or day.

Now, there is no purpose in saying this to support the doctrine of the total depravity of the human heart. But expression is given simply to a conviction which has come from observation. The feeling is emphatically strong that everything which falls short of a divine regeneration of the heart lacks permanency, and effectiveness. These things are now old fashioned doctrine, and the insistence upon them will place a man upon the shelf as a back number. They are not found in progressive theology, but what matter? The progressiveness which omits these fundamental things has done nothing for the church except to confound its faith and weaken its power.

Doctrine That Honors God's Word.

There is one thing about the doctrine of the absolute necessity of the new birth, at least, and the insistence upon it, that is its own reward, namely, it honors God's Word and His Spirit by showing us our dependence upon both.

This, then, is the situation that we have to face, and the question is, how can we meet it? We have before us a great and wonderful capacity, with hidden powers and potentialities; but after all only a capacity, nothing more, to receive good; a plot of ground, possibly overgrown with weeds, it may be a child's heart or one more mature in years. What then can we do? We have a good Word and a divine Spirit. Now how shall we get this good Word planted in this heart that has the capacity to receive it and how shall we secure the co-operation of the divine Spirit in nourishing and developing this seed? Only through much prayer. We must bring the Word to the soul in the power of the Spirit, and bring the power of the Spirit upon the Word to the soul.

PRACTICAL AND PERPLEXING QUESTIONS

ANSWERED BY THE EDITORS

Will you kindly harmonize Matt. 7:22, 23 and Mark 9:38, 39?

In harmonizing these two passages the Revised Version assists a little by translating Matt. 7:22 "Have we not prophesied by Thy Name?" while Mark 9:38 remains "in Thy Name." There is a difference in the significance of these prepositions—one suggests power merely, the other relationship. There may be something in this.

Again in Mark, the apostle complains that the wonder-worker "followeth not us." There is no assumption that he was not a disciple of Christ, however. Perhaps this explains it. But in any event, the main thought of Matthew is that of imposture, which is not present in Mark.

The outstanding lesson from the two passages is that one may do wonders by using Christ's name, and even be permitted by Christ to do so, and yet not belong to Him in any saving relationship. This is a very solemn thought for all of us, and contains a very solemn warning.

J. M. G.

If Jesus Christ was God, why did He give utterance to the words on the cross, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?"

It must be remembered that while God, He was also man. He possessed two natures in one person, and it was in His human nature that He suffered and experienced the loss of the divine presence on the cross. This was part of the penalty He bore vicariously for us. He endured in that moment what they who accept Him as Saviour would otherwise have endured throughout eternity.

J. M. G.

What is meant by "the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost" in Matthew 12:31, 32?

"Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost" is the sin of rejecting His testimony to Jesus Christ. One might speak a word against the Son of Man through ignorance that He was the Son of man, for which reason it might be forgiven him; but when through the Holy Ghost, witness is borne that He is the Son of Man, then to speak against Him is to do so in the face of light and knowledge. This is really speaking against the Holy Ghost who bears the witness. This can not be forgiven one because if he rejects the testimony of the Holy Ghost to Christ, there is no stronger testimony that can be borne to Christ. The rejection of that testimony, therefore, is the final rejection of Christ Himself, and the final rejection of Christ puts the rejector outside of the pale of forgiveness either in this world or that which is to come.

J. M. G.

Which is correct, "Rev. So-and-So," or "Rev. Mr. So-and-So?"

Always the latter. "Reverend" is an adjective, and should not be used in place of the title "Mr.," or in place of the initials of a name. It is proper to say, "Rev. Mr. Jones," or "Rev. John Jones;" and if you wish to designate the gentleman more particularly you might say, "The Rev. John Jones." But "Rev. Jones" is bad English, and we hope you will never use it, not withstanding that its vulgarism is becoming more common in these days.

J. M. G.

Why do you believe Moses wrote the Pentateuch?

Because, among other reasons, the whole Jewish nation have believed it for 3,500 years, and the whole Christian Church through all its history. There have only been the fewest exceptions to this. Latterly, higher criticism has sought to raise a doubt about it, but its position is being discredited more and more as time passes.

THE SECOND BOOK OF CHRONICLES.

Lesson 3. Jehoram to Hezekiah. Chapters 21-32.

1. Jehoram, c. 21.

Observe that Jehoshaphat followed Rehoboam's example in arranging for his sons (v. 3), but without the hoped-for result (v. 4). Such a brother as Jehoram proved might be expected to act in his kingly capacity as verses five to seven testify. "Elijah" (v. 12) may be a mistake of the transcribers for "Elisha," as the former died earlier (2 Kings 2); unless we take the view in the margin that this was a "writing" he left behind him. For the fulfillment of this "writing" read the rest of the chapter. We had a much fuller account of this reign in 2 Kings.

2. Ahaziah, c. 22.

This king is called "Jehoahaz" in the preceding chapter (v. 17). The discrepancy in the figures (22:2) was noticed in 2 Kings 8:26, and the fact that his mother was the grand-daughter of Omri (v. 2). Note her influence (v. 3) like that of the mother of what other king recently considered?

In the story of verses five to nine, it is of interest to know that archaeological research has found the names of both Hazael and Jehu on the Assyrian sculptures.

Athaliah's motive (v. 10) may have been inspired partly by anger at the destruction of her own house of Ahab, partly by the necessity of self-defense against Jehu, and partly by pride and ambition, since if any of the young princes became king his mother would supersede her in power and dignity.

Verse 12 means that the priests and their families, some of them at least, were privileged to dwell in the buildings in the outer wall of the temple.

3. Joash, cc. 23, 24.

"Chief of the fathers of Israel" (23:2), means doubtless Judah and Benjamin only, the name usually employed in this book for all that remained of Israel. 2 Chronicles 24:15-22 has no parallel in the record in Kings. It mentions the honor shown Jehoiada. Burial in cities, except Jerusalem, was prohibited, and in that case only allowed to kings. What request did the princes make to the king after the death of the faithful priest (v. 17)? Does the next verse indicate its character? And was the king himself guilty (v. 21)? Compare Matt. 23:29-35. In this last passage Christ speaks of the slain prophet as the son of Barachias instead of Jehoiada, but possibly he was the latter's grandson. In his death the prophet said: "The Lord shall see and require" (v. 22), and for the fulfillment of the warning read the chapter to the end.

4. Amaziah, c. 25.

This history is divided into three parts: (1) the general account of the reign, and its spirit, especially at the beginning (vv. 1-4); (2) the conquest of the Edomites (vv. 5-13); (3) the idolatry of the king and its punishment at the hands of Israel (vv. 14-28). The second of these events is given with detail not found in the earlier record, and is especially valuable for the reply of God's servant to the king (v. 9), the lesson of which should not be disregarded. The third event also contains new and important matter (vv. 14-16), which explains why the calamity of the following verses was permitted.

5. Uzziah, c. 26.

Two periods suggest themselves in this case, early obedience and prosperity (vv. 1-15), and then pride and punishment (vv. 16-23). A comparison of the record of the first period with that in 2 Kings 14 and 15 shows new matter illustrating Uzziah's prosperity, who is there called "Azariah." This latter name, by the way, is that of the Assyrian inscriptions also. Do not let verse five escape. "He sought God in the days of Zechariah, who had understanding in the visions of God." How valuable are the prophets in the history of God's people, and especially those who understand the visions of God! There is a difference even in prophets. Some understand what others do not. How necessary, therefore, that the Scripture interpreter should fear the Lord that he may possess his secrets.

Uzziah desired to exercise regal and sacerdotal functions at the same time, as in the case of pagan kings and emperors, but which was contrary to the divine law (Ex. 30, Num. 18). For the sin, compare 1 Samuel 13, and the punishment, Numbers 12, 2 Kings 5.

6. Jotham and Ahaz, cc. 27, 28.

Of Jotham's reign little need be said except to call particular attention to the lesson in verse six. The story of Ahaz is divided into four parts: (1) his general character and reign (vv. 1-5); (2) the invasions by Syria and Israel (vv. 6-15); (3) the alliance with Assyria (vv. 16-21); (4) the summary (vv. 22-27).

There is much that is new as compared with Kings, but the prophetic intercession for Judah with their brethren of Israel is particularly interesting (vv. 9-15). Was it their power, or God's judicial sentence that caused Israel to be victorious (v. 9)? How had they abused their opportunity? What should make them cautious and merciful (v. 10)? It has been pointed out that verses 12-15 accord with the parable of the Good Samaritan (Luke 10), and it is even thought that Christ may have drawn His materials from this episode.

Ahaz's alliance with Assyria is attested by the Assyrian monuments. In the summary of the close of his reign, what language (v. 24) indicates the absolute suspension of the worship of God in his time?

7. Hezekiah, cc. 29-32.

After the beginning of Hezekiah's history, we have, in chapter 29, the cleansing and consecration of the temple. In 30, the great passover. In 31, the religious reforms following. In 32, Sennacherib's expedition, and Hezekiah's sickness and the close of the reign. In Kings the military and political side of the reign is given more fully, but not the inner religious and theocratic side, as we see by comparing chapters 29-31 with the introductory verses of 2 Kings 18.

Noting a few outstanding points, the phrase, "all the uncleanness" (29:16) means probably the sacrificial vessels formerly employed in idolatry, and possibly the remains of idolatrous offerings. "Ye have filled your hand unto the Lord" (v. 31 margin), means they had consecrated themselves to God (Ex. 28:41) after offering the expiatory sacrifices which, as we said in Leviticus, necessarily preceded such consecration. Keep in mind that God accepts nothing from us as either gift or service until He accepts us. And we can be accepted only on the ground of the expiatory sacrifice of Christ. Note the last word of this chapter in the light of its context. That is the way a revival comes. O, that God would now surprise us with one!

Why could they not keep the passover in the legally appointed first month (30:2-4)? Was a change ever permissible (Num. 9:6-13)? Note the breadth of the invitation (vv. 5-9), and the reception it met from Israel (vv. 10, 11). See the difficulty in the case of Judah and the cause of it (v. 12). "Healed the people" (v. 20) means forgave their guilt. "That they might be encouraged (steadfast) in the law of the Lord" (31:4), means that they might live care-free while performing their official duties.

Note that Hezekiah was a man of prayer and faith, who did not neglect means (32:1-8). To understand "he repaid not, etc." (v. 25), compare 2 Kings 20:12, etc. How disappointing this is in so good a man, and what a serious lesson it teaches as to the need of prayer and watchfulness to the very end of our lives (v. 31).

2. What warning for mothers is found in it?

10. What lesson is taught by the latter part of Hezekiah's life?

THE SECOND BOOK OF CHRONICLES.

Lesson. 4. Manasseh to the Captivity. Chapters 33-36.

1. Manasseh and Amon, c. 33.

The history of the first-named is divided into three parts: (1) the outline of his character and reign down to the crisis of his punishment and "the host of heaven," compare Deut. 16: 21 and 17:3. As we have learned, it was in such groves, and on the high hills, and under the trees, that the heathen were guilty of their idolatrous practices. As a comment on verse six turn to Deut. 18:9, etc. Verse seven is a forerunner of what we shall read of the Antichrist in Daniel and the books of the New Testament (Daniel 7-9, Matt. 24, 2 Thess. 2, Rev. 13, etc.).

(vv. 1-10); (2) his affliction and repentance in Babylon (vv. 11-13); (3) his later career and death (vv. 14-20). The first part was considered in Kings. For the reference to "groves"

God, as ever, is merciful and long-suffering, but without avail (v. 10). The Assyrian king now referred to was Esarhaddon, son and successor to Sennacherib. "Among thorns" may mean that Manasseh was hiding in such a thicket, but some versions have another Hebrew expression translated "among the living," as intended to show only that he was taken alive. His condition was humiliating indeed, hands manacled and ankles fastened together with rings and a bar.

Observe the process of his repentance—affliction, supplication, humility, mercy, spiritual apprehension, restoration, reformation, zeal, prosperity, (vv. 12-16). Here is a good outline for an expository discourse. It was some political motive that induced the Assyrian to restore him again to his kingdom, perhaps to use him as an ally against Egypt, "but God overruled the measure for higher purposes."

The story of Amon calls for no comment.

2. Josiah, cc. 34, 35.

The first ten years of this reign (vv. 1-7) are distinguished by a theocratic reformation and revival more thorough and widespread than that of Manasseh, and suggesting the earlier one under Hezekiah. The exact chronological order is not followed but the great facts are the same as in Kings. That a king of Judah should have such influence among the tribes of Israel, is explained by the fact that the captivity of the latter had taken place, and the remnant remaining in the land kept in close touch with Judah as their natural protector (v. 6). The word "mattocks" has been translated "deserts" and may mean the deserted localities or suburbs of these tribes.

The remainder of this chapter has been alluded to sufficiently in the earlier record.

The first half of chapter 35 is the account of the great passover, the origin and nature of which was treated in Exodus 12, but a few features call for attention here. For example, "the holy place" in this case, (v. 5), means the court of the priests where the animals for sacrifice were slain, and where the people were admitted according to their families, several households at a time. The Levites stood in rows from the slaughtering places to the altar, passing the blood and fat from one to another of the officiating priests. [Bible Commentary.] The Levites, both here and at Hezekiah's passover, did more than the law, strictly interpreted, authorized them to do, but the peculiar conditions in each case justified the liberty. The singers (v. 15) were chanting Psalms 113-118, and doubtless repeating them over and over as each group entered the holy place. The comparison with Samuel's passover (v. 18) suggests that of Hezekiah's, and Solomon's (30:26), the distinction being found in the terms on which the comparisons are based. One perhaps on the grandeur of the ceremonies, and the other on the ardor and devotion of the people.

In the story of Josiah's death (vv. 20-27), we need not repeat what was said in Kings. Egypt and Assyria are rivals for world power, and Palestine is the buffer between them. Judah is Assyria's vassal, and it is Josiah's duty to oppose her enemy's advances. The "valley of Megiddo" is identical with the plain of Esdraelon of which we shall hear later. Necho's reference to God's command (v. 21) may not mean Jehovah, but some false God of Egypt, and yet verse 22 raises a doubt about it. For this reason, some think Jeremiah, who was a contemporaneous prophet in Judah, may have communicated such a revelation to the Egyptian king. If so, it adds a new cause for Josiah's death, for if the prophet revealed it to Necho, he would hardly have kept it a secret from Josiah.

Jeremiah's lamentation is not recorded (v. 25) except as it may be found unidentified in his book of Lamentations. The event itself is thought to be again referred to in Zechariah 12:11.

3. Jehoahaz, c. 36:1-4.

This was the popular choice to succeed Josiah, but being his younger son, there was a question of its legitimacy, which may explain, in part, his removal by the king of Egypt and the substitution of his older brother. His reign was short, and as we learn from 2 Kings 23:32, it was also wicked.

4. Jehoiaquim, vv. 5-8.

His brother was no improvement (compare Jer. 22:13-19). At first the vassal of Egypt, he subsequently sustained the same relationship to Babylon, which had now become the head of the Assyrian empire, and had finally driven the Egyptians out of Asia. Rebelling against Babylon later on, the latter punished him (vv. 6, 7). Daniel, the great prophet, was taken captive at this time (Dan. 1:1-6). Jehoiakim himself was not, however, although that seems to have been Nebuchadnezzar's original intention. (Compare with verse six, 2 Kings 24:2-7, Jeremiah as above, and also 36:30.)

5. Jehoiachin, vv. 9, 10.

This king is "Coniah" and "Jeconiah" in the book of Jeremiah (cc. 22, 23), and according to 2 Kings 24:8, was eighteen years old instead of eight when he began to reign. This age seems corroborated by what our lesson says of him (v. 9). Compare also Ezekiel 19:1-9. "When the year was expired" (v. 10), means when the spring had come, and its opportunity for military campaigning.

6. Zedekiah, vv. 11-21.

As we know from Kings, Zedekiah was not the brother, but really the uncle of his predecessor, but called the first-named in accordance with the Hebrew latitude in speaking of family relationships. Note the great distinction given to a true prophet of God, implying both inspiration and authority (v. 12). Note carefully verse 21. We learnt in the Pentateuch that every seventh year in Israel was to be a sacred rest unto the Lord, the land itself was to lie fallow. But the greed of the people had disregarded this law with every other, and now they were to pay the penalty as per Leviticus 26:33-35. Judah, providentially, was not colonized as was Israel, by other peoples, so that at the close of seventy years there might be a return (Jer. 25:12, 13).

The reader will observe that this book concludes with an account of that return (vv. 22, 23), showing, in so far, that it was written after that event, as stated at the beginning of our lessons in Chronicles. The story of the return comes before us in detail in the book of Ezra.

Questions on the Lesson.

1. Give in outline Manasseh's history.
2. How does he become a type of the Antichrist?
3. Who succeeded Sennacherib in Assyria?
4. How do you explain Josiah's influence in Israel as well as Judah?
5. What are the Passover psalms?
6. Name four great passovers of the people after entering Canaan.
7. What testifies to the people's love for Josiah?
8. Name Judah's kings, and give their relationship, from Manasseh to the captivity.
9. What hint is given in this book that it was written after that event?

THE BOOK OF EZRA.

Lesson 1. Back to the Homeland. Chapters 1-6.

1. Cyrus' Proclamation, c. 1.

Babylon has had its day, and with its downfall has come that of the Assyrian Empire. The Medes and Persians, with Cyrus at their head, are now in power, and in the providence of God, Daniel, the Jewish prophet and statesman, has influence at his court, as in that of Nebuchadnezzar. By a study of the earlier prophets, especially Jeremiah, he has become aware that the time is nigh for the captivity of Judah to end and his people to return to their land (Dan. 9:1, 2; Jer. 25:12-14). He knows, also, that two hundred years earlier, Isaiah had, by inspiration of the Holy Spirit, mentioned Cyrus by name as the monarch by whose ukase this return would be brought about (Isa. cc. 44, 45.)

Doubtless he told these things to Cyrus, who issues this proclamation (v. 1) not from any intelligent desire to please Jehovah, but for political reasons. Nevertheless, thus is fulfilled again Romans 8:28.

The words of Cyrus, (v. 2) are not merely oriental hyperbole, as we may judge by Jeremiah 27 and Daniel 2. It is anticipating too much to enter on these prophets now, further than to say that the dominion they speak of as divinely entrusted to Nebuchadnezzar and Babylon, was to be transferred to their successors down to the end of this age. Of these successors Cyrus and the Persians were the first.

"Sheshbazzar" (v. 8) is the Persian name for Zerubbabel (3:8; 5:16), who, though born in exile, was recognized as heir to the throne of Judah.

2. Zerubbabel's Company, c. 2.

"Province" (v. 1) refers to Judah, and indicates that it is no longer an independent kingdom, but a dependency of Persia. "Children" is not to be taken in the sense of little ones, but that of descendants or posterity. "Tirshatha" (v. 63) means "Governor."

Verse 64 says: "The whole congregation, together, was forty-two thousand three hundred and threescore." This amount is 12,000 more than the numbers when added together. Reckoning up the smaller numbers we find that they amount to 29,818, in this chapter, and to 31,089 in the parallel chapter of Nehemiah. Ezra also mentions 494 persons omitted by Nehemiah, and Nehemiah mentions 1,765 not noticed by Ezra. If, therefore, Ezra's surplus be added to Nehemiah, and Nehemiah's to Ezra, they will both become 31,583. Subtracting this from 42,360, there will be a deficiency of 10,777. These are omitted because they did not belong to Judah and Benjamin or to the priests, but to the other tribes. The servants and singers are reckoned separately (v. 65), so that putting all these items together, the number of all who went with Zerubabel amounted to 50,000 with 8,000 beasts of burden. [Davidson.]

3. The Altar and the Temple, c. 3.

The seventh month (v. 1) corresponds to our Sept. 15-Oct. 15, and was the time of the Feast of Tabernacles (Lev. 23). Jeshua (v. 2) was the hereditary high priest. "His (or its) bases" (v. 3) means the old foundations of the altar. After the altar which was necessary to be built first in order to sacrifice unto the Lord, the foundations of the temple itself begin to be laid (vv. 8-11). The sorrow of the older men (v. 12) was caused by the contrast between the prosperous circumstances under which Solomon's temple had been built, and those of the present. This second temple would be inferior in size and costliness, and destitute of the Ark, the Shekinah, the Urim and Thummim, and other features which contributed to the glory of the first temple. Read Haggai in this connection.

4. Adversaries, c. 4.

In verse one "Judah and Benjamin," and "the children of the captivity" are identical. "The adversaries," were the people settled in the land of Israel by the Assyrians after the captivity of the ten tribes. They intermarried with the Israelites who had been left behind, and their offspring went under the general name of Samaritans. Originally they were idolaters, but having received some instruction in the knowledge of the true God they claimed to be worshipping Him, though of course, in an ignorant and superstitious way. (Compare 2 Kings 17:24-41).

The refusal of their co-operation by the Jews was proper, but it brought serious and prolonged trouble to them (vv. 4, 5). (Compare John 4:9).

The nature of this trouble is shown in verse six, where "Ahasuerus" is another name for the famous Xerxes, king of Persia. The conspirators continued in the next reign also (vv. 7-16). "The great and noble Asnapper" (v. 10) is another name for Esar-Haddon, met with before, who transported these foreigners into the waste cities of Samaria after the captivity of Israel. The result of their efforts is shown in verses 23 and 24. "Darius" there spoken of is sometimes known as "Darius Hystaspes," and was the second of that name since Cyrus sat on the throne of Persia. The work ceased for about fifteen years.

5. Renewal of the Work, cc. 5, 6.

Do not omit to read Zechariah at this point, and observe the effect of his words, heaven-endued, upon the leaders (vv. 1, 2). The men of verse three, like those of chapter four, verses seven and eight, were satraps or viceroyes of Persia set over provinces in proximity to Judah, who felt it their duty thus to inquire and protest. Verse four seems a mistranslation, and probably means that they inquired of the Jews instead of the reverse (see v. 10).

The Darius of chapter five acted differently from any of his predecessors. "Achmetha" (v. 2) is better known as "Ecbatana," the summer residence of the early kings of Persia. The work of the temple may proceed (v. 7), the Persian satraps are to assist (vv. 8-10), penalties are to follow interference (vv. 11, 12), and henceforth the turbulent Samaritans had better take care!

The work is ended (v. 15). Dr. Lightfoot says the foundation was laid April, 536 B. C., and the completion accomplished February 21, 515 B. C. The dedicatory feast is held with joy. Note the explanatory reason (v. 22). God receives the glory.

Questions on the Lesson.

1. What world-empire succeeded the Assyrian or Babylonian?
2. What prophet is used of God for the return of His people to Palestine?
3. Have you read Isaiah 44 and 45?
4. Are you familiar with Daniel 2?
5. What distinction belonged to Zerubabel?

6. How many people of all classes returned in the first company?
7. What was the first religious work they set about?
8. What prophets, whose written works have come down to us, belong to this period?
9. Give the history of the Samaritans, so-called.
10. How many kings of Persia were named "Darius"?

LITTLE SERMONS.

By C. F. Ladd.

Race suicide—air ship contests.
 "Chin music" often makes discord.
 Suing for peace—getting a divorce.
 Many a wife is the speaker of the house.
 "On the fence" may really mean on the "hedge."
 The folks who lack ability often possess vitality.
 If you lead your children to the devil he will likely keep them.
 The man who is seeking a higher plane in life might try the aeroplane.
 Aviators are bound to keep on friendly terms. They can't afford to fall out.

GALVESTON GULF BIBLE CONFERENCE.

This conference was held in the First Presbyterian Church of Galveston, Tex., Nov. 19-26. The topic "New Life in Christ Jesus," was discussed through several days by Dr. C. I. Scofield, of New York, and the exposition of the book of Revelation was carried through the same days by Dr. A. C. Gaebelein, also of New York. Some other cities of Texas and the South are inspired by the success of this conference to arrange for similar conferences.

GOLF VERSUS THE CHURCH.

Rev. E. B. Stafford, D. D., superintendent of the Presbyterian City Missions in Chicago, speaking before the Methodist preachers of Chicago, Nov. 20, according to a newspaper report, said that among well-to-do persons who are moving into the suburbs of the north shore, that an extremely small percentage ever attends worship on Sunday. A canvass shows that only between 10 and 15 per cent of the persons who live in the suburbs between Evanston and Highland Park ever attend church of any denomination. It seems as if a greater part of them pass Sunday playing golf or sitting on the beach.

My Spikenard.

By Carrie Judd Montgomery.

I had a tiny box, a precious box
 Of human love—my spikenard of great price:
 I kept it close within my heart of hearts
 And scarce would lift the lid lest it should waste
 Its perfume on the air. One day a strange Deep sorrow came with crushing weight, and fell Upon my costly treasure, sweet and rare,
 And brake the box to atoms. All my heart
 Rose in dismay and sorrow at this waste,
 But as I mourned, behold a miracle
 Of grace divine. My human love was changed
 To Heaven's own, and poured in healing streams
 On other broken hearts, while soft and clear
 A voice above me whispered, "Child of Mine,
 With comfort wherewith thou art comforted,
 From this time forth, go comfort other lives,
 And thou shalt know blest fellowship with Me
 Whose broken heart of love hath healed the world."

The Birth of John the Baptist Foretold.

Luke 1:5-23.

Golden Text.—“Without faith it is impossible to please God.”—Heb. 11:6.

The Old Testament closes with a prophecy; the New Testament opens with the announcement of the fulfillment of that prophecy. Thus both Testaments are characterized in this lesson: The Old Testament, prophecy; the New Testament, fulfillment. It is clear from our Lord's own words that John the Baptist fulfilled this Old Testament prediction, Matt. 17:10-13. It may be that further fulfillment is still future, preceding Christ's second coming.

Our attention is first drawn to the persons through whom God fulfills His promise. Zacharias and Elizabeth were both righteous. By that is not meant that they were either sinless or perfect, no human being is that, but that they were parents whose whole heart, mind, and strength were dedicated to the will and service of God. Zacharias' unbelief shows that he was not sinless.

This is the kind of people through whom God is willing, and ready even today to fulfill His promises and bless the world—not through perfect people, but through those who are constantly striving after perfection. There is no limit to the blessings God will confer upon the world through us if only we will not touch the glory.

The glorious vision and message came to Zacharias when he was performing his duty. And so it is always. While shepherds watch their flocks the angel comes. We must not forget that Elizabeth also, in her modest, humble seclusion, was used to bless the world just as much as Zacharias, who was exercising a priestly function so high, that the opportunity came to a priest but once in a lifetime. God chooses the weak things as well as the great things. D. L. Moody, the uneducated shoe clerk, as well as Paul, the scholar. So Isaac was a quiet man and dwelt in tents.

The next thing to which our attention is drawn is the content of the prophecy. First, it concerns a child. Zacharias and Elizabeth were childless. It is no sin to be childless provided that no law of nature is violated.

It is a sad thing to be childless. At least it was so considered in Old Testament days. Would that it were considered so today! A revival of the mother instinct is needed.

This child was to be an extraordinary child—well, every mother's child is wonderful! This child was to go before the Lord and prepare His way, just as your child may follow after the Lord and walk in His steps, a worthy career for John, and your child, and every child. Why should we not hold this ideal constantly before childhood?

Upon the promised child was to rest the vow of the Nazarite. That meant two things: absolute prohibition from intoxicants, and entire dedication to God. Can you think of any two things more desirable for your child? These parents had an ideal before them for their child, and that was a tremendous help. Do you bring your child up at random? Start today with an ideal. Let it be high; let it be the highest, even Christ.

The mission of John the Baptist was to be performed by the aid of the Holy Spirit. Is there not a subtle contrast here between the prohibition of intoxicating liquor, and the filling with the Spirit? Just as the person under the influence of intoxicating liquor is governed and controlled by such spirits, so the Christian worker is to become so filled with the Spirit that every part of him—intellect, sensibilities, will, are under the Spirit's control. This spiritual equipment is what is needed for Christian workers today; “Not by might nor by power, but by Spirit, saith the Lord.”

Because the Baptist was spirit-filled, he was enabled to turn the hearts of the children towards their fathers. Doubtless the Jews had become tainted with the idolatry of the surrounding nations so that they had to some extent forsaken the faith of the fathers. Spirit-filled men are needed today to turn the hearts of the present generation back towards the faith once delivered unto the saints.

Every Christian has the Holy Spirit; just as Egypt has the river Nile; but every Christian does not have the fullness of the Spirit, any more than Egypt always has the overflow of the Nile; and just as the overflow of the Nile means a bountiful harvest to Egypt, so the infilling and overflowing of the Spirit in the believer means a bountiful harvest of fruit unto eternal life.

It is strange, is it not, that Zacharias should doubt in the presence of the angelic visitor! Surely one should believe in the presence of such a sign as this. There are people today who say that they would believe if they could hear a voice from the other shore speaking to them, or if one should come to them from the other life. Did the Jews believe even though Lazarus came back to them from the dead? No. If we believe not the Scriptures, neither would we be persuaded in the presence of so supernatural a sign as this.

After this vision, Zacharias continued his ministrations. No vision of God should unfit us for practical, daily living. On the contrary, it should do for us what it did for the disciples as they came down from that wonderful vision on that Transfiguration Mount into the valley where the needy multitudes were, make us more able and ready to help those who are in need.

The Birth of John the Baptist.

Luke 1:57-80.

Golden Text.—"Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, for He hath visited and redeemed his people."—Luke 1:66.

Another fulfilled prophecy added to last week's lesson. "Hath God said, and shall He not do it?" Heaven and earth may pass away, but one jot or tittle of His promises shall never fail. Strange that God should remember his promise to a single individual amidst the infinite multitude of the sons of men! Yet he does. He marks the fall of even a sparrow. And so according to God's promise, the child was born.

At the proper time, the child was dedicated to God in the temple. These righteous parents recognized that the child was God's gift. All godly parents should. Do we? Have we presented our children in dedication to the Lord in the church? The first place these parents took their child to was the church. Is this true of us?

The naming of the child is interesting. John means, "gracious gift of God." Zacharias thought of God in naming the child. What did you think of when you named your child? Did you give it a Christian name, or that of some heathenish, godless novelist? Does the name stand for anything? Is it an inspiration to the child? Does it express your hope and faith in God?

There are times when, in order to please God, we must differ with our friends. So it happened in the naming of John. Out of respect for Zacharias, and because of his advanced age, and knowing that he had no other child, his friends proposed naming the child after him, probably to perpetuate the family name. But already God had announced the name. The angel said that the child's name should be John. These godly parents stood fast by the Word of God, irrespective of the opinion of even well-meaning friends.

A striking question was asked: "What manner of child shall this be?" What strange thoughts must have been passing through the minds of these parents at this time as they recalled the angel's message and the predicted future of this child! As Zacharias looked into the unconscious face of his child he saw the prophet of the Most High.

Parents, what possibilities do you see in your child as you look into its face? That little life is for you to mold. To some extent you can tell what manner of child he is to be. Teacher, what do you see in the child? Just a bundle of nerves to be kept quiet, or the possibilities of a great life?

Zacharias' song is full of victorious and prophetic hope; it is itself a fulfillment of a prophecy: God hath visited His people. For over two thousand years the righteous in Israel had looked forward to the fulfillment of this prophecy.

The advent of this child brought joy, not only to Zacharias and his wife, but to their neighbors. It is a great gift to be able to rejoice with those that do rejoice, as did these friends of Zacharias and Elizabeth. It is much harder to rejoice with those who are successful than to mourn with those who mourn. Too often the prosperity of others arouses jealousy, and we rather rejoice in their failure than in their success.

The birth of this child brought forth this hymn of praise to God for His goodness. Did you ever thank God for your children? Who gave them to you? Children are the heritage of the Lord. How much would you take for them? All the wealth in the world could not buy them. Nor are you asked to sell them; but you are asked to think of the One who gave them to you. There are your children: Can they see, when so many have been born blind? Can they hear, when so many have been born deaf? Can they romp, when so many have been born lame? Can they speak when so many have been born dumb? Oh ye parents who have sweet children on earth—and it may be in heaven—does not their presence cause you to burst out in praise to God?

Another thing that led to this song of praise was the fact that Zacharias was filled with the Spirit. Joy and gladness are always associated with the Spirit: "Be filled with the Spirit; speaking to yourselves in spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." The Spirit-filled man is the happy man. Are you a happy Christian? If not, why not?

The song of Zacharias gives us a model for our hymns and spiritual songs.

The most prominent note in this song is that of salvation: From our enemies, that we may be enabled to live in peace and quietness; from sin, that we may be able to be constantly well-pleasing to God; from slavish fear in our service to God, in order that we may render service as sons, and not as servants or slaves; unto holiness, that our life may be one that is spent, not merely in overcoming the sins of our nature, but also in the cultivation of Christian graces.

What a description we have in the song of Zacharias of the deliverance which Christ brings to every soul that trusts Him: Deliverance from Satan, from death, from sin, from the world, from every enemy; a protection and covering from the righteous vengeance of God; freedom from the consequences of sin; the wonderful promise that some day—even now in a measure—we shall serve God with true holiness and righteousness in joy and blessing for evermore.

Luke 2:1-20.

Golden Text.—"For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord."—Luke 2:11.

Almost twenty centuries ago, in an obscure village in Palestine, an event occurred which has had more influence upon the history of the human race than any other event since time began. A child was born—not an unusual event surely. He was no child of distinguished parents, nor a prospective ruler of a world's empire. He was born in a stable, and cradled in a manger. And yet around that lowly crib and humble birth, the life, thoughts, and love of millions have from that day to this been centered. During these two thousand years many noble births have been registered, but none so great as this. Emperors, monarchs, and mighty men have lived and died, and are forgotten; nations have risen and waned; but the birth of the Christ child is more influential in this day than on the first birthday of our age twenty centuries ago.

The announcement of Christ's birth was made, by angels. What more fitting accompaniment could there be to such an august event! How interested angels are in the welfare of mankind! How gladly they told the Christmas story to a handful of poor shepherds! How free from pride they were! They were not content that one of their number should tell the story—they all broke out in that great Christmas anthem.

Do we believe in angels any more? We used to. We used to sing, "There are angels hovering round." If we believe the Bible, we still believe in the ministry of angels.

Onward we go, for still we hear them singing;

Angels sing on, your faithful watches keeping.

Sing us sweet fragments of the song above.

The announcement was made to a small band of shepherds. No angelic host went to the Sanhedrin, or to the palace of Herod and broke the news of the birth of the Christ-child. Is there not a lesson here? Does not God have special regard for the lowly and the humble? Hath not God chosen the weak things to confound the mighty? If angels were willing to preach to a few farmers, should the preacher be ashamed of ministering to a small and humble people, or the Sunday-school teacher to a small class?

The scholars of the land were also notified of Christ's birth. The Scripture does not say: "Not any wise men are called," but "not many." It is a mistake to say that religion is good enough for women and children, but not for strong, brainy men. The brainiest men of the ages have been Christian men: Gladstone, the great statesman; Blackstone, the great lawyer; Herschel, the great scientist—these and many others, too numerous to name, have been Christians. So it has come to pass that the wise men of the east have been followed by the wise men of the west, and they all have bowed at this manger. The reason why every university must have its chapel is because brainy men must have a place to worship.

That the birth of Christ was mysterious and miraculous need not disturb us. How Christ's body was prepared, how the divine and human could become one—who can tell? We do not even understand our own birth, let alone His. If ever anything of a miraculous nature should take place, when should it be if not now when the King of all laws is coming into the world? Let us be careful lest in denying the Virgin birth, we challenge the purity of the Virgin's life.

The birth of Christ was the coming of God to and in man; not that God had never come to man before, for He had. But He had come only as a sojourner. In Christ He came to abide. His name is "Immanuel, God with us." Whatever else the incarnation may mean, it certainly means that God took our nature and became as one of us, He came unto His own.

The birth of Christ brings to us good tidings of great joy. If the angels sang, should not we? He came to save not angels, but men. The first note of this angelic song is a note of gladness, and song has characterized Christianity all through the centuries.

This birth in Bethlehem shows God's attitude toward men. God has good will toward men. He is not the hard, severe judge that men so often wrongly picture Him to be. Sinner, you have cursed God, but He has not cursed you back; you have lifted your hands against Him, but He has not destroyed you. He has thoughts of kindness, and of love toward you. If you have wrong thoughts of God, let them die away in the music of that first Christian anthem, "Good will toward men."

The Christmas story brings to us also a Saviour. Jesus Christ was born with reference to sin. He was the only man that ever was born with reference to that great fact. Other great men were teachers and reformers—He alone could save men from their sins. "His name shall be called Jesus for He shall save His people from their sins." This is good tidings of great joy to a sin-stricken world. If Christ the Lord cannot save you from your sins, no one else can.

He is a personal Saviour—unto you He was born; He is a mighty Saviour—He is Christ, the Anointed, the One to whom all power is given. When you lean upon Christ, you lean upon no uncommissioned Redeemer, but One in whom is vested all the authority of God.

The Presentation in the Temple.

Luke 2:22-39.

Golden Text.—"For mine eyes have seen Thy salvation, which Thou hast prepared before the face of all people."—Luke 2:30, 31.

This lesson concerns the matter of the presentation of the Christ-child in the temple forty days after His birth. Ever since the redemption of the first-born of Israel on that dark night in Egypt, when the destroying angel passed through the land and smote all the first-born of the Egyptians, the first-born son of every Hebrew family belonged to God. As a substitute for all the first-born, the tribe of Levi was chosen later to act as priests. By this, however, Hebrew parents were not exempt from the presentation of their first-born to God. By reason of the choosing of the Levites, the first-born son of the family was released from priestly service on the payment of certain redemption money.

Joseph and Mary obeyed this law and presented the Christ-child in the temple. In thus presenting the child, these parents realized the great truth, that our children belong to God, and are but loaned to us. Christian parents should imitate the example of Joseph and Mary, not only in realizing that children are the heritage of the Lord, but also in presenting them publicly to the Lord.

Mary also made a personal offering as a token of her appreciation of the goodness of God. It was a small gift, but it was the best that she, in her humble circumstances, could make, and therefore, was as acceptable to God as any offering of much higher value. Would it not be a good thing to celebrate the birth of your child by making a special offering to the cause of God? A parent, whose child died some years ago, is in the habit every year on the anniversary of his child's birth, of sending a birthday gift to an orphan home.

We have a wonderful description of the work of Christ in this lesson. He is the Light of the world; not of a nation. Every nation is to feel the effect of His coming. On one occasion, when a Japanese convert to Christianity was summoned before the magistrates and called upon to give a reason why he had forsaken his national religion, he was told that Japan had religion enough and did not want any more; that Confucianism was good enough for scholars, and Buddhism for the masses. The Japanese convert replied, "If Confucianism is an all-sufficient religion, why is it, since the founder lived thousands of years before Christ and taught during a long life, that it has not spread beyond China and Japan? And if Buddhism is an all-sufficient religion started by Buddha thousands of years before Christ, and taught by him through a long life, how is it, that it has not spread beyond India, China, and Japan? If Christianity is a bad religion, how is it, since its Founder only taught three years, and was put to death when he was thirty-three years old, that it has spread over all the world?"

Jesus is the desire of all nations. There is no satisfaction to be found in any religion outside of Him. Even Simeon representing the Old Testament, did not find full satisfaction until he had seen the Christ-child. The Old Testament itself is a book of longing and expectation, which did not find satisfaction until Christ, the theme of the New Testament, came into the world.

The salvation of the world centers in Christ. He is the only person who can save the world from its sin. The world had had reformers, scholars, philosophers and philanthropists, before Christ, but it had never had a Saviour. Jesus Christ is the only person born into the world with reference to the sins of men.

We may learn a lesson of what it means to have faith in Christ from the words of Simeon. He had seen no mighty works wrought by Christ; no miracles had been performed in his sight; had heard no words of kingly dignity from the lips of Jesus; Christ had pressed upon this good man's heart no claims to Messiahship—and yet with the eye of faith he saw all these things in the infant Jesus. Centuries have rolled by since Simeon lived and died, and Jesus Christ has been proven beyond all reasonable doubt to be and to do all that Simeon in prophecy claimed for Him. And yet we may ask, "Do we believe in the Christ of the past, as Simeon believed in the Christ of the future?"

Christ is a revealer of men's hearts. A man's character is judged by his attitude toward Christ. We see in the character of Christ absolute goodness, love, truth, honor, purity. To see these in Christ, and not to love and choose Him, is to reveal a state of heart which, like that of Gallio, cares for none of these things.

Simeon was satisfied when he had seen the Christ. We are often asked, "Have you seen the sights in Rome, in Greece, in Italy?" And if we reply in the negative, it is hinted that we have missed a great part of life. But there is a sight more important than any material vision, and that is the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. Have you seen this? Have you seen the face of Jesus? Have you seen the glory of God in the person of Jesus? Have you seen in Him your own personal Saviour? If you have, then all of life has a new meaning and eternity a great reward.

February 4.

The Wise Men Led by the Star.

Golden Text.—"Look unto me and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God, and there is none else."—Isa. 45:22.

So quietly had Jesus made His appearance into the world that His arrival was unknown in Jerusalem until the wise men came from the East. Perhaps the shepherds had not told their tale of the heavenly vision, or perhaps they had told it but it had been unheeded or ridiculed. So as the morning star still rises without noise, and as the seed shoots up and the flower opens in silence, so was it with the coming of Christ, the Rose of Sharon, and the Bright and Morning Star. No thunder awoke the hills of Palestine; no trumpet peal went through its city; no herald went before Him; no royal salute greeted Him. His mother and the chosen few of the inner circle who had witnessed the wondrous birth, made no proclamation of it, they received all in silent, happy faith, and pondered these things in their hearts.

Even so does Christ today make His advent into many a heart. So silently does He oftentimes come that one scarcely is able to tell the day or the hour when Christ was born in his life. The Kingdom of God does not always come with observation.

The inquiry of the wise men suggests a deep interest in Christ. Herod made no such inquiry save in jealousy; Jerusalem was not particularly interested in the subject; but a very few in Israel cared anything about it. How like conditions today! What little interest men manifest in Christ! There is interest in politics, business, personal welfare, philanthropic work, and even in church work, but little real interest in Christ. These three heathen men showed much more interest in Christ than His own countrymen did. So it is today. The heathen are deeply interesting themselves in the very story which scarcely moves our hearts.

The wise men confessed their ignorance. The truly wise man is never above asking questions. Pride keeps many people from Christ. Because, falsely, we say, "we see," our blindness remains with us. If we would find the Saviour, if we would know the forgiveness of sin, let us admit our ignorance and our need of a guide; let us cry to God to help us. It is better to ask God to lead us than to trust in our own reason. We seldom wander when on our knees.

The wise men had a motive for their search, they came to worship Him. And that is just the reason why they found Him. Herod could not find Him, nor could the chief priests and scribes, for the simple reason that they did not want to worship Him. No seeker will find Christ unless the motive of his seeking be that he may be saved by Him, and from henceforth live for and serve Him. A seeking sinner and a seeking Saviour will soon meet, and the meeting will be a blessed one. Have you found Christ? If not, why not?

"A very old Scotch lady, near the end of life, was visited by a young minister. Her well thumbed Bible, her cruse of oil, as she called it, from which she drew the bread of life, lay on a chair by her bedside. The minister said to her, 'Well, Nancy, after all your praying and watching and waiting, and hopes and expectation, what if God should suffer you to be lost forever?' The faithful old Christian raised herself on her elbow, laid her hand on her precious old Bible, and, turning with an earnest look towards the minister, said, 'And is that a' ye know about the Bible, mon?' Her eyes sparkled with heavenly brightness, and she continued, 'God would have the greater loss. Poor Nancy would only lose her soul. That would be a great loss indeed, but God would lose His honor and character. Haven't I hung my soul on His exceeding great and precious promises?'"

The wise men received encouragement in their search for Christ. They saw His star, which led them through the desert until they found their place by Christ's side. So will it always be with those who are really seeking Christ. There is a light that others may not see, a hand that others may not perceive, a voice that others may not hear, all these are visible and audible to those who by faith are seeking Christ. The church, the Bible, the preaching of the Gospel, exemplary Christians' lives, inward impulses, these may be stars that light the way to Him. The wise men did not consider it enough that they had seen the star. They continued their journey until they saw the Christ. Is there not danger of our seeing the church, the Bible, the sacraments, and yet miss Him? It would have been too bad for them to have come as far as Jerusalem and then to have given up without seeing Him, just as it would be too bad for us to have used all these spiritual aids, and yet not have found the Saviour.

As soon as these earnest seekers found Christ, they worshiped Him. What a glorious vision they had as they looked upon the Christ-child! They saw that which alone is worth the seeing; that which fills and gladdens the soul when seen and known; that which righteous men of old desired to see, but saw only in glimpses and at intervals; that for the seeing of which Moses prayed so earnestly; that to which the eye of every creature should turn in longing anticipation; that which everything in heaven and in earth is intended to reveal; that for the beholding of which our eyes were made, and for the appreciation of which our minds were formed, Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and the Saviour of the world. To see anything less than this in the Christ-child, is to miss the very heart of the vision.

They worshiped Him. They could not help it; nor can any man when once he has seen the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. It was said of Gladstone that when one was ushered into his presence, he was constrained to bow his head or raise his hat. So those who behold Christ must worship Him. Who can behold the sun without being dazzled? Who can behold deity without worshiping Him?

EVERYTHING IN GOD.

One of the Lord's people, who had been rich, was asked how he could bear his reduced state so happily; to which he replied, "When I was rich, I had God in everything; and now, that I am poor, I have everything in God."

THE GOSPEL IN THE WORLD

EDWARD A. MARSHALL, Editor.

The Presbyterian Home Mission Society is doing a noble work among our Indians. The denomination now has 108 churches, among fifty tribes in nineteen states, with an enrollment of nearly 7,000 members. There are 57 other stations where meetings are held. One hundred and four Sunday-schools have been organized with 7,000 scholars.

The census report of the prison population of our country is somewhat startling. Last year it numbered 109,311 while the commitments for the year were 462,530. The United States has the unenviable distinction of having more prisons and courts and prisoners than any country in the world, and eighty-five per cent of the crime is attributable to strong drink!—Advocate and Guardian.

Japan once struggled to gain military control of Korea, and got it. Now her people are struggling for religious control. Rev. Watase, a Japanese, has resigned his pastorate at Kobe, Japan, to superintend a five year campaign among Koreans. At the same time Japanese Buddhists are planning to establish thirty-five temples and a Buddhist middle school in Korea to save that country from losing their religion. Shall Christianity or Buddhism win the old Hermit Kingdom?

The John J. Kennedy estate in New York proved a bonanza to the Presbyterian Church. The total of his bequests to the Boards of Foreign Missions, Home Missions and Church Erection amounts to $8,790,000 or $2,930,000 for each. This is almost three-quarters of a million more than the original estimate when the will was probated. All three of these boards have already received more than two and one-half millions, and may now expect nearly $350,000 apiece additional. The College Board also will receive an increase, raising its original estimate from $750,000 to $975,000. The share of the Church Extension Committee of the Presbytery of New York is only a few thousands short of $2,000,000. The American Bible Society gets $975,000 and the Presbyterian Hospital a million and a half.—The Advance.

Nearly 20,000,000 copies of the Scriptures, in whole or in part, are issued annually by the nearly thirty Bible societies of America, Great Britain and Europe. Yet with all this output there are over a billion people in the world who have never read a line of God's revealed truth which he sent to save and instruct them.

The Christian people of America little realize what volcanic upheavals are taking place in conservative old China when it casts away its long used drug, opium, and severs its much cherished cue. Let the United States government pass an iron clad law that in the next five years all the manufacture and sale of liquor and cigarettes shall cease; then let the women of the land abandon "following the fashions", and America will awaken to the fact that the Chinese are a people of strong character and are accomplishing heroic things.

Not a few fields have recently experienced discouraging things. Elder O. E. Davis was reported to have been murdered by polygamist Indians in British Guiana; atrocities have been committed by natives living along the Amazon; famine and war have stalked abroad in China; cholera has raged in Syria and Turkey, while the crimes of the Turks in Tripoli make all the world wish that their military and religious rule may soon be broken throughout the world.

The Canadian Baptist gives the following interesting facts regarding the work of the Baptist denomination in foreign lands: "There are today, under the auspices of Baptist missionary societies, 4,760 missionaries at work in 6,213 mission stations, and a membership of 348,000. In the schools conducted by our missionaries there is an enrolment of 322,000 pupils. As a denomination we are laboring under twenty-two flags, and our missionaries are speaking seventy-seven different languages."

The Navajo Indians of New Mexico and Arizona now have a portion of the Bible to read in their own language as a result of the work of Rev. Alexander Black. One can realize something of the difficulties in this language when they attempt to learn the conjugation of its verbs which have over 1,500 forms. These Indians on their isolated reservations are quite shut away from association with the white man and might become a nation of Christians if sufficient workers were willing to carry them the Gospel. They number about 20,000.

Things that cheer us are occurring all over the world. Spiritual awakenings are reported from West Africa among one of the Cannibal tribes; inalienable rights are being accorded to the women of some Mohammedan lands; toleration is being given to missionaries in Madagascar; the Indian Government is dealing death blows to the horrible practice of Hinduism in dedicating girls to lives of shame in its temples; and Bolivia has at last instituted civil marriage in opposition to the Catholic priest who had compelled all ceremonies to be performed by them, to be legal.

There are said to be 350,000 lumbermen in the woods of Canada and even more in the forests of the North, West, and South, of the United States. Few men are more isolated and inaccessible, which, however, has a great advantage for they are so far removed from saloons and other places of vice that they welcome even a preacher, because he brings them news from the outside world. These men gather in their log houses at night as there is no other place in the forests to go. It is then the missionary has his golden opportunity to preach Christ. More men, adapted to work among these men, are wanted in various sections of North America.

MR. W. E. BLACKSTONE IN CHINA.

[We are very glad to give our readers a portion of an interesting letter received from Mr. W. E. Blackstone written in Nanking, China, October 6, 1911. Mr. Blackstone is entering his 71st year and speaks of the past year as being one of the most fruitful in his long life.—Editors.]

He says:

"I could not be more grateful with the outcome, thus far, of this Distribution Fund Work to which my time and energies are principally given. I am quite sure that the Lord has especially guided in the preparation of the Scripture literature which we are distributing, principally small portions of Scripture which we term Portionettes, with illustrations and explanations. Each one has also a notice of the whole Scripture and where to get it. The missionaries in all quarters are heartily approving these, and say that they are especially adapted to the Chinese, and the latter receive them most cordially.

I have just had to put new editions in the press, totaling about fourteen and one half million copies. I expect that the rest of the Fund will enable me to put out from twenty to thirty million copies, and from the present indications I shall be able to complete the Fund in two years more, instead of three, making five years altogether as at first expected. This has been a strenuous task and sometimes it has seemed as though I could not carry it through, but the Lord has upheld me and though I realize the weakness of body, incident to the climate, environment, and age, I still have confidence that the Lord will let me finish the work. I am grateful for the assurance that I am upheld by your prayers.

Mr. Tremain has arrived and is now giving valuable assistance. My new Advisory Committee here in China are a most valuable accession to my work, and I have with their advice, completed very satisfactory arrangements with the Bible societies, so that there seems nothing to hinder us all working together in harmony for the widest distribution of the Word of God which our united funds will provide.

The Lord has also enabled me to get out a most excellent edition of Jesus is Coming in Chinese. The translation was made by Rev. W. C. Longden, and was revised and edited by Rev. E. W. Baller, one of the best Mandarin scholars in China. We have printed ten thousand copies and they are going out to the native Christians very rapidly. I have also issued an edition of nine thousand copies in Dano-Norwegian, and have a translation in Korean under way."

Mr. Blackstone believes that the political agitations, rebellions, and revolutions in China will tend to the dissemination of the Gospel in that Empire, and that the movements about the Mediterranean Sea are but the fulfillment of the prophecies of the Scripture.

He represents the famine conditions in China to be appalling, especially in the valley of the Yang-Tze river, and reports missionary work about Nanking to be flourishing.

He cares, our Father cares!

God cares!

The words so sweet!

My lips and life shall e'er repeat,

My burdens all left at His feet—

God cares, He always cares!

THE FORWARD LOOK.

Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee. Prov. 4:25.

"Eyes to the front; forward!" is the order with which each new day should begin. Whatever the past has held it is past . . . All the wisdom and all the power of all the ages cannot give us back even yesterday for our re-living; it is as hopelessly gone as that first far-away morning in Eden. The old times, whatever they may have been, are our times no more. St. Paul was right when he said: "Forgetting those things which are behind . . . I press on." There is sanity and religion, courage, faith and fresh strength in the marching order, resolutely given for each new morning: "Eyes to the front, forward!"—J. R. Miller

"SOMEBODY ELSE."

Perhaps we think we are pretty busy people, but we are idle compared with a poor slave whose name is "Somebody Else." Whenever an awkward bit of work has to be done, it is sure to be left for her.

At a meeting, if the speaker asks for a good collection, people hope that "Somebody Else" may be able to give more than they "can afford at present."

If collecting cards or missionary boxes is proposed, a hesitating voice says, "I am always glad to do what I can; but as for collecting, I must leave that for 'Somebody Else.'"

If a bit of practical self-denial is proposed, there are excellent reasons given why it should refer solely to "Somebody Else."

Now and then, when a meeting is arranged for, so many persons stay at home "to leave a seat for 'Somebody Else'" that the poor creature would need a thousand bodies to fill all the reserved seats.

If a ringing call to go to the perishing heathen is heard, ten to one "Somebody Else" is put forward as the very one for the work.

Just sit down for five minutes and think. Can you expect this unfortunate "Somebody Else" to do everything? How can she give and collect and deny self and attend meetings and go to the heathen for the hundreds of people who pass their duties on to her?

Now, no matter what others do, you let "Somebody Else" have a rest. Give her a well-earned holiday, and every time you feel inclined to leave anything for her to do, do it yourself.—The Round Table.

REVIVE US.

Revival, correctly speaking, can be only among God's people. You cannot revive a "dead" person. There must be "some" life before revival is possible. Hence the unsaved cannot be revived; they need to be raised from the dead. It is the living who cry, "Revive us again."

CONTINUE STEADFAST.

Let no inference from the blessed truth of Christ's "ability to keep" beguile us into slackness in watching, praying, adoring, reading, thinking, believing in secret. Rather let us all the more practice diligence over the secret means of grace, because of a joyful recognition of the mighty present reality of grace—that is to say, of "God working in us."—Handley C. G. Moule.

A SINGLE SIN.

However apparently trifling, however hidden in some obscure corner of our consciousness—a sin which we do not intend to renounce—is enough to render real prayer impracticable. A course of action not wholly upright and honorable; feelings not entirely kind and loving; habits not spotlessly chaste and temperate—any of these are impassable obstacles. If we know of a kind act which we might, but do not intend to, perform; if we be aware that our moral health requires the abandonment of some pleasure which yet we do not intend to abandon, here is cause enough for the loss of all spiritual power.—Selected.

THE ARTIST'S SECRET.

A story is told of an artist who became famous because of his ability to put into his pictures reds and crimsons of a hue no other artist could copy. He held the secret locked within his own breast. He was working on what he told his friends would be his masterpiece. The final touches were being put upon it. His friends called one morning, and no voice answering their knock, they pushed their way into his studio.

There was the masterpiece, and stretched upon the floor before it was the artist—dead! The examining physician said: "He has hardly a pint of blood in his whole body!"

The truth was out. He had mixed his own blood with the paint and had thus made the unexplainable crimson.—Alex. M. Damon.

A LESSON IN GIVING.

A good story is told by a Methodist minister. He says that in one of his charges a good man regularly gave every Sabbath $5 for the support of the church. A poor widow was also a member of the same church, who supported herself and six children by washing. She was as regular as the rich man in making her offering of 5 cents per week, which was all she could spare from her scant earnings. One day the rich man came to the minister and said the poor woman ought not to pay anything, and that he would pay the 5 cents for her every week. The pastor called to tell her of the offer, which he did in a considerate manner. Tears came to the woman's eyes as she replied: "Do they want to take from me the comfort I experience in giving to the Lord? Think how much I owe to Him. My health is good, my children keep well, and I receive so many blessings that I feel I could not live if I did not make my little offering to Jesus each week."—Christian Observer.

WOODROW WILSON ON THE BIBLE.

I am sorry for the men who do not read the Bible every day. I wonder why they deprive themselves of the strength and of the pleasure. It is one of the most singular books in the world, for every time you open it some old text that you have read a score of times suddenly beams with a new meaning. Evidently the mood and the thought of that day, bred by the circumstances that you cannot analyze, has suddenly thrown its light upon that page and upon that passage, and there springs out upon the page to you something that you never saw lie upon it before. There is no other book that I know of of which this is true; there is no other book that yields its meaning so personally, that seems to fit itself so intimately to the very spirit that is seeking its guidance. * *

The beauty about the Bible is that it is the most wholesome, the most perfectly symmetrical, the least morbid picture of life and motives of men in the world. Almost every other book has a little streak of morbidness in it, but this book is wholesome and sweet and natural and naif from cover to cover. Here are no dull moralizings; here is the life of man set forth as it was simply lived from generation to generation.—From an address before Sunday-school workers, at Trenton, N. J., Oct. 1, 1911.

NOTES AND SUGGESTIONS

The Northwestern Bible and Missionary Training School, Minneapolis, Minn., has called as its head Rev. James O. Buswell.

The Cook Co. (Ill.) S. S. Association has set out to increase the membership of the adult Bible classes in the county at least 50 per cent by Jan. 1, 1913.

Mrs. Theodore L. Cuyler, widow of the well known pastor of the Lafayette Avenue Presbyterian Church, Brooklyn, celebrated her 80th birthday anniversary on Nov. 23 last.

Marion Lawrance, general secretary of the International S. S. Association, returned to Chicago on the 13th ult., after a three-months tour of England, Scotland and Wales on Sunday-school matters.

Dr. C. I. Scofield and Pastor F. E. Marsh expect to visit Great Britain during April and May, 1912. Their work will be that of conducting Bible conferences lasting from two to seven days in a place.

The Bowery Mission, New York City, celebrated its thirty-second anniversary Nov. 8, with its principal guest, Miss Fanny Crosby, the hymn writer, who is 91 years old. She was one of the first workers in the mission. In years gone by she attended every annual meeting.

Bible class D of the Third Presbyterian Church, Chicago, the pioneer of men's adult Bible classes, held a special service recently celebrating the accession to the class of its one thousandth member. The class was organized in 1874 and has been taught continuously by its present teacher, Miss Anna E. Wingo.

London, Nov. 20.—The sale of the Huth library at Sothebys furnished a fresh sensation today when a Mazarin Bible fetched $29,000. Bernard Quaritch opened the bidding at $10,000. The next offer was $15,000, and this was followed by bids rising $2,500 each time, Mr. Quaritch taking the Bible at double the price obtained for this copy when it was last sold at auction.—Daily Paper.

Dr. Wilbert W. White, president of the Bible Teachers Training School, New York, has prepared an outline diagram of Chinese history, running back to 3,000 B. C., with notes which link up that history with contemporaneous Bible history and Jewish epochs and events.

Dr. J. R. Miller, known the world over, especially for his helpful devotional writings, has on account of physical disabilities, resigned the senior pastorate of the St. Paul Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia. By unanimous vote he was made pastor-emeritus. Dr. Miller has been a busy pastor for forty-four years. He continues as editorial secretary for the Presbyterian Board of Publication.

Pastor D. J. Findlay, of The Tabernacle, St. George's Cross, Glasgow, Scotland, recently issued a brief report (dated Nov. 25, 1911) recording the main facts of the work with which he has been connected for thirty-seven years. Notwithstanding Mr. Findlay's enforced absence from Glasgow during much of the year—on account of ill health—the work in all departments has prospered.

W. P. Nicholson has spent the past year at St. George's Cross, and returns to America the beginning of January and will take up work with Mr. Hemminger as soloist.

A MODIFIED SUNDAY SCHEDULE.

Several Presbyterian churches in the south, and possibly elsewhere, also, are adopting a plan for holding two services only on each Lord's Day—a preaching service at 11 a. m., and a teaching service at 3:30 p. m., an earnest effort being made, with co-operation of all branches of the church, to secure at both services the largest possible attendance of both adults and children; more children at the preaching and more adults at the teaching, service.

One pastor, whose church has adopted such a schedule, says enthusiastically: "I believe that the average church that faithfully adheres to this plan will accomplish more in a real spiritual way than by the plan now in use in most churches."

THE METROPOLITAN (SPURGEON'S) TABERNACLE UNDER DR. DIXON'S LEADERSHIP.

Our readers will appreciate the two excerpts printed below concerning present conditions in one of the world's famous churches, under the able direction of Dr. A. C. Dixon.

[From The Daily Chronicle, London.]

There is something like a return of the old glory at Spurgeon's Metropolitan Tabernacle. Since Dr. Dixon assumed the pastorate of this famous shrine of Nonconformity, the vast church organization at Newington-butt seems to have been filled with new life, and a revival (in, it must be confessed, a new form) of the dogmatic theology of the founder is in progress—quietly, unostentatiously, and, strange to say, successfully. For, with the exception of an occasional and sporadic mission, "soul-saving" churches, in the "revival" meaning of the term, are now few and far between.

The modern spiritual renaissance is expressed in institutional movements, ethical inquiry, and social reform. These are supposed to symbolize the broad school of evangelicalism. But here, at Spurgeon's old battleground, is a movement that points to a triumph of old-fashioned, straight-laced ideas of conversion, regeneration, and spiritual culture. Everyone knows that the Tabernacle, since Spurgeon's death, has passed through the crucible of trial. At one time the voice of dissension was heard within its walls; now the "time of the singing of birds" has arrived. Empty pews saddened and depressed the fathers and elders of the church; now the stewards perspire in the aisles in their endeavors to pack new-comers into the space.

[From The Life of Faith.]

I watched the steady flow of people into the Metropolitan Tabernacle last Thursday evening. It was not a special occasion; there was no extraordinary attraction, as the world interprets the word; it was simply the second service in connection with Dr. Dixon's Bible School, and the prosaic subject was the Book of Genesis. That was all—no music, no pictures, no sensationalism, no attack upon existing conditions, no oratory, just a talk about the first book of the Bible, a book at which the clever folks of today are sneering. Quickly the spacious area filled up, then the audience overflowed into the lower balcony. It was an inspiration to see this great crowd assembled on a week-night after the labors and duties of the day to study the Word of God, and to extract from it some lessons for the trials and the struggles of life.

WORKERS AMONG BOYS, TAKE COURAGE!

A pathetic interest attaches to the recent death of Rev. Henry Nave, of Portland, Ore. His ministry—a very fruitful one—was in connection at different times with several pastorates, in the middle west and, last of all, at Portland. In his last charge he was deeply interested in a class of twenty-one boys from 14 to 16 years of age whom he had gathered into a club. He had arranged for reserved seats for the boys in the Gipsy Smith meeting of Nov. 14, and though he died two days before, the class attended the meeting as planned, and under Gipsy Smith's appeal all the boys yielded their lives to Christ.

PRAYER FOR NEW YORK.

The newest thing in the religious life of New York is a series of seven prayer meetings on successive Monday afternoons in the Marble Collegiate Reformed church, conducted by the clerical conference of the New York City Federation of Churches, for the express purpose of praying for New York. Dr. Jowett led the first meeting. It was truly a prayer service. With his eyes closed and every head bowed Dr. Jowett uttered the following "litany," with pauses in between for the ministers to obey him:

"Pray for all the prodigal population of the town.

"All in our churches who have become lukewarm and cold.

"All the formalists.

"All who took the first step in the Christian life yesterday.

"All teachers in the Sunday-school.

"All little children, that they may come to Christ at an early age.

"All ministers and Christian workers who are discouraged.

"All elders, deacons and other church officers.

"All missionaries, especially those in China."

A star does not talk, but its calm, steady beam shines down continually out of the sky, and is a benediction to many. Be like a star in your peaceful shining, and many will thank God for your life.—J. R. Miller.

BOOK NOTICES

Any book favorably mentioned below may be secured at price named from the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 826 La Salle Avenue, Chicago.

"Hymns Tried and True," by D. B. Towner, Mus. Doc., Director of the Music Course of The Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.

In this latest production of Dr. Towner we have what scientists would call a "reversion to type." "The Ideal Song and Hymn Book" which preceded it two years ago was a kind of meeting-place between the church hymnal and the evangelistic song-book, but in this the author has gone back to his old love, the evangelistic song-book. Presumably this was because there is more of a demand for the latter, as evangelists call for a small and inexpensive book.

The prolific nature of Dr. Towner's work is seen in the abounding number of new compositions by himself. We notice also Miss Johnson's name as the writer of the words of many of his hymns, who seems to have become his "Fanny Crosby." An author of her genius is an unspeakable boon to a composer of hymn tunes.

It is interesting that among the newer composers in the book are several former students of the Moody Bible Institute who sat under Dr. Towner's instruction—Sellers, Trowbridge, Wilson, Schuler, Goodale, Lytle, Babbitt, Woelzel, Reitz, Mrs. Henderson, and Mrs. Betts. Some of their songs are of marked merit, and it must be a comfort to their one-time preceptor that if he shall be promoted to the heavenly choir before the Lord comes, so many of his offspring in the realm of song may remain to gladden the daily walks of earth and sing men toward the kingdom.

Men Wanted, by Fred B. Smith.

The author of this latest word of the new movement for men is the campaign leader of the Men and Religion Movement. In his public speaking, Mr. Smith often conveys the impression of over emphasis; not so in these pages.

Beginning with a night's experience among the cheap lodging houses of New York, Mr. Smith discusses in a strong, vivid manner, such hackneyed subjects as Work, Honesty, Loyalty, Initiative, Perseverance, and Religion, four chapters to the last. The manner of treatment is not, however, by any means hackneyed.

Mr. Smith's definition of religion is: "That which Jesus Christ brought into this world, who came not simply to paint an ideal a little higher than the prophets, but by the Holy Spirit imparts divine life to the individual soul, working in it that which the Gospel calls salvation". His conclusion of the whole matter is that: "The superlative strength of every man's life is manifest in the hour when he deliberately sets himself to be a Christian."

Mr. Smith's world-encompassing experience and clear, fresh presentation, make the book worthy of thoughtful reading by all lovers of men.

Sunday-school Essentials, by Amos R. Wells.

Mr. Amos R. Wells is too widely known to call forth comment upon his style, objective, or ability to express himself. This book is in his happiest vein. It consists of thirty-nine essays upon nearly every possible angle of Sunday-school teaching, any one of which may be read in about two minutes, but the principles involved will take a lifetime to master.

The book abounds with concrete illustrations as to the "how" of conducting the teachers' and superintendents' work, drawn from living experiences, each suggestion having passed through the laboratory test.

"How Socrates taught," "Good cheer for discouraged teachers," or, "How to talk to children," are chapters any one of which is worth the price of the book and are samples of practical subjects discussed.

We sincerely hope that every Sunday-school teacher in the land may have the opportunity and will take advantage of the privilege of reading this book, and taking its precepts to heart.

The Gist of the Lesson, by R. A. Torrey.

This handy little volume of expositions of the International Sunday-school Lessons is now in its thirteenth year. It was the first, we believe, to be published in the vest pocket size which many men have found so handy to carry. During the years it has sustained the standard set in the beginning, and the new volume it as good as its predecessors. It does not attempt to go into many things touched on in the larger annual volumes, but we know nothing better to help a teacher in getting at the real spiritual teaching of the selected Scripture portion. Dr. Torrey is truly, a sane, safe, spiritual expositor of the Word. We commend it most heartily.

"Our Primary Department," by William D. Murray.

What has been done, not theoretical things to do, are related in this helpful book by the Superintendent of the Primary Department of the Crescent Avenue Presbyterian Church, Plainfield, N. J. The chapter on "Our Equipment," and that on "How We Teach the Lesson" are full of helpful hints and, indeed, so are all the twelve chapters which compose the book. Every Primary Department teacher should own a copy, and every Sunday-school should provide one copy to be passed around among those teachers who cannot, or will not, buy one. This would result in a complete and desirable transformation in many schools. About the only thing we would take exception to is Mr. Murray's use of the so-called "graded lesson," instead of the uniform lesson to be graded in the teaching.

"Romans I-V" by the Rev W. H. Griffith-Thomas, D. D.

Dr. Thomas is Professor of Old Testament Literature and Exegesis in Wyckliffe College, Toronto. Last year he was one of the special lecturers at The Moody Bible Institute. This volume is one of the books in the "Devotional Commentary Series" edited by Rev. A. R. Buckland. Dr. Thomas' work on Romans will extend to three volumes; and the present volume includes introductory matter, conducive both to a careful analysis of the epistle and to a fuller grasp of its doctrinal positions. The entire volume is marked by clearness of exposition, careful arrangement of material and deep spiritual insight. It is valuable not only for the purpose of study, but splendid for personal meditation or as the basis of devotional addresses to a congregation. There is ample help in scholarly study, although the author disclaims any desire, or ability to displace the older and more exhaustive commentaries such as that by the Bishop of Durham, in the Expositors' Bible; and everything he has done in this direction is subordinate to the spiritual purpose. The apostle's own spiritual experience is the main key to the study of the epistle, and similar experiences on our part will be our best clue to the interpretation. As the author says, "So the man Paul really pervades the whole epistle; going back over the road he once trod so slowly and carefully, and taking us with him as his guide."

The value of this volume as an aid to study is seen from the usual division of a chapter: the analysis of the verses contained in a particular chapter, including side headings; the special theme of a division; and suggestions for meditation.

The Moslem World, editor, Rev. S. M. Zwemer, D. D., F. R. G. S.

This quarterly review, which began with 1911, promises to be of great usefulness in presenting the needs of Mohammedan lands to the church of Christ throughout the world. The editorship of the review is a guarantee of its trustworthiness and educational value. The last volume, published in October, contained articles on "Mohammed," "Islam and Culture in Africa," by Dr. Martin Hartman; "A General Survey of the Moslem World," by Rev. S. M. Zwemer, D. D., also "Notes on Present Day Movements in the Moslem World," by Rev. W. H. T. Gardner.

We trust this quarterly will inaugurate a new era in the spread of Christianity among the 200,000,000 Moslems scattered throughout Asia.

The 1911 Bible, (The Authorized Version of 1611, with the text carefully amended by American scholars.)

This edition of the Authorized Version commemorates its tercentenary, and was prepared by a committee of between thirty and forty men of the different evangelical bodies of the United States, who were brought together for the purpose by the Oxford University Press. It is not another revision, much less another translation, but as a contemporary expresses it, "a carefully corrected text of the historic English Bible which has been so dear to so many generations of Christians."

The verses have been retained as in the Authorized, but the paragraph idea of the Revised Version has been added by the use of open spaces designating them. The chain references of the Scofield Bible are incorporated also, as well as a collected-reference system by which all passages referring to the same thought can be readily discovered.

The edition has been cordially, even enthusiastically, received by a large part of the religious press. Dr. George William Carter, General Secretary of the New York Bible Society, says, "It is all that could be desired."

A Pathfinder in South Central Africa, by Rev. William Chapman.

This volume is an account of the labors and observations of a missionary of the Primitive Methodist Church who labored for twelve years in South Central Africa. It narrates the difficulties connected with pioneering among the Africans and gives many touching incidents of hardship and suffering experienced by himself and other missionaries. The book breathes a spirit of love and devotion which permeated the daily routine of duties and which constitute that feature of permanency necessary in any land if the work is to abide. Many valuable lessons may be gained by the missionary candidate who desires to secure instruction in advance regarding the best way to deal with natives and officials.

The Gospel of Mark, A complete Analysis of the Gospel of Mark, with Annotations, by A. C. Gaebelein, Editor of Our Hope.

This is No. 2 in the new Bible Study Course of this well-known author, and we can say of it what we did of No. 1, covering the prophet Isaiah, which was reviewed in our December issue. When we consider the amount of matter crowded into this pamphlet, the method of analysis, the comment it represents, and the soundness of its teaching, to say nothing of its trifling cost, there is nothing to compare with it on the market, of which we know.

If any man or woman of means wishes to push Bible study—the real thing—through the printed page, we trust a kind providence will bring them into touch with this latest conception of Mr. Gaebelein.

The Teaching of the Lesson, by G. Campbell Morgan, D. D.

This vest pocket commentary on the Sunday-school lessons is characteristic of all of Dr. Morgan's works. It is filled with suggestive, helpful, and inspiring thoughts. No Sunday-school teacher will be at a loss for material in the preparation of his lesson for his class, if he possesses this small, but helpful book. It is multum in parvo.

Building a Working Church, by Rev. Samuel C. Black, D. D.

Here is a sane, sensible, readable presentation of present day church problems, accompanied by many concrete illustrations and suggestions. It is definite, practical, and sincere. Mr. Black has evidently had a wide experience and has drawn liberally upon the wider field of observation and experience.

He discusses brotherhoods, Sunday-schools, prayer meetings, missions, etc., and closes by presenting four different examples of personal work as illustrated by Christ's dealings with some of His followers.

We wish church officers as well as pastors would read, and ponder well, the pages of this book.

Daily Reminders from the Gospel of John,
by Griffin W. Bull.

These are absolutely the very best "daily reminders" we have ever seen. The author has accomplished the difficult task of setting forth great truths in a striking way without the use of fantastic or verbose language. These readings have been a blessing to thousands of men as they appeared in Association Men and will, we trust, bless many more now that they have appeared in permanent form. Pastors and teachers may profitably study Dr. Bull's clear twentieth century language. It is crisp, pungent, unique, constantly exalting Christ and His salvation.

In the Master's Country, by Martha Tarbell, Ph. D.

The author has here produced a simple geographical aid to the study of the life of Christ. It opens with a chronological arrangement of the events narrated in the Scriptures. This is followed by a geographical study of the country with brief notes explaining specific features. The political divisions are then explained together with remarks concerning the climate. The reading portion closes with a description of over sixty important cities. At the back of the book will be found several outline maps which are designed to be filled in by the student.

The Authorized Biography of the late Dr. Arthur T. Pierson is being written by his son, Delevan Leonard Pierson, for twenty years co-editor with his father of the "Missionary Review of the World." The biography is to be published as early as possible in 1912 by The Baker & Taylor Co. of New York and by James Nisbet & Co. of London. It will be based on the many private sources of information at the disposal of the family, including personal letters, diaries, published articles and unpublished manuscripts. It will include an intimate picture of Dr. Pierson's early life and training, his world-wide work for missions, the controversy connected with his immersion and ministry of Spurgeon's Tabernacle, London, and his connection with some of the great men and movements of the past fifty years.

Messrs. Morgan and Scott, Ltd., of London, recently made the following announcement:

Under the title of Hudson Taylor in Early Years, The Growth of a Soul, the first part of the official biography of this great missionary leader, and founder of the China Inland Mission, is in the press and may be expected early in December. The record is by Dr. and Mrs. Howard Taylor. From a purely literary point of view, it will unquestionably occupy a foremost place in contemporary biography, for Mrs. Howard Taylor's exceedingly felicitous style is well known. Her life of "Pastor Hsi" is now in its fifty-eighth thousand, and has been translated in part or in whole into eighteen languages. Apart from its distinction in this respect, however, the biography has exceptional value, for Mr. Hudson Taylor's career marked a new and important epoch in the history of foreign missions. There are twenty-four full-page illustrations, besides maps, and the volume extends to over 500 pages.

"To Make Theologians Evangelists and Evangelists Theologians."

This was the aim Professor Denney had in mind in writing "The Death of Christ," he tells us in the preface in the new edition. This is just issued by the GEORGE H. DORAN COMPANY, and includes the "Atonement and the Modern Mind" as well as more or less fresh material which has sprung up as a result of the controversies and discussions which accompanied the first appearance of this book. The demand which has made it worth while to issue a new edition of this is in itself an answer to the claim often made that there is small demand for works on theology, and it is also proof that when a man writes with such a mission—to make theologians evangelists and evangelists theologians—there is a moral purpose which is apt to carry far.

The steadily increasing interest evidenced by Americans in everything pertaining to India, especially the literature of that fascinating country, has led to the rendering into English of a collection of tales from the "Mahabharata" and other Indian epics, under the title Stories of India's Gods and Heroes. The work of retelling the stories for Western readers has been done by Mr. W. D. Monro.

Chas. F. Allen, who was associated as a singer with Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, and for the last three years with Ora Samuel Gray, has had charge of the music in the Lemon Hill work in Philadelphia, which is under the direction of Jos. B. Ely. "I. O. McCullough and I are just closing a campaign here (Farmington, Ill.). God has been pleased to bless the work, which has been mostly with the young people. My work has been made very interesting by having a good chorus choir."—A. R. Lytle.

C. P. Goodson, son-in-law of Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, who quit his church in Chicago to join the Chapman-Alexander party, has recently declined a call from a New York church, because he would not leave the Presbyterian denomination. He has been on a long tour in Canada and may go to Australia for the evangelistic campaign planned for 1912.

"We are having good success, and many fine young people are being thoroughly converted. In September I began at Brookville, Kan., in a tent; October at Willis, Kan.; November at Roxbury, Kan., a union meeting with Methodists and Presbyterians, the best they have had in years. December in Gypsum, Kan."—A. John Fitt.

"Just closed a three weeks campaign in the Grand Central Ave. Baptist Church, of Elmira, N. Y. Over seventy took a stand for Christ. Truly this has been a great work by the Holy Spirit, being a hard field on account of its being a R. R. terminal and about all R. R. men. Several conductors, the depot agent, and some trainmen were among the number, but mostly boys and girls in the 'teen' age."—John C. Murphey.

"This has been my very best year and am now in a meeting at this place (Lufkin, Tex.) that promises to be the best of all. Have been here one week and there have been sixty professions and the meeting is taking hold of the town and will likely run 'til Christmas."—L. E. Finney.

I will be here (Van Meter, Ia.) two weeks, then go to the First M. E. Church at Osceola, Ia., for January. We are having a great meeting so far."—Charles R. Goff.

The publication of a little four-page monthly paper, entitled "The Midnight Cry," has been commenced by A. G. Lillicrap, 146 London Road, Reading, England. The reason, says the editor, is that "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh," and "it is high time to awake and sound an alarm amongst the sleepers." The papers can be used as tracts and are one shilling per 100 copies.

John S. Hamilton and helpers, T. W. Pearman, John R. Bursk, and Mrs. Hamilton, conducted a successful tabernacle meeting at Palestine, Ill., the past month. Owing to the difficult conditions in that district it took some time for preparation, but when results of the work began to be noticed there was great rejoicing and much singing over the reviving of former church members and the salvation of the lost ones. The pastors and business men think a new Palestine has come. Aside from the large number who came out for Christ there are happier homes, family altars erected, and the church will have a higher place in the thoughts and lives of the men, and all the churches will reap a rich reward of regenerated souls.

C. R. HAUDENSCHILD IN TOMPOC, CAL.

C. R. Haudenschild conducted a union tabernacle meeting during the month of October, at Tompoc, Cal. The meeting commenced in the Methodist church, which is the largest in the city, but in less than one week, in order to accommodate the crowds, a large tabernacle was built.

HENRY W. STOUGH AT FREMONT, O.

"The coming of Dr. Stough has done more to arouse and consecrate the efforts of professing Christians—more souls won for Christ than in any revival ever held in Fremont," said the Fremont Journal. The work was well organized along all lines.

MANLEY WILSON AT AMBRIDGE, PA.

Manley Wilson, of Sandusky, Ohio, with his co-workers, Wilson A. Pugsley and Chas. H. Winter, have closed a successful campaign at Ambridge, Pa., where 538 walked down the sawdust trail and shook the evangelist by the hand. A tabernacle was constructed for the campaign which seated 1,000, and 1,500 were crowded into the tabernacle at the closing service. A special daily paper was issued for the benefit of the campaign.

WORD FROM ROBERT GARRY.

"I gave the West Side Gospel Mission and Bible School twelve days time during the Christian Workers Conference. Much interest was manifested along lines of Bible study. Was also with Bradford, Ohio, Y. M. C. A., Nov. 26-Dec. 3, and during that time conducted twenty-two sessions for Bible study, doing much personal work among the R. R. men. There were twelve decisions. This R. R. Y. M. C. A., is doing real Christian work for men."—Robert Garry.

GEO. W. TAYLOR IN EMMETT, IDA.

"I am just beginning a union tabernacle meeting here with the four evangelical churches of the town, assisted by Mrs. Taylor, cornetist and leader of personal workers, and J. E. Ogden, soloist and musical director. We are having large crowds, and although we have not got to the invitation yet, the outlook is very encouraging for a real work of grace and a great tidal wave of salvation."—Geo. W. Taylor.

KOST AND COTTERELL IN IOWA.

Evangelists Victor Kost and O. L. Cotterell conducted, a few weeks ago, a successful series of meetings at Clarinda, Ia. The services continued for four weeks and were held in the First M. E. Church. At the beginning the meetings were under the auspices of the M. E. Church only. Later they grew into union meetings, including several churches of different denominations. The congregations varied in size from 800 to 1,000 at the principal services.

REVIVAL IN STRASBURG, N. Y.

J. R. Hemminger conducted meetings during November at Strasburg, N. Y., in the M. E. church. Mr. Johnson, pianist, assisted. There were fifty-seven accessions to the M. E. and Presbyterian churches at the end of the first week. People attended the meetings from all over the country.

HERBERT BOOTH'S MISSIONS.

Herbert Booth, English evangelist, youngest son of General Booth, of London, has been conducting, with many tokens of the Lord's blessing, meetings at some prominent churches in Greater New York. He commenced the season's work by speaking at the Stoney Brook Presbyterian Assembly, and the conference of Baptist ministers in New York, when he delivered an address on Christian stewardship, which was much appreciated. Then followed meetings at several churches in the east. A deep and reverent spirit has pervaded all these meetings, in which the Holy Spirit has done a great work in the hearts of multitudes of saints and sinners alike. Mr. Booth's engagements will keep him occupied until Easter, after which he has open dates for meetings.

ELLIOTT AND REITZ AT PLATTSBURGH, N. Y.

John H. Elliott, and his associate, Albert Simpson Reitz, have just completed a remarkably successful mission in Plattsburgh, N. Y., with the united churches. From the very first service the meetings steadily increased in interest until the attention of the entire city was turned toward the churches with the result that many definite decisions for Christ, including a number of prominent men, were secured, and many additions to the churches were received. The pastors were enthusiastic in their expressions regarding the uplift which the churches received, especially because of the permanent nature of the work which has been done. The meetings for men were marked with great success. The service for the aged stirred the community mightily and it will be long remembered as a red letter day.

A distinct feature of the campaign was the music in charge of Mr. Reitz. Not only was his solo work effective but the wise handling of the chorus choir and congregation greatly impressed the people and awakened in them the desire to sing.

CHAPMAN AND ALEXANDER IN IRELAND.

By Robert Blair.

A remarkable evidence of the working of the Holy Spirit in the mission which J. Wilbur Chapman and Charles M. Alexander conducted recently in the city of Belfast, Ireland, was witnessed by a vast audience in the Assembly Hall three nights before the close of the mission. The very beginning of the mission was notable for direct and immediate answers to prayer. It was not necessary for the missionaries to create an atmosphere, it was there, and they had but to step into it. For weeks before their arrival, hearts had been throbbing in the power house of prayer, and with every beat the current had been silently sent out, out, and out, till the very city was electrified with the divine presence. There was a power moving the city, and it was the mightiest power that can ever move among men—the power of the Spirit of God in the human heart.

Today the city is on fire for God, and the audience that attended on this most memorable night of the mission was composed not only of people who had not accepted Christ, but of Christian workers, of God-fearing parents in company with their children—people filled with a new desire, impelled by a new earnestness, stimulated with a new activity. They came for inspiration, to learn the secret of going to work; they came to be filled with a holy zeal, to have kindled within them a passion for souls.

When Mr. Alexander asked the people to sing an old hymn, they sang a new song, they sang with a prayer upon their lips and a Gospel message in their hearts, and the building was not only filled with melody, but rang with a message of hope, and comfort, and love, to the heart that was aching and the sin-sick soul. One had only to glance at the faces of the audience to see how the message of the Gospel hymn had found its way into the hearts of the people. Men and women entered into the spirit of the song and forgot the petty cares and worries of the day. Many of them had found a new way of praising God, and with the Psalmist were saying: "O sing unto the Lord a new song; for He hath done marvelous things; His right hand and His holy arm hath gotten Him the victory."

Dr. Chapman's address was an earnest and striking appeal for a more Christ-like influence in the home.

REPORT FROM M. F. HAM.

"Wichita Falls, Tex., is one of the most stirring and prosperous little western cities in this part of the country—called the 'busiest and best built city.' Like many of these western towns, the religious and moral condition was distressing at the beginning of our meeting. A few of the brethren managed to arouse enough interest to find two old tents and put them together, in which we began the meeting. The wind, dust storms, cold and disagreeable weather kept us shifting from churches to tent almost every other day, until finally a wind storm finished the job by blowing the tent away.

"The devil and his crowd shouted for joy that they were rid of the thing, but by this time there had been such an interest awakened that a subscription of $3,500 to build a permanent tabernacle was raised at once and within four days time a building 80 x 140, containing 48,000 feet of lumber was erected, lighted, seated and heated and dedicated.

"The old settlers say that it is by far the greatest meeting that has ever been in this city. There have been over 500 conversions, over 300 reclamations and an upheaval in the civic and business circles.

"All the churches and pastors of the town are enthusiastically enlisted in the work. We are having afternoon Bible readings now, which are largely and enthusiastically attended. Meetings are announced to close Sunday, but there is a strong protest against it. Pray for the work in this part of the country."—M. F. Ham.

GEO. H. WILEY'S MEETINGS.

Good reports of the meetings conducted by Geo. H. Wiley have been received. At Roanoke, Va., meetings were held in the St. James M. E. Church. At this point it was said, "The revival has been remarkable in its reach of those who had become discouraged, scores having been to the altars in the two weeks of the meetings to renew the covenant of the church, besides many outsiders. Not a service has been held in which some one did not come forward to confess Jesus Christ; at some of them a dozen young men and women have knelt about the chancel at one time for conversion."

At Vinton, Va., Mr. Wiley conducted meetings at the M. E. Church. At this place about one hundred conversions were reported and as many more were reclaimed at Roanoke.

DR. TORREY AT CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.

Limerick, Ireland, Nov. 27.—It is with a strange mingling of joy and hesitation that I write about the work in Cambridge; joy because God has done such wonderful things; hesitation through fear that I might seem to take any of the glory to myself. The work was so manifestly of God from the very beginning that one could not for a moment dream of thinking that he was at all an essential factor in it. I believe that God would have done great things at Cambridge, even though I had never gone there. I am told that 50,000 people in different parts of the world were praying for the work and I believe that the results were due far more to their praying than to any preaching or other work of mine. Indeed, I think the chief benefit from my going there was that it stirred some of these people to pray. I found upon reaching Cambridge that the Spirit of God was already at work and there had been an encouraging number of conversions.

I reached Cambridge, Wednesday, Nov. 1. For two days I met some of the Christian students quietly in a room in one of the colleges at 5 in the afternoon and 8:30 at night to give them suggestions as to how to deal with inquirers. Saturday night, Nov. 4, there was a welcome meeting at which I outlined the purpose of the mission. The regularly advertised meetings were held Nov. 5-12. Ordinarily a prayer meeting was held in the Henry Martyn Hall from 1:05 to 1:25; a Bible Reading from 5:45 to 6:15, and an evangelistic meeting each night at 8:30 in St. Andrew's Hall, or Guild Hall. God manifested His presence from the very outset. It was feared by some that there would be the same disturbance at the meetings that there was when Mr. Moody was at Cambridge thirty years ago. There was a mild attempt at disorder at the first Sunday night meeting but it was stopped almost instantly and the presence of God was mightily manifested and there were conversions at that meeting. At only one other meeting was there any attempt at a disturbance. At that meeting some students, who had evidently formed a combination beforehand, attempted to applaud at some improper place. There were two or three attempts made in the early part of the meeting, but each failed and a deep solemnity fell on the whole meeting.

The crowning meeting was Sunday night,

Nov. 12. At this meeting a very large number of students, some say as many as 100, arose in the public meeting and avowed their acceptance of Jesus Christ as their Saviour, and surrender to Him as their Lord and Master. It was a wonderful sight.

It was decided to continue the meetings on such nights in the following week as the Guild Hall could be secured, namely, on Tuesday and Wednesday, and Sunday, Nov. 19. There had been conversions every night during the week and there were conversions at these extra meetings which followed—a very large number on the closing Sunday night.

This last week I met the students for personal conversation each day from 11 to 1; 4:30 to 6:30, and on such nights as there were no meetings, from 8 to 10. I had a great many private interviews with all classes of inquirers, including quite a number who claimed to be agnostics or atheists. The conversations were almost all very satisfactory, though evidently a few did not desire to know the truth.

Among those who accepted Christ were many men of great promise, including some leaders in the athletic, social, and intellectual life of the university. I do not think it would be wise to give specific instances, though they would be of the deepest interest.

Many persons who had been prominent in Christian work in Cambridge in the past, or who were deeply interested in men now at Cambridge, came up to help in the work, and had regular hours at which they met the students who wished to talk with them. Prominent among these were Charles Studd, one of the fruits of Mr. Moody's work thirty years before and one of the "Cambridge Seven," and Barclay Buxton, very prominent in the religious life of Cambridge, and who remained to continue the work after we left.

Though there were a very large number of conversions, many think that the best part of the work was in the new earnestness that came into the life of many who were already professing Christians.

During the meetings many of the Christian students volunteered for service in foreign lands. There is a hope which was publicly expressed on a number of occasions by the leaders in the work, that as there were seven volunteering for China as the outcome of Mr. Moody's work, that this time there would be a "Cambridge Seventy" volunteering for the unevangelized portions of the world.

The whole work from beginning to end was manifestly of God. I am inclined to think that the two and a half weeks spent at Cambridge will prove, in ultimate results, the most fruitful two and a half weeks of my entire life. Apparently the work has just begun and it is generally hoped that the large number who have already accepted Christ will be far more than doubled before the next University term closes. Will the readers of this letter join with us in thanksgiving to God for what He has already wrought and prayer that far larger things may yet be accomplished?

We began here in Limerick last night. The Spirit of God was manifestly present and there were a large number of decisions and open confessions of Christ at this first meeting.

Sincerely yours,

R. A. Torrey.

A. J. FITT IN KANSAS.

"The Evangelistic meetings at Roxbury closed last Sunday night with the largest crowd ever assembled under one roof in this place. Many were turned away. The results of the meeting were very satisfactory and were characterized throughout by thoroughness. Over sixty-five professed conversions. The work was mostly among the young men and boys. Sixty persons have united with the churches and several more will do so later as a result of the meetings"—G. T. Renner.

FRENCH E. OLIVER AT LA PORTE, IND.

"Under the direction of French E. Oliver we are in the midst of a glorious revival in this wicked city. Despite the malicious opposition of the newspapers a great victory is being proclaimed for our Lord Jesus Christ. The Word is being held forth with power and God is honoring it. So far there have been 1,031 decisions with two weeks meetings yet in the future. From here Dr. Oliver and party go to Butler, Pa., to open a six-weeks campaign."—John R. Snyder.

I. E. HONEYWELL IN CALIFORNIA.

Evangelist I. E. Honeywell, of Oak Park, Ill., and his corps of helpers have just closed a union tabernacle meeting at Colusa, Cal. The churches have been greatly quickened and lifted to a higher plane of Christian activity while hundreds of the unsaved have been won for the Kingdom.

L. OLENSLAYGER IN KANSAS.

L. Olenslayger closed two blessed meetings in Kansas, one at Winchester, and the other at Wilson. Both were held in M. E. churches. At Wilson the power of the Holy Spirit was manifested in a marked way. In all the services about forty-five were converted and all taken into the church before the evangelist left. There were some conversions after the special meetings were closed.

Mr. Olenslayger later went to Norwich, Kan., in the M. E. church, where the meetings were well attended every night. At the time this report was received there had been thirty-five conversions at that point.

RESCUE MISSIONS AND THEIR WORK

MISSION SUPERINTENDENTS CONFERENCE AT GRAND RAPIDS.

The twelfth annual meeting and Bible conference, and meeting of the Brotherhood of Rescue Mission Superintendents, will be held at the Grand Rapids Rescue Mission building, corner of Market and Louis Streets, Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 14-21, inclusive.

The purpose of the conference is to get together to exchange ideas and thought, to study methods, plan work, and spend time in prayer for an outpouring of the Spirit of God.

The program provides for special features every day during the week. There will be two special days given to Sunday-school workers and a conference each day with rescue mission superintendents.

We might mention that such noted workers and speakers as the following will be present at the conference: Dr. C. I. Scofield, Dr. Harris H. Gregg, Dr. James M. Gray, Eleanor Stafford Millar, E. K. Mohr, Louis H. Chafer, and Major James H. Cole. Dr. D. B. Towner, or E. O. Sellers, with Peter Quartel will have charge of the music.

BETHEL MISSION, Ashland, Ore.

The first report of the Bethel Mission, Ashland, Ore., has been issued. H. Isaac is superintendent. The work is carried on over a large district, the headquarters being at 5th and Main streets, Ashland. The workers visit the railroad, lumber, logging, mining and power construction camps, speaking, singing, and giving out Gospel literature. So far there have been seven men who have made public confession of Christ in the camps. On Thanksgiving, dinner was served to about a hundred homeless men and boys in the mission. Miss Nellie Baker has been assisting with solos, and Mr. Isaac's wife and girls also help in the work.

The Whosoever-Will Rescue Mission, San Francisco, Cal., gave its eighth Thanksgiving dinner to the poor in the district Nov. 30 last. This mission helps about a thousand people each year at this dinner.

ANOTHER ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATION.

"You are most cordially invited to celebrate with me my Third Anniversary of deliverance from the bondage of sin on Nov. 29 in the Bible Rescue Mission. After years of sin, 'Having no hope and without God in the world,' I went into the Old Jerry McAuley Mission in New York City and gave my heart to God. He has kept me ever since and I shall never cease to praise Him for calling me out of darkness into His marvelous light. Come and rejoice with me. Dinner will be served to attendants of the mission at 7 p. m.—C. J. Balf (Lucky Baldwin)." The foregoing was the invitation sent out by Mr. Balf. The Bible Rescue Mission is located at 609 W. Madison Street, Chicago, and has been the center of much active work for the Master. John Stewart is superintendent.

MRS. CALLAHAN'S CLASS FIVE YEARS OLD.

Mrs. John Callahan celebrated the fifth anniversary of her Bowery Bible Class recently in the Hadley Rescue Hall, New York. The attendance during the period has been 33,244, and 2,165 have been forward for prayer. About 150 to 200 attend the class weekly to hear Mrs. Callahan teach a chapter of the Bible. Following the lessons a testimony meeting is held at which the men tell of their conversions.

They tell me that down in the vilest dens

Of the city's crime and muck,
There are men with the heart of angels,
Doing the angels' work;

That they win back the lost and the strayed,
That they help the weak to stand,
By the wonderful power of living words
And the help of God's right hand.

And often and over, the dear Lord knows,
I've knelt and prayed to Him

That somehow, somewhere, it would happen—
That they'd find and save my Jim.

There was one graduate of the Evening Department, Miss Milda Lofgren.

The following persons finished Correspondence Courses since September 1, 1911: Rev. C. J. Rysning, Marinette, Wis., and Miss Mabel Childs, Sunfield, Mich., in Bible Doctrine, and Miss Emma Huffman of Toronto, Can., in Practical Christian Work.

Burns; of the Women's Department, Miss Clara Black; of the Music Course, Mr. Harry A. Whaley.

The class song which was used is found on another page of this magazine. The class decided to observe the custom of former graduates and circulate a class letter.

DR. GRAY'S ENGAGEMENTS.

During December, in addition to his usual work in the Institute, Dr. Gray spoke in connection with the Men and Religion Movement at South Bend, Indiana; preached at the Bethany Presbyterian Church, and the Second United Presbyterian Church, Chicago, and taught a weekly Bible Class at Grand Rapids, Mich.

His invitations for Bible conferences from January to April include Boston; Hickory, N. C.; Montgomery, Ala.; Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Little Rock, and Los Angeles, some of which he will be obliged to decline.

FAREWELL AND INTRODUCTION.

On Monday evening, December 11, the members of the Evening Department gathered in the large Dining Hall of the Women's Building for a social supper. This gathering was also made the occasion for saying farewell to Rev. John H. Hunter, who has been the Director of the Evening Department since its beginning, and who now goes to Los Angeles, Cal., to be associated with Rev. R. A. Torrey, D. D., in the work of the International Bible Institute at that place. The new Director of the Department, Mr. E. O. Sellers, was introduced, and plans were announced for the continuance and enlargement of the work.

The Evening Department now has an enrollment of 211 students and is intended especially for busy people. Its representatives come from about 80 of the Chicago churches, and the varied character of the classes is inlicated by the fact that it includes bookkeepers and blacksmiths, cashiers and carpenters, evangelists and engineers, lawyers and laborers, teachers and tailors. At the social hour in the Dining Room announcement was made that up to the present time annual pledges for the support of the Evening Department had been received to the amount of $525. New pledges were made amounting to $235; and it is the hope of the director and teachers that the amount soon will reach $3,000.

Following the social hour the members of the Department adjourned to The Moody Church to take part in the service there, which was addressed by Rev. John F. Carson, D. D., Moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. Before Dr. Carson's address Dr. Gray read a letter of appreciation which had been written to Mr. Hunter by the Board of Trustees of The Moody Bible Institute, and in behalf of the trustees presented Mr. Hunter with a check as indicated in the letter from the trustees. Mr. Hunter then spoke about the beginning and growth and value of the work of the Evening Department, and he was followed by Mr. E. O. Sellers who made some announcements about the plans for the coming months.

Dr. Carson's address was genuinely impromptu. He expressed his high satisfaction in speaking for the Institute, which believes in the old Word without thrills, or limitations, or expurgations.

He said that for which the Institute stands, Bible Study, is badly needed in the home, where religion is now so rarely found; in the Sunday-schools where Bible study is almost crowded out; in pulpits, where expounding the Scriptures has largely given way to expurgating them.

Dr. Carson, who has been a leader for the preservation of the Bible in the public schools of New York, received applause as he said, "The exclusion of the Bible from the public schools is nothing short of a crime against the youth of America."

He strongly urged the study of the entire Bible, the Old Testament giving a revelation of God to man, and the New Testament revealing man's reconciliation to God through the sacrificial death of Jesus Christ.

FROM A NEW PLATFORM.

Beginning January 1, 1912, and continuing until April 30, 1912, The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago will be in charge of the noon-day meetings in Willard Hall, The Woman's Temple, Chicago. This arrangement has been made after much consideration and many conferences, and the work will be carried on at the request of the Chicago Central Women's Christian Temperance Union, which has been in charge of these noon-day meetings ever since the opening of Willard Hall. The work will be in direct charge of the Extension Department of the Institute.

While it is true that this will be a new platform from which to carry on certain features of the Institute, yet the character of the work will maintain the same standard of excellence and the same evangelical and evangelistic tone as that which is done continuously in the Institute; the purpose being to emphasize the fundamental truths of belief, life, and service, and the entire plan will be consistent with that idea which was in the mind of the founders of the Temple, and the originators of this Willard Hall work.

The purpose of The Moody Bible Institute is to use its own teachers so far as possible and the speakers who will be heard are: Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., Dean; Rev. William Evans, D. D., Director of the Bible Course; Rev. Howard W. Pope, Superintendent of Men; Rev. Edward A. Marshall, Instructor in Missions; Dr. D. B. Towner, Director of the Music Course; Mr. E. O. Sellers, Director of the Evening Department; and Rev. Parley E. Zartmann, D. D., Secretary of the Extension Department, Rev. J. H. Ralston, secretary of the Correspondence Department.

In addition to this there will be other speakers of prominence and ability. The tentative schedule includes the presentation of Bible Exposition, Sunday-school Methods, Young People's Work, Missions, Evangelism, The Gospel in Song, Christian Service and Studies in Christian Life.

January 1-6 has been announced as "A week of Prayer," although January 8-13 will be observed as the regular week of prayer as suggested by the Evangelical Alliance. For this first week Rev. James M. Gray, D. D., will be the speaker daily, and the following subjects have been announced:

Monday—The Lack of Prayer.

Tuesday—Prayer in the Apostolic Church.

Wednesday—The Life that Can Pray.

Thursday—Desiring and Praying.

Friday—The Holy Spirit in Prayer.

Saturday—Prayer and Revival.

In other years great blessing has attended the meetings in Willard Hall, and there have gone forth from them many elevating and inspiring and saving influences; and The Moody Bible Institute requests the readers of this Magazine to pray earnestly that God's richest blessing may rest upon these meetings for the coming months.

On Dec. 8 the following was adopted by the students: "The students of The Moody Bible Institute wish to express their heartfelt gratitude to the Trustees and Faculty of the Institute for the pleasant time arranged by them for the students on Thanksgiving Day. May God's richest blessings be on all those who have the needs and welfare of this great Institute at heart."

THE NEW DIRECTOR OF THE EVENING DEPARTMENT.

Mr. E. O. Sellers was born in Hastings, Mich., but when he was two years of age his family removed to Lansing, where he resided during the period of his education. Afterward he entered the office of the city engineer of Lansing. Later he was elected to succeed that official, assuming charge of the department in which he was trained.

E. O. Sellers.

In 1897 he became a student at the Moody Bible Institute, following which he was associated in evangelistic work with Fred B. Smith, now campaign leader of the Men and Religion Forward Movement.

In 1899 he became interested in Y. M. C. A. work, first as secretary at Macon, Ga., then at Washington, D. C. as assistant secretary, and later as general secretary at Wilmington, Del., when he left the Association field to become a Brotherhood secretary in the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, at Cleveland, O., having charge of the music of the church as well. He remained in Cleveland until September, 1907, when he was called to the work of the Moody Bible Institute, and at length became assistant director of the music course.

The men's work with which Mr. Sellers was connected in Cleveland came into wide notice, there being a membership at one time of more than five hundred men, out of which grew a flourishing teachers training class and subsequently a strong mission. While in that city he also organized the May Festival Chorus consisting of 1,200 voices, which will give its tenth annual concert this coming May.

Mr. Sellers has always been an enthusiastic Sunday-school man and believes it to be the most efficient recruiting agency of the church. Soon after coming to Chicago he was chosen teacher of the Friendly Bible Class of The Moody Church, the average attendance of which last year was 292.

His connection with the Sunday-school work has brought him many engagements in different parts of the country to speak on the adult work, men's Bible classes, and shop work. He is at present chairman of the adult committee of the Cook County Sunday-school Association, and a member of the Men and Religion Forward Movement committee of this city. He is, as well, contributor to the magazines and religious press on subjects with which he is familiar, and is favorably known as a composer of Gospel music.

It is believed that as director of the Evening Department of the Moody Bible Institute, Mr. Sellers' energy, executive ability and good cheer, will be valuable factors in building a strong superstructure on the deep and broad foundation of his predecessor, John H. Hunter. It is needless to add that his views of the Bible and the whole scheme of Christian truth are in vital accord with what the Institute has always stood for, and that he will have gathered around him the same corps of earnest and consecrated teachers that have co-operated so nobly in the Evening Department hitherto.

THANKSGIVING DAY AT THE INSTITUTE.

Thanksgiving was made a special day for the faculty and students, and the gathering was not only one of great festivity, but of real joy and blessing. The following special program was observed:

1 p. m., dinner. After dinner speeches, Dr. Gray presiding. Responses as follows: "The Old Hearthstone," Myfawney Lodwick; "Some Things I Have Learned," W. W. Carpenter; "Some Things That Have Helped Me in the Life of the Institute," Virginia Williams; "Views of a New-comer," Preston Bradley; Greetings from former students.

3 p. m., intermission with outdoor recreation.

4 p. m., musical program in Massey Chapel.

5 p. m., games in the lecture room. Tour of buildings. During these hours the gymnasium was used as a playroom for the older children and the faculty dining room as a nursery.

6 p. m., social hour for the faculty, former and present students, in the reception room of the women's building.

7 p. m., luncheon served in the dining room.

7:30 p. m., song service in Massey Chapel, Norman H. Camp presiding.

8:00 p. m., praise service in the lecture room led by John H. Hunter.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT.

Miss E. Stafford Millar who has been at her home in Australia since last June, says that she will return to the United States in time for evangelistic work beginning January 1. Her first engagement will be with the Scarritt Bible and Training School, Kansas City, Mo. She will then go to St. Louis for work under the direction of the Young Women's Christian Association of that city.

Miss Angy Manning Taylor is recovering from her long illness and will take up her work soon after the beginning of the new year.

C. P. Meeker, after the close of his campaign in western Pennsylvania, went to Michigan and has conducted meetings in Crystal and Linden. God's blessing has been upon his services, and it is expected that he will continue the work in Michigan throughout the season.

CORRESPONDENCE DEPARTMENT.

The secretary of this department has received within the last few months scores of testimonials from students in all parts of the world, to the great increase of their knowledge of the Bible, their great efficiency in work, and their special delight in the studies.

The number of students would be largely increased were it more widely known that The Moody Bible Institute among its well established and organized departments has three correspondence courses of the highest grade. While the present courses have been most fruitful and satisfactory, the department will provide for demands of students of the Bible as they may be made. Some new courses may be added soon to meet the demands of a large number of inquirers for courses of a specific kind.

It is the purpose of the Executive Committee of the Institute to make this department more efficient than ever, and are placing at its disposal facilities for development and efficient work such as has not characterized it in any period of the past. The office force will be increased so that the teacher may be relieved of some details of office work so that he can continue personal examination of the increasingly large number of lessons coming in.

A system of credits has been arranged for the benefit of those who take the courses and expect afterward to enter the Institute as regular students. Information on this point will be gladly forwarded to any interested. To meet the recent demand for adaptation of the course to class work, plans are ready to be sent out to any pastors, Sunday-school workers, Bible teachers, and others interested, on application.

From the local papers we learn that Wm. A. Leighton has recently conducted a course of Bible study in the Y. M. C. A. at Kankakee, Ill. He is to be the regular teacher of the class. Dr. Wetherford's book, "Introducing Men to Christ" is used in the study.

CHARLES BUTLER ORDAINED.

Many graduates of the Institute, and readers of this magazine, will remember with great pleasure Charles Underwood Butler, who was associated with Dr. R. A. Torrey as a singer, and whose services in Gospel song have been blessed wherever he has gone. In the latter part of October he was ordained for the Baptist ministry at a special meeting held in Spartanburg, S. C. The Herald of that city speaks in the highest terms of the personal and professional qualities of Mr. Butler and says that he is blessed with the aid of his wife who renders him invaluable assistance in song service, and wins many by her devout Christian character. At his ordination Mr. Butler heard many words of appreciation, and received appropriate material marks of gratitude from men in the railroad shops to whom he had been a blessing.

INTO FOREIGN FIELDS.

It is a pleasure to present to the readers of The Christian Workers Magazine, pictures of the students who have recently gone out from The Moody Bible Institute to missionary work in foreign fields, thus increasing the long list of men and women who have gone forth from the Institute to make Christ known in the uttermost parts of the earth. We are indebted to the officers of the China Inland Mission and the Africa Inland Mission for the loan of the cuts shown on these pages.

"CONVERSION."

This is the title of a helpful leaflet by Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, recently issued by the Colportage Association. It takes up the phases of the subject under these heads: "What it is; How it is brought about; When it takes place; and How it is confirmed." Price, 2 cents a copy; 20 cents a dozen; $1 a hundred. Evangelists and pastors will find this tract most useful.

A GREAT AID TO BIBLE STUDY.

Birds-eye Bible Study (formerly called A Busy Man's Bible), by Alexander Patterson, is now owned and issued by the Bible Institute Colportage Association. (See announcement on page 327). It is a capital little book for new converts and young Christians—in fact, anyone who desires practical help in securing quickly a comprehensive view of the contents of the Bible. 15 cents; 30 cents in cloth covers.

FOR THE DEVOTIONAL HOUR.

This is an appropriate time of the year to begin the daily use of a helpful volume like Thoughts for the Quiet Hour, edited by D. L. Moody. It presents a Scripture passage for every day, with some carefully selected extract or quotation (as comment) from devotional writers or the world's best known preachers. The whole is carefully indexed as to Scripture references, making it indeed a "pocket" commentary on several hundred texts or passages. 15 cents.

MISSIONARY BIOGRAPHY AT LOW COST.

Have you truly appreciated the value of Christian biography for helpfully influencing the lives of young people? The "Works and Words," concisely and attractively stated, of great missionary leaders—Carey, Judson, Duff, Livingston, Moffat (one volume each), Martyn and Mills (one volume), are included in the excellent Moody Colportage Library series and offered at only 15 cents each, eight copies for $1.00. Send for complete and descriptive catalog for ready reference.

A MINISTRY TO THE "SHUT-INS."

The books of the Moody Colportage Library are well adapted for use by the sick and infirm—as well as the able-bodied.

They are inexpensive and easily renewed when worn or soiled; printed in large, clear type; light in weight—convenient to hold; offer great variety of matter; popular in style; thoroughly evangelical in teaching; adapted to young and old; by well known authors; published in several languages.

A complete title list and classification according to matter mailed upon request.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORKERS

Will welcome the news of a new edition of The Four Gospels, with dictionary and index, which is just ready. This book will be in especial favor during 1912, when the International S. S. lessons are found in the first three Gospels. See "ad" on page 326.

PASTORS, ATTENTION!

"If you know of any colporter handling your books, who is looking for a field to work in, let me suggest this one. We need such a man badly, as the people need such literature. Let me know if you have knowledge of such a man."—R. G. H., Clayton County, Iowa.

Correspondence is invited with pastors located anywhere in the United States regarding conditions similar to those mentioned by R. G. H. The Bible Institute Colportage Association is usually able to respond by suggesting an eligible worker.

A SERMON-READING "SUPPLY."

A novel plan for supplying the pulpit in a region where ministers are not plentiful was devised recently in Laramie, Wyo., by the son of the late Dr. F. H. Arnold, one of the builders of Presbyterianism in the Rockies. Mr. Arnold, himself an elder, wrote to five of the leading ministers of New York, asking each for some message to the people of the Rockies and enclosing a check sufficient to cover the cost of a book of sermons. Answers were duly received, usually in the shape of a book of sermons with a particular message marked. These were read, one on a Sunday, by capable readers, who committed some of the messages to memory. At the end of the five Sundays a vote was taken, the people stating to whose church they would go if they were in New York. The plan was quite successful in keeping the interest warm while the church was without a pastor.—The Continent

The books of the Moody Colportage Library series, including many by famous, helpful preachers, are excellently adapted for sermon reading.

"PHEW! HOW CAN YOU DO IT?"

This is what somebody said when we proposed to give a handsome, new, cloth-bound, seventy-five cent book as a reward to any reader of these lines who will secure one (or more) new yearly subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS MAGAZINE, and will land the order here in this office, cash accompanying, at regular rate (see top of this column), before Feb. 1, 1912.

But It's Really So.

We have an option on copies enough of "Early Recollections of D. L. Moody," by the Hon. John V. Farwell, to "make good," unless our readers disappoint us—and in this respect, we hope they will!

What it Looks Like.

A reduced fac-simile of the exterior of this attractive book is shown below.

Here is the table of contents, which only suggests the rich things to be found in this inspiring volume. It does not cover the ground of any life of Mr. Moody you ever saw or heard of. It's "different" and enough so to be deeply appreciated by all who would inquire into the motives and promptings which energized this great Christian leader.

CONTENTS: Early Recollections—First Lesson in Personal Work—Results of Mission Sunday-school Work—Northfield Incidents—Early Evangelistic Work in England—As a Bible Student—Mr. Moody and His Music—Real Start of Y. M. C. A.—The Moody and Sankey Convention—The Bible Institute—Mr. Moody the Apostle of Christian Union—Letters from and to Mr. Moody Concerning His Work in England—Incidents in England—Conclusion—Memorial Address.

A Magazine Editor Says:

"As God raised up Mr. Moody and commissioned him for a great work of evangelism, so in those early days He raised up the author of this book, and commissioned him to be a co-worker, not only in wise and practical advice and financial aid but in fellowship in prayer and actual work of the Gospel. The book tells this fellowship; it gives some inside history of Mr. Moody's early successes in Sunday-school missionary work in Chicago, of the causes that led him to England for the first time, and the almost unprecedented success which followed his labors in the British Isles, as well as subsequently in the United States, including the inception of the Northfield conferences and Chicago Bible Institute."

Please Lend a Hand

in adding 1,000 more names to our subscription list. The Magazine will helpfully influence just that many more folks—and they and we will rejoice!

IN OTHER WORDS—

"The Moody Church Herald"

The Monthly Official Organ of the Moody Church

Only Fifty Cents a Year

ADDRESS:

Publishers, MOODY CHURCH HERALD

808 La Salle Ave.,

CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. Superintendent:

Don't blame the music publishers for the low standard of Sunday School songs that have lately been so much in evidence. Publishers simply supply what the public demands, and if Sunday School music has been of clap-trap style, often bordering on the quick-step or waltz movement to an extreme degree, it is only because such wares have found a ready market.

This complaint against the character of current Sunday School music has come to us from many quarters and in no uncertain manner. To cater to the wants of the growing number of pastors and superintendents who protest against present conditions, our first idea was to compile an entirely new song book, from which everything trashy and questionable, both as to words and music, should be completely eliminated. But, on more mature consideration, a better idea has come to us, and we believe you will see the merit of this sober second thought. Inasmuch as it is your aim and your expectation that, eventually, many of your Sunday School members will become members of your church, why should these young people not be made familiar with church music while they are still only in the Sunday School?

We do not mean that you should use all church music in the Sunday School. On the contrary, our suggestion is that you use in your Sunday School, as well as in your church services, GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS, and that at least one of the songs in the school each Sunday be a song that you also use in church service. In this manner, you will not only be making the scholars familiar with your church music, but at the same time will be taking them away from the clap-trap music to which so much objection has been raised.

You will find many purely Sunday School songs in GREAT REVIVAL HYMNS. Its supply will be sufficient for many services before the first song is sung a second time. And you will find the music elevating, the words inspiring, and the spirit in accord with the highest Christian endeavors.

We earnestly ask that you give this suggestion your serious consideration. We put it forward as a real solution of a real problem.

Send 25 cents for sample copy. Special rates in quantities.

Those using this famous Gospel Song Book positively say that without exception, it is indeed the greatest book in the evangelistic field today. Unlike others and in advance of all, it covers the desired field for which it is intended. Hundreds of those who are using Voices of Victory have written giving their testimony of praise.

Our Banner Year

Our hearty thanks are extended to our subscribers, through whose help we have been able to enlarge the circulation of The Christian Workers Magazine, to the highest point in our history. We have had an average increase of 2855 per month for the year ending August 31, over the preceding year.

We have gained many new friends and open doors for the gospel. The Lord has blessed the magazine to thousands and thousands of souls, bringing comfort and cheer to those who are seemingly alone in their fields of labor for the Lord. Through The Christian Workers Magazine they feel they have fellowship with us and we with them, and the Lord is answering our prayers above all that we can ask or think.

Keep on Praying

Continual prayer is being made for us by our people. We hope you will continue to pray that the magazine may extend its usefulness many fold and find its way to the Lord's people who need its message. In these times especially, we need to help and encourage one another, and one of the best ways is by the printed message, such as can be carried by The Christian Workers Magazine.

We Must Not Stop

The Lord would have us multiply our blessings over and over again. We want to be channels, not reservoirs, of God's grace. Then let us not be content with what we have done the past year, but begin again this month, September, which is the first of a new volume, and the time when people begin again, after vacations, to take up new work for the winter.

Bear in mind, efforts must be made in reminding people to renew their subscriptions as well as to get new subscribers. Will you do what you can, by renewing a little while before your subscription expires?

What Will Our Gain Be for Next Year?

The old suggestion "Every subscriber get one new subscriber" is ideal, but you know, all will not act on that suggestion, so it remains for the "faithful few." As there is no money to be gained, except by those who act as agents, our reward will have to come from the Lord Whose eye is upon us. We ought to have a goal of at least a thousand new subscriptions a month, and then see how near we can come to it. Are you with us? If so, send us a post card saying so, and if possible, one new subscription in September.

Sincerely yours,

The Publishing Agent

To The Christian Workers Magazine, 163 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

You may count on me to pray for the magazine. I also will try to secure..... subscriptions during the coming year.

The Scofield Bible Correspondence Course is now owned and conducted by

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

This is the course heretofore conducted from 156 Fifth Ave., New York. It was established by Dr. C. I. Scofield more than twenty years ago and has enrolled about eight thousand students in all the world. It was the desire of its author, because of his purpose to give himself to oral teaching and the writing of some books, that The Moody Bible Institute should perpetuate his testimony to the world by the correspondence method.

(See Dr. Scofield's letter in the August issue of this magazine).

This course will not affect, nor be affected by the four strong courses carried by the Institute for many years; viz.:

SYNTHETIC BIBLE STUDY BIBLE DOCTRINE
PRACTICAL CHRISTIAN WORK
CHAPTER SUMMARY

During the past year more than nine hundred students enrolled in these courses, this being more than double the number enrolling the preceding year, which was the best in the history of the correspondence department.

Correspondence Work Has Come to Stay

It is feasible, economical, and practical.

A Nineteenth Century Message to Twentieth Century Preachers

A WORTHY BOOK REISSUED

REVIVALS: HOW TO PROMOTE THEM

As Taught and Exemplified by

COMPILED BY WALTER P. DOE

A handbook of Evangelism (in preaching especially) for the soul-burdened pastor. The combined thought of older and experienced preachers on methods of reaching the unsaved, through pulpit address. A compendium of sober, "old-fashioned" revival methods.

More than seventy-five chapters covering practically every phase of the work of presenting the Gospel (through the preached word) for immediate results among the spiritually lost.

"The aim of this volume," says the editor, "is to aid preachers and others in promoting genuine and continuous revivals of religion, by setting before them the teachings of eminent men, who have been greatly prospered in preaching the Gospel."

A very practical feature of the volume is the attention paid to the homiletic preparation of Gospel addresses. Specimen chapter titles revealing this provision are quoted below:

"Clearness of Style in Preaching" (Albert Barnes), "How to Preach" (Theo. L. Cuyler), "Expository Preaching" (William M. Taylor), "The Power of Illustration" (John Dowling), "Uses of Illustration" (John A. Broadus), "Preaching: Manner and Matter" (John Hall), "The Conclusion" (James M. Hoppin).

A FEW OF THE MANY CHAPTERS IN THIS BOOK

By Charles G. Finney

"Wisdom in Winning Souls"
"How to Win Souls"
"Preaching so as to Convert Nobody"

By Theodore L. Cuyler

"Winning Souls to Christ"
"The Revival We Need"
"Kindling the Fire"

By Charles H. Spurgeon

"Preaching Christ"

The effect of a reading and rereading of this ripe and timely volume is to keep the preacher conservative—a monitor often needed in these days.

What a boon a book like this would be to a discouraged pastor in a hard field! It would strengthen his faith and broaden his vision.

Ministerial students will profit greatly by the study of this valuable work. Its contributors were not theorists but well-known and practical preachers, soul-winning pastors and evangelists.

What Some Others Think

From the late Dr. Geo. Soltan:—

"He has spoken five times with me in this city (Sioux City, Iowa) with the greatest acceptance. Being himself a Jew, he appeals to a Christian audience from an entirely new standpoint. His addresses are out of the common. His presence will be a great help to any company of Christians."

"An audience that completely filled the gymnasium of the Y. M. C. A. building was held for nearly two hours by the fascinating personality and the thrilling address of Joseph Cohn, Sunday afternoon."

The Lansing State Journal (Mich.)

"The Rev. Joseph Cohn, who has delivered several sermons in this city, and of international fame, made an address before the body (Ministerial Association of Bellingham, Wash.). A resolution endorsing Mr. Cohn was adopted by the association as follows:

"Whereas, Joseph Cohn came to us a stranger, and by his beautiful spirit, his love for Christ and his inspiring messages and strong, mind-clarifying information concerning our brethren, the Jews, in our own land and in all the world; and whereas our people have been greatly helped and have so expressed themselves,

"Therefore, be it resolved by this Ministerial Association that we express our high appreciation of Mr. Cohn and enthusiastically commend him to our churches and ministerial brethren everywhere as a man with a message which all our people should hear."

SEPTEMBER, 1914

Editorial Notes

"If we live in the Spirit, let us also walk in the Spirit." Galatians 5:25.

"I always have to go outside of my own church to hear anything about the Holy Spirit." Thus said one Christian woman to another, as she was leaving a Cut from the Loaf Bible conference in which the Holy Spirit had been presented. How many other Christians must bear the same testimony? And yet there is no church considered as the body of Christ, without the Holy Spirit dwelling in and maintaining it. Unless He administers the church through the surrender of its membership to Him, how can the life of its Head be manifested? But for this constant instruction is required, and that ministry is a failure in the saddest sense which is not continually emphasizing the fact that it is the Holy Spirit alone who can take of the things of Christ and show them unto men.

With September, our pastors, Sunday-school teachers and Christian workers generally will have returned from their vacations, and be September's Opportunity planning their spiritual work for the Fall. Are all those to whom these words are addressed truly converted? Are they yet saved? If this inquiry appear impertinent, let them read on another page, "A Minister's Conversion—His Own Testimony."

But it is possible to be saved, and yet not be very clear as to why and how we are saved, and so be lacking in the experience of peace and in the nature of our witness to the Saviour. In such a case give heed to the sermon of the Rev. Mr. Page on "The Atonement."

We may be clear on the atonement, and have a good head knowledge of the scheme of the Christian faith, but what about our inner life? Have we ever beheld that vision of God of which Dr. Scofield speaks in his treatment of the experience of Job? As Christians, have we yet fully surrendered to God? Is our self-confidence gone? And what about that new and higher service, that richer fruitfulness that ensues in such a case?

We have still another question: The conduct of public worship is committed to many of us. What motive, and what attraction are we setting before our people for "Going to Meeting?" Consider what the writer quoted from a secular daily says about that.

These things suggest what we mean by "September's Opportunity." For many it is a more propitious time than the beginning of the calendar year to turn over a new leaf and form good resolutions. But as the preacher of the sermon on "The Atonement" says, a new life is better than a new leaf, and to be filled with "the Spirit of our God" is better than a good resolution. Hearken to our exhortation, fellow-laborers in the vineyard of the Lord, and "Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith, prove your own selves," and may this Fall bring you a fruitful harvest of souls.

It is no prophet who says this, no preacher, no teacher of the Bible, but just a plain every day editor of a secular newspaper—The Responsibility for the War Cumberland (Md.) Times. But he talks or rather writes, just like a prophet. Daniel said that the kingdoms of this world, the nations of Christendom, were like wild beasts, and that they would become more ferocious as the end of the age drew near. Some people have ridiculed Daniel and all who have attempted seriously to interpret him, but here is this matter-of-fact editor corroborating him fully, and pretty nearly everybody is ready to say, "Amen."

He is writing under the caption "Responsibility for the War," and says:

"Germany is not responsible; Russia is not responsible, or Austria, or France, or England. The pillars of civilization are undermined and human aspirations bludgeoned down by no Power, but by all Powers; by no autocrats, but by all autocrats; not because this one or that has erred or dared or dreamed or swaggered, but because all, in a mad stampede for armament, trade and territory, have sowed swords and guns, nourished harvests of death-dealing crops, made ready the way.

"For what reason other than war have billions in bonds and taxes been clamped on the backs of all Europe? None sought to evade war; each sought to be prepared to triumph when it came. At most some chancelleries whispered for delay, postponement; they knew the clash to be inevitable; if not today, tomorrow. Avoid war! What else have they lived for, what else prepared for, what else have they inculcated in the mind of youth than the sureness of the conflict and the great glory of offering themselves to this Moloch in sacrifice?

"No power involved can cover up the stain. It is indelible, the sin of all Europe. It could have been prevented by common agreement. There was no wish to prevent it."

Senator Cummins, of Iowa, is reported as saying that underlying the great war in Europe is the desire of the monarchies to prevent the rising tide of the movement for popular government. In other words, they believe it will tend to hold down the masses if they are plunged into war. We do not know whether this is a keen guess of the senator, or whether he has been studying prophecy, but at all events it comes very near that which both Daniel and the Revelator declare will be the case at the end of this age. The monarchies are the iron and the masses are the clay, and they do not cleave one to the other. The growth of democracies is the menace of kingdoms, and by and by according to Rev. 17, the latter will with one mind "give their power and authority unto the beast" that he with absolute despotism may accomplish that which they have been powerless to do.

A Democracy is bad enough, but it is better than the rule of an absolute monarch unless he be a righteous one. It is for such an one that we look, but he will not come by way of the earthly kings, but the heavenly One.

"Jesus shall reign where'er the sun
Does his successive journeys run;
His kingdom stretch from shore to shore,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more."

Sometime since, the Rev. William Plumer Bryan, D. D., of this city, put forth a valuable pamphlet on the Carnegie Educational Foundation, which we republished

The Carnegie Foundation in part, emphasizing, editorially, its serious importance. He dealt with it from the standpoint of the Christian minister, the shepherd of souls, showing its inevitable result in the output of our colleges from the spiritual side.

But on another page, President Churchill, of the Board of Education of the city of New York, treats it as an educator and patriot, and with similar disfavor.

We would not say all that President Churchill says, nor express ourselves in the same manner, for lack of knowledge, perhaps, yet we have feared this humanitarian project from the start. The motive or intent of its founder is not questioned, nor that of the educators he has called to his aid, but we believe the scheme in its essence is un-American and un-Christian. We stood with the bishops of the Methodist Church South, in their contest with it in the case of Vanderbilt University, and we feel that their defeat was a blow at the best interests of that denomination in the days to come. We believe it will be so with other denominations which yield to its seductions.

It is so desirable for our small Christian colleges, to increase their equipment and be saved the trouble of raising funds, that it is all too easy to sell their birthright for a mess of pottage. We affectionately plead with them to pause and consider before doing this. Already the great universities are so under the sway of the modern view of God and the world, that almost the only hope of Christian youth desiring an education is the schools of learning projected and maintained by the churches to which they belong; and if these become handicapped by obligations to a secular fund, the welfare of our country, as well as the church, will be seriously imperiled.

More than passing interest should be taken in the suggestion of Prof. Gulick, of Kyoto, that we treat all nationalities alike so far as our immigration laws are concerned, and that as a safeguard, only such numbers as can be assimilated be allowed to enter our borders. He proposes to admit annually a number of each nation equal to about 5 per cent of those already naturalized, with their American children, which would take care automatically of the whole question of Asiatic residents among us, as well as the undesirables of eastern and southern Europe. On this plan, Italian immigration last year would have been reduced to about one-third of its numbers, while only 220 Japanese and 758 Chinese could have been admitted at all; and yet, as stated above, every nation would have been dealt with in the same way. It impresses us that the immigration problem is hardly second in seriousness to any that faces this country. If we were assimilating these people in the political sense or saving them in the gospel sense, it would be different; but as it is, it is a case of treasuring up "wrath against the day of wrath."

A correspondent writes that in north-central Wisconsin, Romanism is a dominant political force and seems to be growing more aggressive and intolerant. He where there are two large Roman Catholic buildings and a parochial school for the German and Polish residents, and where there is not an English Protestant family for miles around. The religious customs of these people are referred to as being as foreign to us Americans as if the community in mind had just been transplanted from abroad. Some of the young men and women born and raised there cannot speak English intelligently when they come into the larger towns to do their trading. Our correspondent is justified in saying that such conditions on American soil under priestly domination, wielding political power, are a menace to our American institutions. We had better keep awake on this subject.

A factory in Chicago burned out the other night, loss $100,000, with the narrow escape of a conflagration covering half a block. It seems

An Ignorant Watchman ing the automatic sprinkler doing its work, supposed there was a serious leak on the premises, and hastened to the cellar to shut off the water, and then to the fire-box on the corner to summon the fire engines. Had he permitted the sprinkler to continue, the presumption is that there would have been no fire to speak of.

There are other watchmen just as ignorant. God has made ample and gracious provision for the removal of the sin of the world through the gospel of Jesus Christ, but there are those who are cutting off the supply and substituting something else in its place. Just now it is social service. They mean well, they are doing the best they know how, but they ought to be retired as watchmen till they become conversant with their calling.

A dear young man of our acquaintance who had devoted his life to Christian work, and who broken in health beyond hope of permanent recovery, writes us so

A Moving Letter moving a letter, that we are led to publish part of it for the blessing it may bring to others.

He says: "It seemed so much was so near, and I had looked into the world of usefulness with every hope. It had been otherwise, and at least for the present God seems to want something else. I get tired, oh, so tired, with the waiting, for I see so many that would seem to need me, and yet I can not go to them, or reach them as I had wanted to. However, it is all right, and if but the dross can be burned out, and the real metal reflect His image, I shall be glad, and feel in a measure that His will is being done.

"Sometimes I wish I might tell other young people, especially those who are in preparation for Christian work, how they are needed, and how they ought to give all that God has given them in cheerful service. How little did I dream a few years ago but that I should be in very different circumstances. It has not been easy to give up all that has been so near and dear to my heart and that for which I had worked hard to fit myself. But sweet is the consciousness that He knows, and that with Him I can walk.

"A few friends know the tragedy of my life. Sin made its marks upon me in the earlier days, and it seems as yet I cannot recover. Oh, how I long to! I want you to pray that I may not complain whatever comes to me, but to know that more than life, do I want to work a few years in the service of my Saviour. My heart is yours for service, and it helps to know that others think and care. Were it not for a few faithful friends I should never have had the courage to make the fight. Even yet I may win."

Little comment is needed. Many a Christian heart reading this will breathe a prayer for the writer. But will the "other young people" of whom he speaks, heed his warning and act on his advice? Oh, shun sin, we beg of you! Receive Jesus Christ by faith as your Saviour and Lord. Turn your back on the world and its empty pleasures, and give your best to Him who loves you and has given Himself for you. Get into preparation for His service. Make your life tell for Him by His grace. Have something worth while to look forward to in that day when He shall come "in the glory of His Father and bring His reward with him."

The Atonement

By Rev. J. C. Page*

A sermon preached in the Second Congregational Church, Denver, Colo., in answer to a Unitarian Criticism of Evangelist William A. Sunday

"THE Rocky Mountain News" contained a sermon preached by * * * * * of the Unitarian Association, in which William A. Sunday, the evangelist, was criticized for preaching of the atonement for sins through the blood of Christ. Such preaching was said to be demoralizing. "I am opposed to his coming here with his 'purchased redemption plea,'" said Dr. * * * * *, "since I cannot think it will result in saving souls in the higher and true meaning of that phrase. It seems to me a delusion to think that a soul can be truly saved except by a good life."

This criticism reveals an attitude of mind which betrays the secret of the opposition to Mr. Sunday. This evangelist is true to the Bible, hence he preaches all the great doctrines of the Book. The holiness and love of God, the deity of Christ, His vicarious sufferings and substitutionary death, the forgiveness and remission of sins through His blood, His resurrection and present ministry in Heaven, His power to save men from the guilt and grip of sin, and His return to call His redeemed to Himself and set up His Kingdom on the earth. Mr. Sunday believes that the Bible is the Word of God, that eternal life is the gift of God to the believer, and that there is none other name under Heaven given among men but the name of Jesus, whereby we must be saved. He believes that apart from this Saviour and the salvation which He brings, men are eternally lost.

In all this, evangelical ministers and people stand solidly with him. Liberal theologians and religionists have little use for "Billy" Sunday or any other man who has a similar message. My defense, however, is not of Mr. Sunday, but of the Bible doctrine of the atonement, the "purchased redemption" which is said to be demoralizing. Such a charge cannot pass unchallenged. It is frequently made by Unitarians and so-called liberal theologians. The vague religiosity, posing under the name of liberal theology, is the poorest sort of a substitute for the old gospel faith. Concerning it, Dr. Sachs, Professor in the University of Breslau, has this to say: "Every liberal religion bears in itself the germs of death.

Such are not able to give the individual, or humanity as a whole, the needed support for this life or the hope for the next. As soon as religion becomes liberal it begins to sink into mere philosophy. No philosophical system has as yet been able to satisfy the longings of men and one can safely prophesy that in the future it will be the same, because philosophy springs from the human brain, while religion represents revelation from God."

Religions of Men

This is a searching analysis, representing a vivid contrast,—that which springs from the human brain, over against that which is revealed from God. Every false system now holding its followers in the chains of darkness has emanated from some human brain. The stream never rises above its source. Hence the powerlessness of these human conceptions to save the people. The objectors to the doctrine of forgiveness through the blood of Christ are usually the men who deny that the Bible is a revelation from God. Underneath their denial of the doctrines of Scripture is a denial of the Scripture itself as an inspired revelation from God. To them the Book is a natural product, like any other book. To them Christ is merely a good man who suffered for truth's sake rather than the "Son of God" and the "Lord of Glory" "who appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself," and who "bore our sins in his own body on the tree." There are many advocates of a non-miraculous Christianity. These include Rationalists, Unitarians, Theosophists, New Thought and Christian Science advocates. When the reaction against the materialism of the eighteenth century set in an attempt was made to meet the demands of that day by substituting new types of thought for the faith of the Bible. The movements just mentioned are more or less the outgrowth of that attempt. The one conspicuous feature which marks all of these movements is best presented in the words of the Apostle Peter, "They deny the Lord who bought them." They do not deny the Lord, O no, that would manifest too clearly the place of their birth, but they do deny the Lord who bought them, they are opposed to any man who proclaims a "purchased redemption." Nevertheless its proclamation will continue.

"For the preaching of the Cross is to them that are perishing foolishness, but unto them that are saved it is the power of God. For seeing that in the wisdom of God the world through its wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the simplicity of the thing preached," namely a crucified Savior "to save them that believe." Some people require a sign, and others seek after wisdom, but we preach Christ crucified, to some a stumbling block, to others foolishness, but unto them which are called, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God.

*Mr. Page has resigned his pastorate to enter upon work as a Bible teacher in the Extension Department of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. He will conduct conferences in the territory west of the Mississippi River.—Editors.]

The Cross the Power of God

The message of the cross is the power of God. It has been and is now. The church on earth unites with the Apostle in singing "Unto Him that loved us and loosed us from our sins in His own blood and made us to be a kingdom of priests unto God and his father, to him be glory and dominion forever." The song of the Church triumphant is similar, for they sing, "Thou art worthy, for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood." In spite of all the opposition of men, the soul, to whom Christ crucified is revealed by the Spirit of God, will find that revelation to be the expression both of God's wisdom and power. In dealing with sin Christ crucified is a truth of such grandeur and glory that every soul to whom it has been made real finds himself irresistibly led to the place of wonder and worship. When a man speaks of atonement through the shedding of the blood of Christ as immoral, he bears witness that the Cross is to him an object seen only in its external aspect. Possibly the writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews had this in mind when he wrote the words concerning Christ. "After he had offered one sacrifice for sins forever, he sat down on the right hand of God, for by one offering he hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." And to this the Holy Spirit bears witness in the words: "Their sins and iniquities I will remember no more." When the Spirit of God bears His witness to a human heart concerning the finished work of Christ that heart enters into rest. It is no more occupied with the externals of the Cross. For him there remaineth "no more consciousness of sin" and "no more offering for sin." A crucified Christ is to him the greatest possible revelation of the wisdom and power of God. With the Apostle he exclaims: "Where is the wise with their philosophies; where is the disputer of this world? Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" The pride and pretensions of men are clearly seen and the emptiness of it all in relation to these great spiritual verities is understood. Things hidden from the wise and prudent are revealed unto the babes in the family of faith. "Even so, Father, for so it seemed good in Thy sight."

The Central Fact of Scripture

Now in regard to the atonement itself. The Christian religion is the religion of redemption. The central figure is the person of the Redeemer, and the central fact is the fact of His death. Upon the fact of His death a remarkable emphasis is laid in the New Testament. It is the basis upon which the superstructure of Redemption rests. Consider the amount of space given in the records. In their present form the first four books of the New Testament are divided into 89 chapters. According to the chronological arrangement of Dr. S. J. Andrews the events of the last seven days of our Lord's life on earth, culminating in his death and resurrection, occupies 29 chapters. That is to say, about one-third of the entire historical record is occupied with the last week of the thirty-three years. Why? Surely because of its comparative importance. He came into the world to die. This is His own declaration. The Son of man is come to give His life a ransom for many. Other Scriptures confirm this. "Forasmuch as the children were flesh and blood, he also himself likewise, took part of the same, that through death, he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the Devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Here is stated the manner and purpose of His coming and also the method by which the purpose was accomplished. In His own sovereign will He "took part" of flesh and blood. The purpose of it was "that he might deliver," and the method is clearly set forth in the words—"Through death."

All other men came into the world to live. He came to die. "For the joy set before him," the joy of delivering His people, "he endured the Cross." This joy was ever before Him, and He knew that it could be gained only "through death." "He steadfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem," knowing what awaited Him there, "The Son of Man must suffer and be slain." In the tenth chapter of John we hear Him saying: "Therefore doth my Father love me because I lay down my life that I might take it again. No man taketh it from me, but I lay it down of myself. I have power to lay it down, and I have power to take it again." From eternity God always loved His Son but this love fades in comparison with the love called forth in the laying down of His life. In the mind of Christ two essential things for men were coupled with the fact of His death, namely, the "remission of sins" and "eternal life." At the institution of the Lord's Supper He said, "This cup is the new covenant in My blood shed for many for the remission of sins." In the third chapter of John it is written "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth in him (lifted up on the Cross) should not perish, but have eternal life." Those who enter into fellowship with Him through faith, share in the value and virtue of His death, receiving from Him the remission of their sins and the gift of eternal life.

In the remaining books of the New Testament, the Acts, Epistles and Revelation, this subject of His death appears in much larger development. The business of the first four books of the New Testament is narrative, a narration of facts. These facts are interpreted and their significance is shown in the books that follow. The death of Christ and its effect is the main truth in nearly all the discourses in the Acts. The apostolic interpretation found in the Epistles is simply overwhelming in its assertion and proof that the death of Christ is substitutionary and redemptive, "He died for our sins." "He bore our sins." "He died, the just for the unjust." "He was made sin for us." The atonement through the shedding of His blood is presented as the basis on which the whole superstructure of redemption rests. It is not all of redemption but it is a foundation on which all rests. The offer of God to men, which includes forgiveness and remission of sins, cleansing, complete justification before Him, peace, eternal life and the gift of the Holy Spirit, is made on the basis of the eternal worth of Christ's work at Calvary. The first of the 21 apostolic letters following the book of Acts, the epistle of Paul to the Romans, sets forth the redemptive work of Christ in a clear and masterly way. The question at issue between God and man is the question of righteousness. In the words of Dr. Bonar, "God knows what we are. He knows what we might have been, and on the difference between these two He bases His testimony concerning us."

Sin's Enormity

The enormity and deformity of human sin and the accumulation of human guilt cannot be properly estimated by the human mind. The sacrifices of the Old Testament economy, while unable to "take away sins," did make known the heinousness of sin before God. Only the sacrifice on Calvary can take away sin. There the Son of God became the Lamb of God. "The Lord laid upon him the iniquity of us all." "He by the sacrifice of himself put sin away forever," and now the proclamation is made—"Be it known unto you therefore men and brethren that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins and by him all that believe are justified from all things." Objections to the atonement are the result of a very partial apprehension of the exceeding sinfulness of sin.

In the epistle to the Romans the whole world of mankind is shown to be devoid of righteousness. Not only is man without righteousness before God, but also without the means of securing it. By a process of logical and irresistible reasoning both Jew and Gentile, privileged and unprivileged, are proven to be "under sin." "Every mouth is stopped," no excuse making, and all the world is shown to be "guilty before God." Thus far it is easy traveling. The inner voice so strongly confirms the written word that we journey along together. No one objects to the confession that we have done those things that we ought not to have done. There is the universal recognition that humanity is sinful, and that the human heart cries out for deliverance. The parting of the ways is reached when we ask, "Where is the remedy and what is the cure?" God has his answer and man has his, too. Man's answer, the answer of the world's religions and systems of human thought is this: "Be good, turn over a new leaf. Atone for the past by doing better in the future. Do penance. Make a pilgrimage. Give alms. Keep the law." Thus by works of merit men seek to be justified before God. Now the apostle anticipates this grave mistake and hastens to correct it. "By the works of the law," he declares, that is, by law keeping, trying to be good, doing religious works, "shall no flesh be justified in his sight." Men are not saved from their sins in that way. "Not by works of righteous which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us." "Justified freely by His grace through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus." This is the divine declaration, this is God's way, the redemption that is in Christ Jesus. That this redemption is centered in His death is beyond all question. God set forth Christ to be a propitiation—that offering for sin which meets the righteous requirements involved in its forgiveness and removal. "Will not the judge of all the earth do right?" Yes, even in the remission of sins. God set forth Christ "to be a propitiation through faith in His blood," to declare or demonstrate His righteousness in the remission of sins. "The throne is established by righteousness." If this be true in earthly governments, how much more in the government of God. Of course God is more than a judge or a ruler. He is a Father, but he is a holy Father, a righteous Father. Jesus addresses him in these terms in the prayer recorded in the 17th chapter of John. The love of the Father referred to in John 10:17 is evoked by the purpose of the Son to honor the Father's holiness, and by laying down His life to make it possible for the Father to forgive righteously.

What Can Satisfy the Conscience?

Such a forgiveness and such alone satisfies the conscience and the moral nature of man. This matter of the conscience is in the mind of the writer to the Hebrews when he writes that "the blood of Christ who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God shall purge your conscience from dead works." Dead works is the burden of effort to atone for one's own sin. It is the perpetual turning over of a new leaf under the lash of conscience. From this burden the blood of Christ is the only release and relief. In this same epistle (10:22), we are exhorted to "draw near with a true heart," that is a heart imbued with the truth, God's revealed truth, and "in full assurance which comes from faith," "having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience," that is, an accusing conscience. The heart sprinkled with the blood is shielded from an accusing conscience. The blood of Christ answers back and the heart comes into possession of that holy boldness the maintenance of which is so essential for prayer. This leads the soul into rest. For "he that hath ceased from his own works"—dead works, the burden of effort to atone for sin—"hath entered into rest." The one to whom this rest, God's own rest for the soul, has become experimental, is satisfied in heart and conscience.

This is the glory of the gospel. It is not good advice merely, but good news. Good news from God concerning His Son who "died for our sins"; who was set forth by God to be a propitiation, the mercy seat, the meeting place where God alone meets sinners and where sinners become reconciled to God. Herein is love, not that we loved God but that He loved us and sent His Son to be the propitiation for our sins. It is God's own work, He initiates it, He carries it through. God sent His son to be a propitiation. God set forth Christ to be a propitiation. God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself. Herein is love. In the atoning work of the Cross both the righteousness and the love of God are manifested. Not only did God set forth Christ to be a propitiation but at the Cross He also seeks to overcome the estrangement and hostility of the human heart,—that sense of distance and defeat which entered into human nature when sin came into our world. Through a process of deceit and denial Satan led our first parents into disobedience, distance, dread, degeneracy and death. God overcomes all this at Calvary; the judgment of guilt and atonement for it was made there. The all conquering grace of God prevailed and prevailed righteously. God was in Christ, reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing trespasses unto the guilty, but to the sinless One, "for him who knew no sin God made to be sin on our behalf that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." This is grace indeed, favor from God, but it is righteous grace. Grace reigns, and it reigns in righteousness, through Jesus Christ our Lord. We are justified freely by His grace, but only through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus, the ransom price paid by him.

The Gospel for Sinners

This is a great gospel for sinners, and only as such does God deal with us. It is good news indeed and it is the power of God to save everyone that believeth. It is sufficient for the whole world. It is proclaimed to the whole world, but it is conditioned on faith. It is through faith in His blood; it applies only to those who believe. The modern gospels turn men back upon themselves. Their message is: "Quit your meanness. Be a man. Resolve that you will or will not. Forget the past. Turn over a new leaf." Suppose you heed these modern prophets and turn over that new leaf. This is very different from a new life. Between you and the past there is simply a human resolution. The tragedy of human life is expressed in the words, "The good that I would I do not, and the evil that I would not, that I do." Some of the saddest records of failure have often quickly followed the best resolutions. Not so does God deal with us. Between the old life and the new there is not merely a good resolution, but the Cross, the open grave and the resurrection morning. Old things have passed away and all things are become new. This righteous forgiveness and reconciling work wrought out for us at Calvary is, when received by faith, the necessary commencement of a holy life. For not only is the believer forgiven and justified, but also united to the risen living Christ, to bring forth fruit unto God. And "the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, self control." The death of Christ provides the sure basis of all hope of perfect character, and of eternal life and blessedness.

IMPROMPTU TO A PHILOSOPH

Jesus Christ was here below.
He died—he rose—and that to know
Tho' nothing more, would be enow
For faith to live upon and grow—
Our gospel minimum doth so
More than your maximum bestow.

The Inner Life

By C. I. Scofield, D. D.

A Sermon Preached in Dallas, Texas, Reprinted from the "Dallas News"

TEXT:—Job 42: 5, 6: "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee: wherefore I abhor myself."

Someone has called the Book of Job "The Epic of the Inner Life." It is most felicitous. We all know that there is an inner life; that within the barriers of our being, behind all activities and externalities, we ourselves live. We all know that there is transacted the real life. We all know that there we are solitary, that there every man is a hermit. And while this, past all controversy, is true, in another sense this strange inner life is immensely populous. Passions, desires, temptations, lurid and demoniacal thoughts, angelic thoughts, prayers, adorations, mean selfishnesses, wrestle and plead, and it is into this chaos that faith brings the nature of God, and the life of the risen Christ, and the immense peace and power and joy of the Holy Spirit, indwelling. And we all know that that is but the first chapter in the new history of the inner life. New conflicts, new victories, alas! new defects, too. The most commonplace Christian whom you know is transacting in the recesses of his being an epic.

And we know that this inner life is, finally, the source and spring of the outer life. It is, of course, possible to keep these dissimilar for years, but soon or late the inner life becomes determinative of the external life. It is with this life, therefore, that God most concerns himself. It is the distinctive characteristic of the gospel dispensation. "Now is the ax laid to the root of the tree," says the forerunner, John. "Make the tree good, and his fruit good," is almost the opening word of Christ. It was always so, indeed. "Behold, thou desirest truth in the inward parts." "The Lord pondereth the heart."

I can not, I think, do better than to take the last chapter of the Book of Job for my point of departure, verses 5 and 6:

"I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore, I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes. It is The Crisis of the Troubled Patriarch

The thing itself is very simple. "I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear." There was a testimony concerning God which had come to Job, and upon which he had based a true faith and a good life. Ordinarily, Christian experience has just that history. There is a record concerning Christ, his person and work. It is God's testimony, and we receive it and set to our seal that God is true. We are saved. It is a very real faith, though faith based wholly upon testimony, the hearing of the ear. That was the faith of Job down to the very last chapter. Here was a godly man whose outward life was so blameless that God could challenge the malice of Satan himself to find a flaw in it. Nor was he but negatively good. He was a good man in the positive sense. His life counted on the right and helpful side of things.

Then began that strange dealing of God, that permitted chastening, which has been the mystery in so many other lives. How strange a thing that the best man of his times should be the most troubled; should be the man upon whom, as it seemed, the hand of God lay most heavily. And the fact, as you know, called out various interpretations. The opinion of Satan concerning this man's goodness and usefulness was that he was a mere hireling. "Hast not thou made an hedge about his house?" You have given him unusual prosperity, and in a certain sense you have bribed him. That was Satan's opinion. That was a lie. And God permitted Satan to demonstrate the falsity of his theory of this man's life. God said, in effect, "Take away the hedge"; and then you know what happened: his property went, his children went, and yet the integrity of the man remained. He did not curse God. And then Satan fell back upon another theory which was just as false as the other. He said: "Skin for skin; yea, all that a man hath will he give for his life." You have left the man his health. "Put forth now thine hand and touch his bone and his flesh and he will curse thee to thy face." And so that was permitted. His health went, grievous pains fell upon him. Bereft of property, bereft of family, bereft of health, and yet this man, with a faith which was founded upon a hearing about God, maintained his integrity.

And then came the theories of his friends. They agreed in the belief that there must be in his life some secret sin, although he had succeeded in covering it from human vision. They were very sure that the only explanation of the sorrows which were falling so heavily upon him was that he was a hypocrite; was not as good as he seemed to be, and upon that belief they argued the question with him. But Job knew that also to be false, and he made good his contention that he was not a hypocrite.

And now we come to the real epic of his inner life. God himself took up the matter. And if you follow the closing chapters of this wonderful Book of Job, you will find the whole mechanics, so to speak, of the deeper dealing of God with the inner life of a saint whom he is about to make saintly.

There was, first of all.

A Vision of God

The unveiling of his power, his majesty, his greatness.

"Then the Lord answered Job out of the whirlwind. * * * Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth? * * * Whereupon are the foundations thereof fastened? or who laid the cornerstone thereof, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy? * * * Hast thou commanded the morning since the days, and caused the dayspring to know his place? Knowest thou the ordinances of heaven? Canst thou set the dominion thereof in the earth? * * * Wilt thou also disannul my judgment?"

Ah, poor Job! Thou wert able to maintain thy cause against Satan and against man, but what wilt thou answer to God? What, indeed, can Job say before this personal manifestation of God himself but that which he did say:

"I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear; but now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore I abhor myself."

The Utter Collapse of Self

Yes, fellow-man, thyself. Now the secret is out.

It was not at all something Job had done, it was what Job was. Job himself was wrong.

He had never judged self before God. He had not the sentence of death in himself. The interpretative chapter of Job is the twenty-ninth. The personal pronoun occurs forty-eight times in twenty-five verses. He was a good man, but he was too much aware of it, and he was in deep darkness as to the real state of his soul, of his inner life before God. And nothing, not the depth of his affliction, nor the reproaches of his friends, nor his own self-communings ever brought him to see himself. But when he passed from a knowledge about God to a personal acquaintance with God there was nothing to be said but the despairing:

"I have heard of thee by the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth thee. Wherefore I abhor myself."

The revelation of God, bringing a real sense of personal unworthiness and demerit, is what I think essentially we have in this experience of Job. It is not in exercises of self about self; not in any efforts of Job to discover the mystery of his inner life, that he comes to real self-consciousness; but it was the vision of God himself which, flooding his inner being, brought the humbling, hateful vision of self.

And then the most astonishing thing of all happened. God took up the vindication and restoration of the man who abhorred himself!

"The Lord said to Eliphaz the Temanite. My wrath is kindled against thee and against thy two friends: for ye have not spoken against me the thing that is right, as my servant Job hath."

And then, as you know, God made of Job a priest through whom alone the three reproachful moralizers could approach his offended holiness. And then came

A New and Higher Service

"My servant Job shall pray for you, and him will I accept."

You see, we have essentially four things here: First, the vision of God; secondly, the utter collapse of self, thirdly, a new and higher service, and lastly, a doubled fruitfulness.

"Also the Lord gave Job twice as much as he had before."

Now I believe we have here an order which is invariable, and I am very sure that we have here an experience which is not exceptional.

Oh, beloved, we have heard of him by the hearing of the ear, and we want to come to deeper things, closer things, with God. We want to come to that personal and undervied acquaintanceship with Him, so that we may say with the men of Samaria, "Now we believe, not because of thy saying; for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ," although the first effect of it will be this awful humbling, this utter collapse of self. But oh, how blessed a place is that valley of humbling. No one falls there who does not rise to newness of life and service. But remember, it costs the sentence of death in self; the thorough reconstruction of the inner life.

I wish now to gather up briefly what all this means. And first of all,

Two Things Which It Is Not

It is neither the entire eradication of the flesh, the death, the extinction of self, nor is it sinless perfection. Self is abhorred, distrusted, detested, set at naught. But so uniform are the characteristics of this experience, whatever the age or dispensation, that it is not difficult to state both the result accomplished and the steps by which it is wrought.

1. We have, then, in this supreme experience, the revelation of God himself to the soul. It is not something about God; some new testimony concerning God, or some lesson of sorrow or trial. It is God's own act, his self-revelation of something which testimony had never communicated to heart or conscience, so that there is a new and intense apprehension of himself.

2. The instances quoted from the Scriptures agree, too, in the effect of this unveiling of God. Before that vision of God self is abhorred. So absolute is this effect that, as we have seen, it is constantly spoken of as the utter deprivation of strength. The self-life is not slain, but it is so seen in that glory as never again to be trusted, or in any way counted on in the things of God. As Paul said: "We had the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God, which raiseth the dead," in the God of the resurrection, in the God of the new, undying life.

3. In agreement, too, are the biblical instances that this destruction of self-confidence is followed by the infilling with the strength of Him who was dead and is alive again. Not once is the man on his face before the awful, beautiful vision left prostrate. "I received strength," is the unvarying testimony.

4. And then comes the new and higher service. This is the blessed consummation; this and the new fruitfulness.

Could I covet anything better for you than that you should see God face to face? Than that there should come to you this highest word in the epic of the inner life? May he grant it for his name's sake.

A Minister's Conversion—His Own Testimony

[The writer is a Presbyterian pastor in Virginia whose name we withhold for the present, though we have liberty to publish it.—Editors.]

I SHALL begin this testimony by saying with Paul, "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift!" On the night of Sunday, June 28, in the inquiry room of the Moody Church I found my Saviour.

In order to render this testimony more emphatic and to give God greater glory let me review the past briefly.

I united with the church when I was thirteen years of age. Later on I graduated from college and decided to enter the ministry. I entered a theological seminary, was graduated and for three years thought I was preaching the gospel. Like some other ministers I had an intellectual conception of the gospel and no heart experience. My head was converted but my heart was not.

On the above Sunday I was in Chicago as a delegate to the International Sunday-school Convention then meeting in that city. God led me to the Moody Church. I had not been there very long until I realized that a deep spiritual presence pervaded the whole place. The singing was a wonderful gospel presentation in music. I listened intently to the service of song, and to the words of Dr. Gray. A deep impression was made upon me and I was led to attend the after meeting. There my heart began to be burdened with a load so heavy it seemed about to crush me. When Christians were asked to stand I—a minister of the Gospel—held my seat! I could not rise! I knew I was a lost man!

A brother urged me to come with him into the inquiry room. I went and there the load grew weightier. For an hour or more I suffered agonies too great for words. The dear Christian friends interceded for me and talked with me. In deepest distress I cried out, wept and pleaded. In an utter abandon of grief and despair I threw myself face downward upon the floor. I knew I was lost unless I found God that night.

One of the brethren was repeating John 3:36: "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life; and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him;" and John 5:24: "He that heareth my word, and believeth Him that sent me hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation, but is passed from death unto life."

The Holy Spirit showed me what those verses meant as I had never seen them before, though

I had read or repeated them a thousand times perhaps, and I thought, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved" without waiting for feeling or forgiveness or anything else.

Suddenly in an instant of time, swifter than thought—a wave of unspeakable joy and peace swept over my soul and standing I cried out, "Oh thanks be to God, I am saved! I am saved!" From that moment I have never had a doubt. The Bible is a new book to me and prayer is a precious privilege. As days pass I receive fresh tokens of His saving and keeping power.

That same night on my way to the hotel I stopped numbers of people—among them a police officer—and told them what God had done for me. It was such a joy to endeavor to advance His Kingdom. I talked with the hotel clerk and the elevator man on the way to my room. Then about 1:30 in the morning, after I had been praying and reading the Scriptures, I suddenly remembered that in my suitcase was a pipe, tobacco and two cigars. I was Christ's now—so the tobacco habit (which I did not have but which had me, and had possessed me for fourteen years) had to go! I seized the whole outfit, left the hotel and made my way to the Chicago river bridge. A whiskey-soaked bum was staggering by and I stopped him and said:

"Friend, I want you to attend a funeral!"

He said: "What's the matter with you?"

I pointed to the stuff in my hand, and said, "A funeral will now occur—here is where this habit dies and is forever buried."

Then I tossed the stuff into the river and turning to the tramp I told him about the Saviour who had made the "funeral" possible, and told him that God could do the same with his habit—drink.

For the first time since coming to years of accountability I lay down in peace and slept. Glory be to God and to the Lamb!

Friends, I know many are saying that this doctrine of the "New Birth" is all superstition—mystical moonlight! I declare to you that it is the absolutely necessary starting point in religion.

"Ye must be born again." I know! For years I had the other sort, culture, ethics and all those flimsy substitutes for heart religion. These substitutes may work reformation but not regeneration and regeneration is the threshold of the straight and narrow way that leads to life eternal—Christ is the door.

O, friends—have you found this Saviour?

"Sweetest name on mortal tongue, Jesus, Blessed Jesus."

says: "I am daily growing in grace and know now 'whom I have believed.'"

"Last Sunday night I gave my testimony before my congregation and God blessed it wonderfully. Everywhere I go I am bringing the same message of His saving power. I do not wait for a chance to speak in public—but take every opportunity that is offered to speak a word for the One who has done so much for me.

"I am now thinking of coming to your city to take a course in the Moody Bible Institute. I believe the fellowship of the men out there and the practical experience in work in the missions will fit me for such service as I have never been able to render before.

"In the meantime I am daily sitting at the feet of the great Teacher and learning of Him. Glory be to His blessed name—He leads me in this new life so gently and tenderly.

"All things have become new.—Blessed be God—I know what that means now."

HIS SECOND COMING

By William D. Page

If He should come to-night

Would I be waiting to receive my Lord?

Would I, rejoicing in His precious Word,
Be with His saints on earth, "of one accord,"

If Christ should come to-night?

If He should come to-night,

Would not dark shadows from my sinful past
Come, as black clouds the heavens overcast,
And shut His glory from my eyes at last,

If Christ should come to-night?

If He should come to-night,

And in the twilight walk and talk with me,
As once He walked and talked beside the sea,
Would I discern "The Man of Galilee,"

If Christ should come to-night?

If He should come to-night,

And by my bedside in the darkness stand,
And on my forehead rest His loving hand,
Oh, would I know Him? Would I understand?

If Christ should come to-night?

It is time to use the church and not abuse it. It is time to eliminate some of the dissipating societies in the church and use the simple church service as a means to impress upon men the supremacy of personal righteousness over community morality. It is time to develop in man a daily personal preference for soap instead of giving him a vicarious scrubbing once a week. When Jesus said, "Follow me," he did not say, "Join the Society of the Smiling Social Uplifters."—Elmer Willis Serl in "The Advance."

Sunday-School Evangelism

By Rev. H. M. Hamill, D. D., President of the International Sunday-school Convention

[An address delivered during the Sunday-school week held in The Moody Church under the auspices of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.]

MY text is seven words—a good Scripture number of completeness, and the burden of my address will be those seven words, the first of which is

Scripture

I lay the foundation, particularly, in these later years of my Sunday-school work in the Holy Scriptures. More and more I seek to find out what is the express Word of God with reference to the current problems of the age, because I believe the Bible matches every need of man in every passing generation, in any land or clime, or in any condition of life. Our scholarship should light its torch at God's Word, and any other followers of art or science if they would know the foundation of all truth and knowledge. The common people will hear that Word gladly now as in the days of Jesus Christ. I take the Scripture as the foundation of any treatise on evangelism.

My kindly introducer has defined my subject as the primary object of Sunday-school work. The best equipment, fine music, and all the paraphernalia of the modern Sunday-school, whether city, village or country place, are all as sounding brass and a clanging cymbal if they have not this definite test of saving souls. If I had to form a creed, I would put first of all, "God would have all men to be saved," and secondly, "God would have all men to be saved in the most blessed and profitable period of life." And I would maintain that without fear of successful contradiction from the Word itself. God does not overlook gray-hairs, for He says that if gray hairs be found in the way of unrighteousness, the grace and cleansing blood of Jesus Christ is able to save that man. He does not forget any sex or social condition of men or women. The Scriptures are sprinkled with invitations:

"Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." Isaiah 55:7.

And He stops all reasoning concerning the proposition at once by: "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways." But, if God seems to touch any particular class of human beings, it is when He touches the child. The whole Scripture, both Old and New, is bestarred with words that speak in tenderness to the little child:

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them." Ecclesiastes 12:1.

This is one of the earliest passages that youth, so like wax to receive and marble to retain, gets from the Sunday-school teacher or father or mother. The Old Testament is even more explicit than that:

"I love them that love me and they that seek me early shall find me." Proverbs 8:17.

No one can put up the question mark against the child if the child is ready to take Jesus Christ. Jesus has gone further to meet the children than the children can possibly go to meet Jesus. There is nothing more blessed than to have the children coming into the Sunday-school and church, for the Master said:

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

So I put that as the first proposition, that God would save the race at its most plastic time, its most formulative time, and the time when the greatest impressions are made upon the heart, mind, and body. You can rub some things out of the adult. Take a man seventy-five years old, and write what you think is indelible and by tomorrow evening it will be gone, but you teach a child, and you teach him for time and eternity. It is the most profitable time, and that's why God wants the race saved in its childhood. He wants to make use of the child—He wants the whole life—the whole life of the race, every moment sacred, and so far as possible devoted to His service, and a little child can do a great deal.

Take a church that has a right to be called a "Children's Church" where the children are held in honor and given a place of attention, where the children are trained to serve, it is as sure as Gibraltar against any future changes in the community. No matter what may come to other churches, the children's church of today will be the abiding church of tomorrow—it will be the growing church.

I never stand with socialists in denouncing the rich. That is the wrong kind of socialism. There is the right kind.

2. Experience

After the Scripture I appeal to your experience—your own personal experience. Pardon me if I take you by the hand like some strong winged angel, and lead you down the pathway of your long lost, though not forgotten, childhood. You are treading on holy ground:

There are gains for all our losses,
There are balms for all our pains;
But when youth the dream departs,
That takes something from our hearts,
That will never come again.

You may seek it everywhere,
On the earth and in the air,
Still you'll feel that something sweet
Followed youth with flying feet

That will never come again.

I do not care whether it comes to you in the country or in the city, Germany, Denmark, Sweden or America, nothing comes to you so tenderly as the childhood you once loved. The most holy thing about that childhood was the eminence of God's Holy Spirit when you were a little fellow in the old home. No one knows God so well as the little child, no one is so much like God as the child, and nothing can equal the infinity of power and the infinity of trust of childhood. And so you have in your own experience the confirmation of the doctrine that I set forth, that God will have the race saved when it is the most plastic, and to Himself and His Kingdom the most profitable.

I can never forget when I was a little fellow nine years of age, in the days of the oligarchy of the "Mammy." Even the preacher had his slaves. I remember that the social law was such that the boy who chopped wood or dug potatoes was under a ban. But my father was a Scotchman, and they have peculiar ways, and he said every Saturday afternoon you must chop wood, and in the summer time I had to dig potatoes. He tried an experiment with me one day. He had me take rocks from one part of the garden to the other then back to the place from which I had taken them. I rebelled against that and have never quite reconciled it with his ordinary sense of justice. But I didn't say anything. I remember one day he came out where I was and watched me chop wood. I cannot say I disliked it. I loved to get out in the field or garden anywhere. My father said, "You are getting along pretty well. I hear the boys whistling for you. You may go." But I had a message for my father. I said, "Father, I believe I will join the church tomorrow." I was nine years old. I had done my own thinking. You tell me a boy or girl does not understand. Sometimes not, sometimes the preacher talks over their head, but the average preacher would be understood in most instances by the average boy or girl. Father said, "I trust, my son, you have thought this thing through and prayed over it." He said, "How do you feel?" I told him in my boyish way that I believed Christ had forgiven my sins, that I loved Him and that I believed it would help me to join the church. He said, "All right, my son." I saw a quiver on his lips and a tear in his eye. I knew his heart was very tender. The next day I went to church and sat by the stove in the old fashioned church. The boys were all around me. I wanted to prepare them. I said, "Boys, I am going to join the church." They said, "Uh," and all kinds of remarks. Finally, they said, "Why?" I said, "Because I am going to try to be a Christian." By and by they quieted down. The pastor was one of the greatest preachers I ever knew and, when he closed the sermon, he never forgot to cast the net. He cast the net that day and said: "If anyone wants to join the church, let him come forward during the closing hymn." I hesitated during the first verse, but I made a frantic effort during the second verse and managed to find my courage. I went up and put out my hand, and he put his hand on my head and said, "Howard, I rejoice that you have decided in your heart to join the church today, and especially while I am pastor, and I pray God that He will inspire you to take the place which your father has filled." And the last thing my father did when he died on the sleeper on the way to Evansville was to put his arms around me and say, "God bless you, my boy, you are doing a great work as a Sunday-school worker." So there is experience. The Holy Spirit is especially eminent in youth. Heaven lies nearby in our infancy.

3. Record

The record of the church shows that 90 per cent of the flourishing Christians of the church were saved in youth. You not uncommonly hear it stated that 86 per cent comes out of the Sunday-school. That statement never ought to be so formed as to do violence to the faithful home or pastor. Many pastors are children's pastors, and their sermons help the little folks to become Christians. The pastor and the Sunday-school teacher both helped me, so I had the touch of the pastor and the Sunday-school teacher and the home. The Sunday-school sometimes gets more credit than it deserves. The home is not considered as it should be. I want to give credit to all who are interested in the child; but one thing is certain, you ask the great majority of aggressive Christians the time when they came to Christ, and they will say they came in early life. It is rarely that a man who comes after he is forty or fifty years of age is quite what he would be himself or what the church would have him be. I am not trying to discourage the saving of adults—far be it from me to discourage anyone from coming into the Kingdom, but he who comes late has already lost the biggest half of his life to Jesus Christ.

4. Reason

And I express it in this plain way. Any one can test the truth of it. The child is saved to everything else as a child. Say you want to make a musician out of your boy. You do not put it off until he is from twenty to twenty-five. If he has a talent for music you let the little fellow go to work while his fingers are supple and while the angels of grace and nature are singing in his ears. You do not put off his musical training until his hands are tough and the desire forgotten. Not so in anything in the wide world—in the world of literature, art, or science, or any training whatever. We issue this edict to the world: "Get hold of the child as early and as near to the cradle as you can and save him for the whole life."

5. History

That means this—if you take down the history of the church you find great revivals while all begotten among adults, were made permanent, if made permanent at all, through childhood. I challenge you as a careful and accurate student of history to find a single contradiction to that broad proposition.

Go back to Augustine, he started a great revival in the Catholic church, but he failed to put it into the hands and hearts of the children of his generation, and it passed away like the morning dew.

Savonarola conducted a great revival among the Italians. It stirred the hearts and consciences of the people as nothing had done for hundreds of years, but Savonarola's work unfortunately ceased with him, and when he died his revival died with him because he did not commit it to the children of the State and church.

Take John Knox of bonnie Scotland, he defied all opposition and taught Scotland the meaning of the Word of God as no one else has ever taught it. He embodied it in the hearts and consciences of the Scotch people, and wherever you go around the world if you come in contact with a canny Scotchman you want to practice what you preach when you are in his presence, because he knows it if you don't practice it. The revival in Scotland did not stop with John Knox.

Martin Luther prepared a catechism for the German youth, and the German reformation has gone around the world again and again and abides as a great spiritual uplift among the people because Martin Luther put it into the hearts of the children.

Take John Wesley, who said in the presence of the little fledgling Sunday-school at Rheimes, "How know we but that this little Sunday-school shall become the nursery to the church. Wherever you can get the people together we want you to take them, black or white." John's spirit is still marching on.

6. Opportunity

I always liked that old Egyptian legend about opportunity. Opportunity is represented as a strange being with a lock of hair on the front of the forehead, but none on the back of the head and with winged sandals on the feet. Some said, "Why these winged sandals on thy feet and why that lock of hair in front and none in the back?" The reply was, "If any man would stop me in the way he can seize upon me and I am his, but once passed there is nothing by which he can stay me." "What is thy name?" "Opportunity." So the largest opportunities await the modern Sunday-school.

I am more and more inclined to say that the Sunday-school should not be separate and apart from a theological and social code. Have the Sunday-school equipped for Sunday-school, but I covet for the boys and girls in every Sunday-school in this land the atmosphere of reverence that is upon the worshiping congregation. It may not always attain, but it ought to attain. I do not want to so secularize the Sunday-school as to make it wholly distinct from the auditorium and the house of God. I do not know whether I am trespassing upon the customs of this church or not.

Secondly, in the Sunday-school you can teach familiarly and colloquially as you cannot do in the pulpit. I stand and preach, and I have to preach with gaps intervening, and sometimes the people wish I would stop, but in the Sunday-school the teacher sits with the class and handles familiarly the Word of God. Then it is the Holy Spirit stirs the hearts, and we do not take advantage of it as we ought. I want to go into the Sunday-school, and as often as I feel the moving of the Holy Spirit upon my children and upon myself, I want to win the children now and receive them into the church. Why not? It is as good a church made up of boys and girls and young people as if their heads were gray and they had had long experience.

I want to ask you this: Is God going to discredit the preaching of His Word by laymen in the pew and give no conversions and grant them only to the man ordained and standing behind the pulpit? I do not think you would agree with that.

* 7. Child Evangelism

The conversion of the child like all true conversions must be directly wrought by the Holy Spirit, but after its own kind. The conversion of the child is not after the type of conversion of the adult, but it is as radical, as real, and as definite as the conversion of a sinner fifty years old who has been bound by Satan and passes from sin, under the touch of the Holy Spirit, into the purity of a child—just as real. It cannot be less real. And I intend to fight against that doctrine until the day of my death. The child needs to be born again for "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," and "We are by nature the children of wrath." You have to convert the child but it is a different form of conversion and requires different methods in order to help the child to conversion.

While coming down the Rocky Mountains one time, my friend, Mr. Price, said, "Look out and see that mountain stream." "Well," I said, "it is beautiful." The birds were dipping their beaks in it, flowers were blossoming on its banks, and it was very beautiful as it went singing in the sunshine as it passed on to the great river and the sea. Then I said, "Price, what is there about that stream that is so wonderful?" He said, "That stream is more than a mere stream, it is the head waters of the Mississippi. A little further down it begins to carry steamers and then plunges into the great 'Father of Waters,' then goes on its magnificent course to the sea, traversed by great steamers and carrying great commerce as nothing else can carry it. Down at New Orleans a man cannot go across without the aid of steam and great labor, but up there in the mountains a man can get across with one step."

You take a little child, there is the touch of the Sunday-school teacher, of the Sunday-school superintendent, of the pastor and of the parent, and little by little he is brought from the power of Satan to the power of God, and then all the days of his life he goes singing like the Mississippi in music and in the sunshine of God's grace.

Old School Books

I found them in the attic, where They'd been for many a year;
Forgotten, they were hidden there,
Unsought by mem'ry's tear.
But now I turn their pages o'er
With retrospective sigh,
For, O! they bring me back once more Fond thoughts of days gone by.

I see again the country road
That passed the farm yard gate,
Where oft with lagging feet I strode
To studious duties late.
How tempting were the whispering wood,
The brooklet's luring song—
A language boyhood understood;
To youth such joys belong.

But yonder, sheltered by the hill,
The old red schoolhouse stands,
A tyrant to my boyish will,
So urgent its demands.
But now, how different is the scene,
How beauteous, bright and fair,
Through all the years that intervene,
It comes, beyond compare.

And these old books have brought it back,
That spot my boyhood knew,
And led me thus o'er mem'ry's track
These hallowed scenes to view.
Here is the old arithmetic
That taxed my troubled brain;
It seemed a volume all too thick
Ere half its sums were plain.

The grammar, adjective and verb,
Were much the same to me;
They seemed inventions to disturb
And cause content to flee.
And here's the battered spelling book,
With puzzling words so rife;
How oft I sought for one sly look
To help me in the strife.

The leaves are yellowed now with age
And torn in many a place;
With pencil marks across the page,
And crudely pictured face.
Here's where she wrote, a blushing maid,
"Oh, then remember me!"
Beneath the grasses long she's laid,
But still her face I see.

O! comrades of those youthful hours,
What joy was yours and mine;
We little knew what fadeless flowers
In mem'ry's wreath should twine.
Forgotten only for a time,
Those scenes I now survey
Are pictured with a light sublime
In these old books to-day.

Going to Meeting

From "Saturday Night Thoughts" in the "Boston Evening Transcript"

A S I came through the church vestibule last Sunday morning a lady who was evidently on guard came forward and pinned a blue button on the lapel of my coat. I was not conscious of anything unusual in my appearance and felt myself singled out for some unexpected and unawaited honor. The little blue button, I found, had for its label, "Go-to-Church Day." What I, in the innocence of my heart supposed was an ordinary, though precious, opportunity proved to be a special celebration of church-going, part of a wide campaign to get neglectful people back in their places at the hour of public worship. I get reports from all over the country of great increases in attendance. The newspapers are advertising the movement and some of the results seem to show that the absence that has been complained of is due to something like inadvertence. That, of course, is a symptom; but it is not as bad as the deliberate hatred of the church, that afflicts some sections of the community.

Perhaps we are all more or less the victims of inertia in our undetermined hours. It is so easy to sit still. We are, in fact, so used to being lured to action by advertisement or driven by constraint that when any form of duty falls behind in its publicity campaign it loses grip upon our powers of self-determination. We are like the little figures of pith in the electrical experiment that only dance when the current is on. The churches have not turned on enough current of advertisement and so we do not dance.

"My Neighbor Lopson"

Advertisement seems the breath of life to some people. There is my neighbor Lopson; if he were wrecked upon a desert island I am sure that, at least at first, he would miss his newspaper more than his breakfast and only slowly wake to the use of his free powers of choice of what to do and think. I do not much wonder that the conditions of our life are raising a great crop of philosophical determinists. It is so comfortable to think that the next act is the mere outcome of foregoing causes. It rids us of a hundred responsibilities. We can sit with a good conscience reading the spiced or honeyed stories of the Sunday supplement and laugh at some surviving remnant of that ancient and absurd tradition we used to call conscience which might otherwise be telling us that we ought to go to church. The churches are awakening to this need of supplying a crowbar of sensation and advertisement for this inertia that manifests itself on Sunday morning. They are pinning on blue buttons as identification and reward. I shall pin mine on my night-dress next Saturday when I go to bed to remind me that heredity does not forbid me to get up at a reasonable hour on Sunday morning.

What, then, shall we say of this whole question of church-going? Is it one to be determined by each man for himself according to his impulse and first desire? Or is it in some sense a community question? Ought I go for my own sake merely? Or may I stay away for my own pleasure? We must get at some general and fundamental principle, I think, for the demon of inertia "will get us if we don't watch out." Perhaps we shall come to be like a man I know who postpones decision until after a late—a very late—breakfast, with the result that he usually dawdles so long over the newspaper that he stays at home on the ground that "Anyway, it's too late to go to church and disturb the congregation." Now I am more alarmed at the condition of that man's conscience than over any possible alarm of disturbance or surprise among the congregation. We would all like, I think, to settle the question on some more rational ground than this. Deep down in our hearts, I believe, most of us would like to settle it right.

"Mrs. Appleby" and "Mr. Dollars"

To whom does the church belong? Whom are we going to meet when we go to meeting? If we are going to meet the minister, that is all very well, but it does not in my judgment make a conclusive reason for church going. If I am going to meet Mrs. Appleby and observe what Sunday clothes she wears, or Mr. Dollars and arrange for a business interview on Monday, I am not sure but there is something to be said for the late breakfast and the quiet hour at home. None of the motives of this order are strong enough to hold us to the habit of going to meeting when the fashion of it ceases and the world is full of tempting calls upon a busy life. I am convinced that all appeals and advertisements along these lines of entertainment, instruction, companionship of neighbors are largely thrown away. Personally I even object to the announcement of sermon themes, for they distract my mind from the central object of the hour of worship. I resent it when Dr. Thirdly tells the world that he is going to reconcile the claims of science and religion. For the good doctor has no special equipment for reconciliation of claims which do not conflict. That is the Sunday when I am tempted most to spend the morning on the golf links. When Dr. Fifthly announces an evening lecture on the lesson of the latest novel I am sure I shall spend my time more profitably in the library. For none of these things do I go to church.

If, however, Dr. Thirdly and his congregation can convince me that in meeting with them I shall find myself in the presence of God, it will be hard to keep me from the great opportunity they offer. I can think of no attraction to compare with that of meeting with the Saviour of Christians and the God of all men. Churches that contrive to give that impression in their worship do not lack for attendance. There was an instructive example of the attractive power of the manifested presence of God some twenty-eight centuries ago. King Asa had cleansed his kingdom of idolatry and its wicked practices. No sooner did the people of the northern kingdom hear of this reformation than, the old chronicler tells us, "they fell to him out of Israel in abundance when they saw that the Lord his God was with him."

"Who Are We Going to Meet"

The important thing, then for the churches, if they wish to bring back the attendance of the multitude, is to let it be known that in going to meeting we shall be sure to meet with God. This, in fact, is what the church is for. Advertisement is a good thing, but all experience shows that money is wasted in advertisement unless we have a good thing to offer. The churches would be better for more publicity, and more of the sense of responsibility which publicity brings. But the object of the worship of the church is to produce in the minds of the worshippers that curious sense of awe which Jacob felt when he woke among the hillside stones after his vision to say: "Surely God is in this place, and I knew it not." If any church can so live (for the church is not the house, but the people) and so worship that the chance comer shall discover that in its companionship he has lighted upon the experience of God's presence, it will need no other attraction. Some of us have felt that intimate sense of God's presence all up and down the scale from the great cathedral service to the Friends meeting where, perhaps, we sat in silence for an hour of communion with God.

One of the main reasons why it is possible for the service of the church to induce this high mood of reverence and companionship is that it centers and fixes the attention upon just this one thing. Therefore, I sometimes doubt the efficacy and good sense of the "bright and cheerful" services which fritter away this power of impression in a hundred trivialities. However that may be, and allowing for all differences of taste and custom, I am sure that if going to meeting is not in some high sense going to meet with God, it cannot permanently command the thoughts of the multitude. Practical suggestions to the very competent leaders of the churches would be useless and perhaps impertinent, but that is what my little blue badge means to one churchgoer. Going to meeting is a great opportunity if, in some special sense, it carries the promise of going to meet with God.

The Re-Building of Babylon

By Willis W. Mead

[The following article has been in our hands for six months or more, awaiting a suitable opportunity to publish it. We do so now with the desire that it may bring to an end for the present the discussion of which it forms a part. We have great respect for the author though his point of view is not entirely ours. We agree with him very heartily in looking for the near approach of our Lord, however, and are not of those who expect great events to intervene before He comes. In reference to this we think him mistaken in saying that Dr. Cameron calls upon us to believe that Assyria must again arise, etc., before we may look for the return of Christ. Certainly such an expression is in harmony neither with our hope nor our judgment as to the teaching of the Word of God.—Editors.]

ONE word more about Babylon. I am glad to have read Dr. Cameron's article on the rebuilding of Babylon, in the February number of your magazine; for it is probable that this is as clear and as strong an argument for that view as can be presented. To many a careless reader the argument doubtless appears substantial and convincing, although, in reality, it is strong only in appearance. It is founded upon the sand and is laid up with loose bricks, without mortar or cement to hold them together. What I mean is this: The argument is based on the opinion of one man—Mr. B. W. Newton. To this are added the opinions, calculations, predictions, dreams and expectations of other men; and to these are added a number of Scripture passages that are taken out of their connection, some of which are misquoted, and none of which have any direct bearing on the case.

What is said about European diplomacy, about the Bagdad railway, the great irrigation works projected, and the remarkable fertility of the soil of that region, are very interesting, to be sure. They add bulk to the article, but give no weight to the argument. Finding proofs of such a rebuilding in the dreams of engineers, in the predictions of Sir William Wilcox and in the exaggerated stories of Bagdad in the reign of Haroun al Raschid are nothing but "feeding on the east wind." Bagdad is not Babylon. Sir William Wilcox is not an inspired prophet, and the dreams of engineers are not visions. "The highest authorities" may "agree that when these developments are in operation they will compel a rebuilt Babylon," and confirmation of the correctness of such a belief may seem to be found in the dreams and plans of both Alexander the Great and Napoleon to "make this very city the capital of a world-wide empire," as we are told in this article. But what are all these against the plain statements of God's Word? And what are we to learn from this mention of Alexander the Great and Napoleon, but that "The best laid schemes o' mice an' men and that He who frustrated the plans of Alexander and Napoleon is able to bring to naught also any modern enterprise that assays to rebuild the city of Babylon in defiance of the sure word of prophecy. God knew all about the fertility of old Babylonia when He pronounced doom upon its proud and wicked capital: "And Babylon, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldeans' pride, shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It shall never be inhabited, neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither shall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither shall shepherds make their flocks to lie down there. But wild beasts of the desert will lie there; and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures; and ostriches shall dwell there, and wild goats shall dance there." (Isa. 13: 19-21).

Nothing could be clearer or less ambiguous than these words. These alone should settle the question once and for all. But they are made doubly strong by the words of Jeremiah in chapters 50 and 51, from which we quote several verses: "Because of the wrath of Jehovah, it shall not be inhabited, but it shall be wholly desolate" (50:13). "Therefore the wild beasts of the desert with the howling creatures shall dwell there, and the ostriches shall dwell therein; and it shall be no more inhabited forever; neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation. As when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighbor cities thereof, saith Jehovah, so shall no man dwell there, neither shall any son of man sojourn therein." (vv. 39 and 40). "And Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling-place for jackals, an astonishment, and a hissing, without inhabitant" (51:37).

As we stated in our article in the February number of "The Christian Workers Magazine," these prophecies have been literally fulfilled, according to the testimony of historians and travelers.

Have These Prophecies Been Fulfilled?

But it is alleged by the writer of the article before us that these prophecies have not yet been fulfilled, and that they cannot be fulfilled except in the destruction of a "rebuilt Babylon." In proof of this it is affirmed that Hillah, a city having an estimated population of 13,000, stands on a part of the site of old Babylon. There are also said to be other villages, now inhabited, on the site of the old city, and Mr. W. E. Blackstone is quoted as saying of one of these villages through which he recently passed: "These Arabs seem to have no qualms about living here, though they are on the literal site of the doomed city of Babylon."

Now Hillah and the Arab villages were there when that region was visited by the travelers whose testimony, we have said, most clearly shows that these prophecies have been fulfilled. How then are we to account for this difference of opinion? In answer it is to be said that these later statements arise from a misunderstanding and misconception as to what is meant by "Babylon." The name "Babylon" is given in the Scriptures (1) to a province (See Dan. 2:49, 3:1, 12); and also (2) to the city so often spoken of in the Old Testament. It is also the name of (3) a greater Babylon, described by Herodotus and other ancient historians, which was surrounded by a massive wall, variously given as from ten to fourteen miles long on each of its four sides, and covering an area of from 100 to nearly 200 square miles.

We might speak of New York in much the same way, and a similar misunderstanding and confusion would result if we did not distinguish between New York, as a state, New York as comprehended in the term "Greater New York," and the New York city of twenty-five years ago, which is but a small part of greater New York.

So in the case of Babylon. The city to which the prophecy relates was but a small part of the Greater Babylon described by the ancient historians. According to Herodotus (died 443, B. C.), the city covered an area of nearly 200 square miles, enclosed within two walls. Ctesias, another historian, about fifty years later, spoke of but a single wall and reduced the area to about 100 square miles.

Rawlinson ("Fourth Monarchy," chap. 4) says: "It is difficult to suppose that the real city—the streets and squares—can at any time have occupied one-half of this enormous area" (100 square miles).

Diodorus Siculus (first century, B. C.) says that "but a small part of the enclosure was inhabited in his own day, and Quintus Curtius (a Roman historian of the Augustan Age) says that "as much as nine-tenths consisted even in the most flourishing times, of gardens, parks, paradises, fields, and orchards" (Smith's "Bible Dictionary," article Babylon). The same article also says that "No vestiges of the ancient walls are to be found." Therefore it is impossible to determine the exact site of the greater Babylon. As to the site of the real city (the inhabited part), the same writer (Prof. Hackett), says, "About five miles above Hillah, on the opposite or left bank of the Euphrates, occur a series of artificial mounds of enormous size, which have been recognized in all ages as probably indicating the site of the capital of southern Mesopotamia." And Rawlinson, after describing these mounds, thus adds, "Such then are the ruins of Babylon—the whole that can now with certainty be assigned to the beauty of the Chaldees' excellency"—the 'great Babylon' of Nebuchadnezzar. Within a space little more than three miles long and a mile and three-quarters broad are contained all the undoubted remains of the greatest city of the old world" ("Fourth Monarchy," chap. 4).

From this it is seen that Hillah, with its population of 13,000, and the Arab villages that may now be found on ground once enclosed by the great walls of greater Babylon may not be taken as proofs that the prophecies of Isaiah and Jeremiah have not been fulfilled to the letter. For Hillah is no more on the site of the old city than Jamaica, L. I., is on the site of New York City.

We have already referred to the testimony of infidel travelers that shows how remarkably and in every detail, these prophecies have been fulfilled. Had it been possible to do so would they not gladly have availed themselves of every opportunity to prove the Scriptures at fault?

The Scripture Passages Considered

Now as to the Scripture passages cited in the article before us to prove that the destruction of Babylon of which Isaiah and Jeremiah speak, belongs to a time still in the future, a careful reading of these passages will make it apparent that there is no necessity to understand any one of them as speaking of events that have not yet occurred. We feel compelled to express our strong disapproval of the forcing of Scriptures illustrated in the following passage: "God declared in Isaiah that He would break the Assyrian in Palestine at the very time when the yoke of that tyrant would depart from the shoulders of Israel. This would come to pass when the purpose of God on the whole earth should be accomplished. At that period the times of the Gentiles would be ended. Israel would be gathered and Jerusalem would be a praise in the earth."

Please notice the misquotation of Isa. 14:26 in the second sentence, whereby its meaning is greatly changed. By substituting the word "accomplished" for "purposed" the effect has been to push the "breaking of the Assyrian" forward to a time still future to us (A. D. 1914), whereas we know from the Word of God that this "breaking" of the Assyrian took place more than 2,600 years ago at Libnah, in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah: "And it came to pass that night, that the angel of Jehovah went forth, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred four score and five thousand (185,000!!), and when men arose in the morning, behold, these were all dead bodies" (2 Kings 2:35). So thorough and notable was this "breaking" that it has been recorded also in two other places (2 Chron. 32:21, and Isa. 37:36).

Why then should we shut our eyes to this remarkable fulfilment and claim that this prophecy has not been fulfilled? And why should we believe these teachings of Mr. Newton and his school, against the clear word of prophecy? What is it to us, or what should it be to any other lover of the Word, that "nearly every school of the students of prophecy holds the same views" with reference to the rebuilding of Babylon? Our chief concern should be to ascertain what the Word of God declares, not what the majority of the Rabbis hold.

The Assyrians long ago ceased to be a nation, or a people. Is it not remarkable therefore what Dr. Cameron calls upon us to believe, viz., that Assyria must again arise as a people, become a mighty world-power, and again impose a grievous yoke upon the neck of Israel before we may look for the return of Christ? Are we ready to consent to such a gloomy outlook in preference to the brighter and better hope that God has given us?

In passing we would call attention to a very interesting fact in connection with the mention of "the Assyrian" in Isa. 14:25. This passage gives us the approximate date of Isaiah's prophecy against Babylon, in chaps. 13 and 14. Babylon, as a nation, had not yet risen to the position of ascendancy as a world-power, at the time when this prophecy was uttered. Assyria was still the dominant world-power. But Isaiah, by the teaching of God, was enabled to see the rise of Babylon to the place of supremacy, and to predict its fearful doom, while Assyria was still in the zenith of its glory, and before Hezekiah had made the great mistake of receiving and doing honor to the ambassadors from the king of Babylon of which we read in 2 Kings 20 and Isaiah 39.

In regard to the other prophecies referred to in Dr. Cameron's article, these, in a similar way, might easily be shown to apply, in particular, to events that took place more than 500 years before the birth of Christ. Time and space, however, prevent us from taking up their silent protest against the use that is there made of them. We would therefore urge the reader to do this for himself.

In conclusion, we are constrained to express our surprise that Mr. Newton and his school should have failed to realize what an absurdity is involved in their view of a rebuilt Babylon. This "rebuilt Babylon" they hold to be identical with the Babylon of Revelation 18. Now the destruction of the Babylon of Revelation 18 is at the very end of the age, and within but a few days, at the most, of the time when our Lord will come in power and glory to bring in the new age and "the times of restoration of all things." How then, we ask, could the words, "Neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation" (Isa. 13:20 and Jer. 1:39) be pertinent to the closing days, or hours of the present age—the very same age, be it observed, as that in which Isaiah and Jeremiah lived? For when Christ comes to "restore all things," all things on earth will be restored by Him. Every acre of the land of Shinar will partake of that glorious regeneration; and all through the blessed days of His millennial reign the smile of God will surely rest upon that very spot where now men dare not dwell,—not because of any "ban of superstitious loathing" "which Christian man and before him Jewish man had cast over it," as Sir William Wilcox says, but because God has put shrinking, fear, and terror into the heart of men, with regard to that particular spot, in order that the words spoken by the mouth of His inspired prophets might be fulfilled, as they are unto this day.

Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching

By Thomas W. Churchill, President of the Board of Education of the City of New York

[Part of an address delivered at the Manhattan College commencement, and published by permission.]

SCARCELY any interest is more vital than that of education. None could suffer more or do greater harm to the community than this interest, if it were transferred to an irresponsible committee of private citizens.

Such a committee has come into existence within the past ten years, to assume over the collegiate education of the country, a control at once powerful and vicious.

About ten years ago our papers announced that Mr. Andrew Carnegie had with some millions established a fund for the pensioning of college professors. Not himself a college man, Mr. Carnegie has been among those distinguished citizens whose utterances upon the uselessness of college education had rendered their service by wide publication in the newspapers and by provoking argument and denial.

But about 1904 Mr. Carnegie set aside his college pension fund and formed his committee to administer it. At a salary of $15,000 a year, a president of the committee was appointed, offices were secured, filing and recording clerks engaged and the sign painted upon the door: "The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching."

What had been announced and hailed as a provision for the old age of the college professors now appears as a corporation to buy control of the management of such colleges as are willing to sell their birthright. What had been advertised as an institution for the reward of teachers who had lived from hand to mouth that they might instruct the youth of the country, now presents itself as a junta which declares college teaching and college management should be carried on according to the pattern prescribed by it.

Unless you conform, you get none of this money. Most conspicuously marked for discrimination by this Carnegie Board appears the religious college. "Drop your denominationalism," says the Carnegie Foundation, "and we'll advance you the money to retire your professors."

One cannot but blush for the weakness of human nature as he sees in the presence of the outstretched bribing hand of the Carnegie Foundation, Methodist colleges, Congregational colleges, Presbyterian colleges, Baptist colleges, Quaker colleges renouncing the faith of their founders. One can not but flush with indignation that any body of men in this generation, and in this country, would so brazenly employ the tremendous power of great wealth as to permit it to buy the abandonment of religion.

The Standardization of American Colleges

A widely advertised proposal for this private corporation is the standardization of American colleges. It appears that there are some institutions in localities where the number of rich donors to universities has not been so great as elsewhere. These colleges have attempted with their slender means and simple equipment to minister to the youth of their community. The evident desire of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching is to wipe these struggling colleges off the map. "It is lucky," argues the "New England Journal of Education," "that the foundation was born no earlier, for today a large number of the best students in the prosperous colleges never would have reached them but for preparation in the little institutions which the Foundation would destroy. Poverty and neglect is the Foundation's reward for the professor of the little college who will go out and preach the gospel of education and urge the careless youth of the country to come and taste of the fruit of study. Assurance of an old age of comfort is the reward held out by this Foundation to the instructor who is harbored in an institution wealthy enough to buy complete equipment, and to be able to exclude all applicants for education who do not measure up to the requirements which the Foundation is pleased to set."

Standardization is the watchword of this clique which has taken upon itself to buy control of education. As one reads the Foundation's reports he is struck by the eagerness with which the writers desire uniformity in the colleges. The recurring paragraphs upon "Unity in Requirements" contain so frequently the word "uniform," that much of the vocabulary might furnish an article upon the organization of an army, or upon the management of the dwellers in Sing Sing or upon any other institution of which the members are desired to look alike and to act alike.

This is the inevitable result of power in the wrong hands. For easier comparison, for greater strength of the governing body, the tendency of managers is to standardize processes, and to standardize men. For work not done in masses, for work not like the fighting of battles, experience has proved that uniformity, standardization, leads inevitably into formalism, into lack of adaptability, into intellectual and moral death. Needing as it does the daily and intimate correction of the great mass of the people, the saving common sense of the layman, education, real progressive adjustable and serviceable education can find in the unifying and unifying mania of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching only a menace, a threat, a damage, a peril, a jeopardy.

Excluding Youth from the College

Conspicuous among the propositions of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching is the demand for the exclusion of youth from the college. Their investigators have found that the smaller and even larger colleges admit young men whom the Foundation does not want there. The Foundation is for the advancement of teaching, not for the advancement of students. The Foundation desires to elevate the standards. It seems that some of the little colleges have been desirous to elevate the students. In its stand the Foundation has espoused as one might naturally expect it to do, the selfish as opposed to the generous theory of education; the select instead of the general, the aristocratic rather than the popular; the abstract idea of standards to be raised rather than the practical purpose of public service.

The religious instinct leads men to labor for the saving of souls. Warmed by its inspiring glow her priests mingle freely with the dregs of humanity, ministering unto the diseased, the weak-minded, the criminal. Into the savage wilderness of unknown worlds, braving heat and cold, suffering and death, her missionaries penetrate. Not to preserve religion, pure and undefiled by the contact of the simple or the untaught, but to bring into the enjoyment of its solace and salvation even the lowest of men; this is the spirit of religion as known to you. But the spirit of education as preached by this committee for the bossing of teaching is that only those youths chosen according to the measuring stick of the Carnegie Foundation should sit at the college table.

This board of exclusion is not willing to trust the colleges to decide whom they will admit. There must be uniformity of passports approved by this central commission. There must be uniformity of material received at the education factory. It matters not that one of the most considerable criticism against colleges in the past has been that voiced by Emerson, to wit: "They are, of course, hostile to genius." This committee on uniformity would establish by statute perpetual exclusion from college halls the raw material of genius. For it is the usual mark of men of genius that they are different, adventurous spirits, reaching results by new ways, rebellious to mental convention, strangers to uniformity. By the Carnegie Foundation's rules no Patrick Henry, no Henry Clay, no Lincoln, no Ericsson, no Edison, need ever hope to have disposed for him the treasures of literature, the accumulations of facts, the instruments of science gathered by any college of liberal arts subsidized by the Carnegie Foundation."

"The Debilities of Education"

With deliberate purpose I dwelt in the early part of this address upon the deficiencies in college training which are currently discussed in our time. They are the bases upon which it is sought to found the argument justifying

DEATH ABOLISHED

What is meant by Christ abolishing death, in 2 Timothy 1:10, in view of Revelation 20:14?

"Abolish" means literally, taking away the power from—making it of none effect,—not only in its essence, but in all its consequences. (See John 11:26; Rom. 8:2, 38; 1 Cor. 15:26, 55; Heb. 2:14.) This abolition of death is for the children of God only, the true believers on Christ, and will be fully accomplished at His second coming. The earnest or first-fruits of this abolition of death was the resurrection of Christ, the pledge to His own of their final triumph over death through His redemptive work.

REVELATION 10:11

When the Angel says to John, "Thou must prophesy again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings," does it mean that he is to come to this earth again before the end?

Some commentators think so, and regard John as one of the two witnesses of chapter 11 who are to appear in Jerusalem during the tribulation. Others interpret the words to mean simply that John would continue his apocalyptic narrative further, as he does in the chapters following. Still others apply the thought symbolically, and teach that John, in a figure, resumed his prophecy at the time of the Reformation in the Christian Church. Perhaps it just means that John, who was now an exile on Patmos, would take up his active work again notwithstanding the revelation in verse 7.

ABOUT THE HOLY SPIRIT

Is the Holy Spirit given the moment a man believes that Jesus is the Christ, or is He a gift which God bestows at a later period, as would appear from Acts 8:15-17?

Romans 8:9 proves that every believer possesses the Holy Spirit, but the passage in Acts 8:15-17 refers to a peculiar situation. For example, when the Holy Spirit was given on the Day of Pentecost, miraculous signs followed. But at that time He was given only to the Jews, while in Acts 8 the record is dealing with Samaritan Gentiles. As it was necessary to show that they were one with the Jews in Christ Jesus, the apostles were sent from Jerusalem to lay their hands upon them before the same miraculous signs should follow in their case. In other words, as Dr.

Pierson says, "The Holy Spirit here broke for the first time the castelins and limits of exclusion, and in demonstration of it the apostles were His instruments."

WOMAN'S ADORNING

Please explain 1 Peter 3:3, 4.

The inspired apostle is advising heathen wives who had been converted to Christianity how to live before their heathen husbands so as to bring about their salvation. Their conduct is to be "chaste"; whose "adorning," he says, "let it not be the outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of jewels or of putting on apparel, but let it be the hidden man of the heart," etc.

This does not mean that Christian women should not suitably dress their hair, neither does it forbid the wearing of any jewelry, or the employment of taste in the color, texture and fit of their garments, but that these things should not constitute their world, for "adorning" might be so translated. A woman sometimes shows her Christianity by the regard she pays to her outward appearance, but she does not bleach her hair, or paint her face, or load her neck, and arms and fingers with gems, or boldly display her figure by the fashion of her dress.

THE NEW BIRTH

We are asked to explain John 3:5, which reads, "Except a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter the Kingdom of God."

1. "The Kingdom of God" means fellowship with God, with all that it implies of forgiveness, peace, joy, knowledge, holiness, spiritual growth, earthly blessing and everlasting heavenly glory.

2. To "enter into" it means to possess it, to make it ours, in a conscious realization of these experiences.

3. To be "born of water and of the Spirit," is equivalent to regeneration. The "Spirit" is the Holy Spirit, through whose gracious power on our acceptance of Jesus Christ by faith, we become new creatures.

4. "Water" is sometimes used in Scripture as a symbol of the Word of God (John 15:3; Eph. 5:26; James 1:18; 1 Pet. 1:23), and many think it is employed in that sense here, but we disagree with them. In our judgment it means what it says. Water baptism was known to Nicodemus whom Christ is addressing, for proselytes from among the Gentiles to Judaism were thus baptized, and their baptism was called sometimes a "new birth." What Christ says to Nicodemus is that this baptism is not enough, and that there must be the baptism of the Holy Spirit.

HYPNOTIC INFLUENCE

I have read something in "The Christian Workers Magazine" under the heading, "Christian Faith and the New Psychology," about converts at revivals being under hypnotic influence, and I would like to be informed how we are to know whether or not we are under such influence?

We are not experts in this subject, but we presume no one can know that he has been under hypnotic influence, till he comes out from under it, and perhaps he may not always be clear about it then. As for ourselves, we prefer not to get under it, although in the hands of wise practitioners it may possess healing power and some other virtues.

The author of "Christian Faith and the New Psychology" however, spoke of revivals as sometimes accomplished by manifestations of sub-conscious control, such as is seen in the ordinary hypnotic state, and thought it wrong to assume that these experiences were all pretense, or to discourage them in religious meetings. His theory was, or rather is, that these experiences are an integral part of our mental apparatus, and if they are helpful in leading men to a changed condition of life, the preacher should employ them when he can. No one need fear a hypnotic influence that leads him to put his hand into that of Christ, and trust Him for his soul's salvation.

DIFFICULTIES IN 1 PETER

Please explain 1 Peter 3:18-20 about Christ preaching to "spirits in prison."

The following is quoted from "Bible Problems Explained" by James M. Gray: "The word 'preached' in that verse is not the usual one (in the Greek) used for preaching the gospel. It means rather to 'herald' or 'proclaim' something, without saying just what. The 'spirits in prison' in my present judgment, do not refer to the spirits of men, but angels; evil angels, of course, since they are 'in prison.' The particular evil angels in mind are those who were disobedient in Noah's day; see the following verse. If we wish to know the character of their disobedience, it is suggested in Genesis 6, in what is said about the 'sons of God.' The 'sons of God' there refer not to men, I believe, but to angels, evil angels. They are the angels or 'spirits in prison' to whom Christ heralded or proclaimed His triumph over them on the cross. See verse 22 of the same chapter, also Colossians 2:15 and other places.

"Allusion to these same 'spirits in prison,' and in somewhat similar connection, is made in 2 Peter 2:4, 5 and Jude 6, 7."

Please explain 1 Peter 4:6 about preaching the Gospel to the dead.

We quote again as above: "He means the gospel was preached to them that are now dead while they were alive. It was not preached to them after they died, but while they were alive. The result is, that having accepted that gospel, they now live before God in the spirit, even though while on earth they suffered as men in the flesh. The apostle is comforting and encouraging his Christian hearers passing through persecution by the example of Christ and that of some of their own number who had passed hence. Christ had been delivered and had triumphed. Some of their own number had likewise been delivered and had triumphed. They had been judged according to men in the flesh as Christ also had been judged. They now lived to God in the spirit as Christ also did. They were they who had had the gospel preached to them while living.

CHRIST'S FAITH OR OUR FAITH, WHICH?

Please explain Mark 11:22, Acts 3:16 and Galatians 2:20.

The writer in this case thinks that these references speak of a faith which is not our own, but rather Christ's faith communicated to us.

The correspondent is right. Read the first-named passage as in the margin and you will find it to say, "Have the faith of God," i. e., the faith which He bestows in Christ to the believer who takes it; and with this agree the other two passages as they stand, and many more, like Ephesians 2:8 and 2 Peter 1:1. If we surrender ourselves to Christ and take Him for everything He will become everything to us. This is the secret of a life of faith. What a faith has that man who has God's own faith in him!

BRIEF MENTION

Is The Christian Workers Magazine strictly an undenominational periodical?

Yes. The editorial and publishing staff include representatives of six different bodies of Christians, and its readers, we believe, are in every denomination.

Does John 5:25 refer to a physical or spiritual resurrection?

John 5:25 covers this whole dispensation and includes both, spiritual and physical resurrection. The spiritual resurrection referred to in verse 25 (which not only "is coming, but now is"), leads on to the physical resurrection of verse 28, which "is coming."

THE GOSPEL OF MARK

Lesson 6. Chapters 8 and 9

Reaching a Crisis

The four thousand fed (8:1-9); the leaven of the Pharisees (10-21); the blind man of Bethesda (22-26); Peter's confession (27-38); the crisis of the transfiguration (Chapter 9, 1-13); the lunatic healed (14-29); Christ's prediction of His death (30-32); ambition rebuked (33-37); sectarianism rebuked (38-41); future retribution (42-50)—these are the topics or events of the present lesson.

In the second of these events, observe a further illustration of Mark's power of observation and the minuteness of his record in particular cases—Jesus "sighed deeply in His spirit" (8:12).

The third is recorded only by Mark, and has an illuminating note attached to it in the Scofield Bible. It will be observed for example, that the man was "led out of the town" (Bethsaida). This town, as appears from Matthew 9:21-24 had been abandoned to judgment, and Christ would neither heal nor permit further testimony to be borne there (v. 26 of the lesson). But while Bethsaida's probation as a community was ended, yet He would still show mercy to individuals. It suggests Rev. 3:20, which please examine. It is curious that this miracle, like that of the deaf and dumb man in chapter 8, seems to exhibit Christ's power as less immediately effective than in other instances. Why both should be recorded by Mark only, whose Gospel more than the others represents Christ as the active, powerful, energetic Servant, is what baffles the expositors.

Mark, as usual, gives the briefest account of Peter's confession, and does not mention the Church. The mention of the latter is dispensational and is found in the dispensational Gospel of Matthew. Notice verse 33, "when He had turned about and looked on His disciples"—characteristic of Mark.

The warning about future retribution (9:42-50) is to a large extent peculiar to Mark, and is one of the most solemn in the whole Bible. "Where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched," can hardly be tortured to yield other meaning than the eternal conscious punishment of those who die in their sins. How awful the thought! What a motive for earnestness in soul-winning!

"Every sacrifice shall be salted with salt," is an allusion to Leviticus 2:13. The salt represents the power of the Holy Spirit to keep us from all that is impure and tends to corruption. "Have salt in yourselves" really means to be filled with the Holy Spirit. God grant it to us.

Questions on the Lesson

1. Name the topics or events of this lesson.
2. Name some illustrations of Mark's peculiar characteristics as a writer, found in this lesson.
3. What peculiarities do you find in the miracle at Bethsaida?
4. What is the doctrinal teaching in 9:44, 46, 48?
5. How would you interpret 9:49, 50?

Lesson 7. Chapters 10 and 11

Nearing the End

In these chapters we have (1) teaching about divorce (10:1-12); (2) blessing little children (vv. 13-16); (3) the story of the rich young man and its lessons (vv. 17-31); (4) Christ's second prediction of His death (vv. 32-34); (5) the ambitious request of James and John (vv. 35-45); (6) the healing of Bartimeus; (7) the formal entry into Jerusalem (11:1-11); (8) the cursing of the fig tree (vv. 12-14); (9) the cleansing of the temple (vv. 15-21); (10) teaching about prayer (vv. 22-26); (11) discussion with the rulers (vv. 27-33).

It will be well worth while to compare the teaching about divorce with Matthew 19:1-9, for the points of difference between them. It is evident that both the evangelists are recording the same incident, but the reading of the two together throws much light upon it. This does not mean that one contradicts the other, but that under the same guidance of the Holy Spirit one describes the event as he saw it, and the other does the same. Again, one lays emphasis on this feature of the dialog between Christ and the Pharisees, and the other on that.

But note Mark's particularities about the next event as compared with Matthew. Jesus "was much displeased," he says, "moved with indignation" (margin). Verse 15 is entirely original with Mark in this place, and so is the record that Jesus took the little children "up in His arms" and "blessed them."

In the same way observe the details in the story of the rich young man. His running and kneeling. "Jesus beholding him loved him." "Jesus looked round about." Also the astonishment of the disciples and Jesus' explanation (v. 24).

The second prediction of Christ's death has similar features. Mark says "they were amazed," doubtless at His calmness in walking into the face of death, when even "they were afraid." "He took again the twelve." "And shall spit upon Him." Mark alone mentions this in Christ's prophecy.

There is no contradiction between Mark 10:35 and Matthew 20:20, for if their mother spake for them it were really James and John who were speaking. All the disciples recognized this, for it was the sons they rebuked and not the mother.

The healing of Bartimeus as we noted in Matthew, stands at the beginning of the end of Christ's earthly life, and is the prelude to the great events following in Jerusalem. It holds the same place in the three Gospels. The apparent contradiction as to whether one man or two men were healed, is referred to in our notes on Matthew. But note the details in Mark (vv. 49, 50, 52).

The entry into Jerusalem is equally graphic. "A colt tied, whereon never man sat." Note the details also in 11:5, 6 and 11.

We can not pursue these comparisons throughout, but trust sufficient interest has been awakened to lead the reader or student to do so for himself.

Questions on the Lesson

1. Give the details of these two chapters.
2. What is the most important difficulty you note in Christ's teaching on divorce as between Mark and Matthew?
3. Have you reviewed our notes on Matthew with reference to Bartimeus?
4. What are the details peculiar to Mark in 11:5, 6 and 11?
5. Have you pursued the comparisons throughout this chapter?

Lesson 8. Chapters 12 and 13

Questions and Answers

The parable of the householder (vv. 1-12); the question of tribute (vv. 13-17); the question about the resurrection (vv. 18-27); the question about the first commandment (vv. 28-34); the question about the son of David (35-40); and the incident of the widow's mite constitute the contents of chapter 12. Chapter 13 is devoted to the discourse of Christ about His second coming delivered to the disciples on the Mount of Olives, also in response to questions.

It will be recalled from our study of Matthew that the parable of the householder found also in that Gospel (21:33-46), was one of the three in the use of which Christ formally rejected His nation, after the latter, by its rulers, had definitely rejected Him. It will be seen by comparison that Mark, as is His wont, passes on with celerity, omitting those features of the story which doubtless were not necessary for his purpose as in the other case.

With the question of tribute, begins that series of special temptations of Jesus devised by His enemies toward the last to entrap Him in His speech. The Pharisees and Herodians come first (see Matt. 22:15-22). The Sadducees next (Matt. 22:23-33). The scribe, representing the lawyers next (Matt. 22:34-40), and finally Christ silences them all by His question concerning Himself (22:41-46). We have included in this last section the few verses in which Mark refers to the discourse against the scribes and Pharisees, which in Matthew occupies the whole of chapter 23 (the "Woes"). And yet brief as Mark is, his abridgment contains "the chief characteristics of the corrupt leaders of the nation," which are religious vanity, hypocrisy and greed.

The incident of the widow's mite is not found in Matthew, but is given in Luke (21:1-4). How appropriately it follows Christ's denunciation of the Pharisees who "devour widows' houses" (v. 40). Note carefully the detailed description here. Where had Jesus located Himself? What was Jesus doing? Whom and what did He see? What is the value of "two mites?" What does Jesus now do? What does He say? What is the estimate of or encomium on the widow? Which gave the more, she, or the rich, and why?

In the occasion for the Olivet discourse, what interesting fact is given by Mark not mentioned by Matthew (13:3)? In treating of this discourse in Mark, Gaebelien's "Analysis" says:

"Mark's report is the briefest, Matthew's the longest. Omitted in Mark are the parables, which have special reference to the Christian profession (Matt. 25) and the judgment of living nations (c. 25:31-46). These belong in Matthew, but would be out of keeping with the purpose of the Gospel of Mark. The service of our Lord, as we have seen, is in the foreground. The three characteristic discourses in Matthew nowhere else reported in full are: 1. The Sermon on the Mount, which is the proclamation of the King. 2. The parable discourse in Matthew 13, the mysteries of the Kingdom. 3. The Olivet discourse, Matthew 24-25, the future of the Kingdom. But why should there be anything at all in the Gospel of Mark about the future things, such as the end of the age and His return in glory, if only the Servant is described? It will be seen that the predictions are in part at least in view of their service. He forewarned them as His servants of what was to come after His departure."

Questions on the Lesson

1. Name the leading incidents of this lesson.
2. To what group of parables does that of the householder belong?
3. To what series of questions does that of the tribute belong?
4. What chapter of Matthew contains the woes against the Scribes and Pharisees?
5. What does Mark omit from the Olivet discourse?

Lesson 9. Chapter 14The Betrayal and Arrest

This chapter corresponds with the 26th of Matthew, and contains the plots of Jesus' enemies (vv. 1, 2); His anointing at Bethany (vv. 3-9); the bargain of Judas (vv. 10, 11); the last Passover and the Lord's Supper (vv. 12-25); Peter's denial predicted (vv. 26-31); the agony in the garden (vv. 32-42); the betrayal and arrest (vv. 43-52); the hearing before the high-priest (vv. 53-65); Peter's denial (vv. 66-72).

Mark's talent for details is seen in his giving a specific money value to the ointment which Mary used, 300 pence; while we shall never cease to be grateful to him under God, for quoting Christ's laconic commendation of her in the words, "She hath done what she could" (vv. 3-9). How many sermons have these words preached, and what untold comfort have they brought to those whose limited ability has permitted only little ministries!

It is Mark who tells us that the Sanhedrin was "glad" at the chance to bargain with Judas for the life of Jesus (vv. 10, 11).

It is he who mentions the "two" disciples who were sent forth to make ready the Passover, and who indicates how the man was to be identified at whose house it was to be eaten. He also gives details of the conversation to be held with him (vv. 12-25).

Christ's prediction of Peter's denial (vv. 26-31) is made still more graphic by the statement concerning the cock crowing "twice," which likewise is referred to again at the time of its fulfillment.

In the Gethsemane crisis, according to Mark, Christ prays that "the hour" might pass from him (vv. 32-42).

And an exceedingly interesting detail is that of the young man who at the time of the betrayal fled away naked, and whom tradition identifies as Mark himself (vv. 43-52).

In the hearing before the high-priest, note that significant touch, Peter "warmed himself"; and that other about the witness agreeing not together (vv. 53-65).

Questions on the Lesson

1. Give the facts of this chapter.
2. Indicate some of the interesting details it contains, which are peculiar to Mark.

3. How was the host of the Passover feast identified?

4. What item of Mark's personal history is supposed to be found in this chapter?

5. How does he indicate the injustice of Jesus' trial?

Lesson 10. Chapters 15 and 16The Crucified and Risen One

Jesus before Pilate (15:1-15); mocked by the soldiers (16-23); nailed to the cross (24-41); buried in the tomb (42-47); risen from the dead (16:1-18); ascended into heaven (19-20)—these are the closing events in Mark's Gospel.

As in other instances, Mark's account of the trial of our Lord before Pilate is the briefest while that of Matthew is the longest in the Gospels. The former, however, especially emphasizes the religious hatred of the people. He also describes more particularly the charge laid against Barabbas (15:7) who was released, though guilty and condemned; and this because the Lord Jesus took his place. "Christ was his substitute," says another, "and Barabbas when released might have looked up at Him on the Cross, and have said, 'He died for me, he paid my penalty'—a blessed illustration of the atonement."

Mark says, "they clothed him with purple" (17), while Matthew describes it as a "scarlet robe" (27-28) but as Lange's Commentary explains, the scarlet military robe was meant to represent the imperial robe, and hence called in the symbolic sense purple.

Note how Mark dwells on the personality of Simon the Cyrenian (21). The reason he was drafted to bear the Cross was that Jesus' strength was exhausted and He could not Himself bear it. This seems implied in the word "bring" (22). They had to bring, in the sense that they had to bear, or carry, Jesus to Golgotha, they had to hold Him up on the road. As one says, what an appearance He must have presented after all the scourging and other indignities He received! How His face must have been marred by the blows, and how His sacred head must have bled from the cruel crown of thorns! It is Mark only who mentions that the wine (or vinegar) they gave Him was "mingled with myrrh," which was considered an anodyne to deaden pain. It was for this reason that Jesus refused it. Mark says it was "the third hour" when they crucified Him, while John says the sixth (c. 19, 14); but the latter alludes to the Roman method of computing time and the former the Hebrew.

Note how Mark mentions the "boldness" of Joseph of Arimathea in begging the body from Pilate (43). "Boldness" in the face of the Sanhedrin to which he belonged, and at whose insistence it was that Jesus had been crucified. One must be a converted Jew in these days and experience his persecution and torture at the hands of his own people, to understand something of what this may have meant to Joseph (Compare here Isa. 53:9).

Coming to the resurrection chapter, we again observe the brevity of Mark's account compared with that of Matthew. For the order of events on the resurrection day compare the comments on Matthew 28. Mark especially mentions Peter (7), which is the more noticeable because he also describes Peter's denial in the fullest way. The passage from verse 9 to the end of this chapter is not found in the two most ancient manuscripts, the Sinaitic and Vatican, and others have it with partial omissions and variations, but it is quoted by some of the fathers of the second and third centuries. The whole church, practically, has accepted it as genuine from that period.

The "Great Commission" in Mark (15:18) differs in many ways from that in Matthew. In the former the Kingdom is not in view, but "the Servant having given His life as a ransom, the good news is to go forth." Signs were to follow them that believe. These signs did not follow all even in the apostles' time, but they did follow some. And if they do not follow now, it is because there are other evidences more suitable for the later periods of Christianity. As a matter of fact, however, such signs do still follow the preaching of the gospel on foreign mission fields, and doubtless will be practically universal again as the end of the age draws near and the coming of the King.

Mark records the ascension of Christ as Matthew does not, and even penetrates the clouds and sees Him in heaven at the right hand of God. But He sees Him working with His disciples even though He is in heaven (20), and refers to it in a word found nowhere else in the Gospels. How fitting thus the close of that Gospel intended for the active energetic Roman!

Questions on the Lesson

1. Name the closing events in this Gospel.
2. What illustration of the atonement is found here?
3. Why was Simon drafted to bear Christ's Cross?
4. How do you harmonize the two accounts as to the hour of the crucifixion?
5. Can you quote Isa. 53:9?
6. What do you know about the closing verses of the Gospel?
7. What comment may be made on 16:17, 18?
8. What new thought about the life of our ascended Lord does Mark express?

the control which the Foundation is securing over collegiate management. But the very defects of the college are the strongest reasons why the Carnegie Foundation should be pried loose from its hold. The debilities of education are in so large a measure due to the rule of the so-called experts, the isolated doctrinaires, the makers and managers of the machinery of organization, that with scarcely an exception these defects indicate the need of popular, not official criticism, lay, and not professional suggestion.

Nine-tenths of the reform of teaching has come from public protest instead of from internal discovery. The Carnegie Foundation is built upon no public enactment. Its officers are in no enforceable degree responsible to the nation. By reason of imperfection of our labor laws, a lucky iron-master skims from the work of thousands of artisans the cream of their wages until they amass for him a fortune that puts to shame the possessions of Croesus of the olden time. By the heat, and the sweat, and the dirt of their toil before the fiery furnace, they accumulate a fund to be used for the exclusion of their own sons from the gates of institutions which an expectant public had fondly believed were established for the extension of opportunity lower and lower into the ranks of society. A proposition which was hailed as a work of generous philanthropy for a reward to self-sacrificing instructors has developed into a piece of disgraceful bribery, debauching professors, bribing religious institutions and threatening colleges with a reign of uniformity, rigidity and ossification.

Neither in politics nor in business can the spirit of American institutions be preserved by the use of self-perpetuating commissions. American government, if it is anything at all, is representative of the will of the people and accountable to it. But in education, a service to all men, a service in essence universal, this effort to control by the offer of money a large number of collegiate institutions and through them the public school system which furnishes their students, this self-instituted machine, this imperium in imperio, is unutterably vicious and evil.

Let this menace to the freedom of teaching be undone. Let the Foundation voluntarily, or by process of law, be dissolved, and its revenues be converted to a pension service pure and simple, beyond the power of a private committee to use for the promulgation of its own ideas upon institutions founded by other men, or maintained from public funds. Let the natural and the inevitable correction of teaching come from its proper source.

The Ten Virgins

Matt. 25:1-13

Golden Text—"Watch therefore for ye know neither the day nor the hour when the Son of Man cometh."—Matt. 25:13.

A parable is "an earthly story with a heavenly meaning." An analogy is "a likeness." This story is a parable. It is to illustrate the vigilant, expectant attitude of faith, Heb. 9:28; 2 Tim. 4:8. Leaving the temple Jesus drew the disciples' attention to its buildings and predicted its destruction. Proceeding to the Mount of Olives, His disciples ask Him, "Tell us, when shall these things be? And what shall be the sign of Thy coming, and the end of the world?" In reply Jesus gave the disciples His Olivet discourses and prophecies found in chapters 24 and 25. To fully comprehend this parable we ought to review all of this teaching. The discourse as a whole falls into these parts (1) 24:1-44 deals with Israel as a nation; (2) 24:45-25:30 deals with the Church as being responsible for the King during the period between His two advents; and (3) 25:31-46 deals with the judgment of the nations when the Son of Man comes in His glory. It will be seen that this lesson comes in the second part and is one of three parables concerning the responsibility of the Church. Jesus is the Bridegroom, John 3:28, 29; Eph. 5:25; 2 Cor. 11:2; Rev. 21:9, and sets forth the love of Christ for the Church, Eph. 5:25, 28, 30-32.

I. "While the Bridegroom tarried," vv. 1-5.

The first and strongest idea of this section is that He, Jesus, the Bridegroom, is coming again. Among those who wait are two classes, the wise and the foolish, though both were right intentioned. The lamps symbolize Christian profession, Luke 12:35; 2 Tim. 3:5, and the oil that which is essential to give us power whereby we maintain our profession, Acts 10:38; 1 John 2:20, 27. The foolish virgins were superficial and had not enough to maintain their professions. The wise virgins had enough oil—so also may the believer have the abiding spirit of Christ's presence whereby to maintain his Christian profession. Waiting, they all nodded (slumbered) and others evidently laid down (slept). The wise virgins could afford to rest as they had all things ready. If they had been awake, however, they might have seen and rendered aid to those who were in the sorry plight of not being ready. The tarrying was a test of the faith and patience of both the wise and the foolish as both awaited the "fulness of time" when He should appear. The only difference between the two classes was that one was expectantly waiting, and the other was not: one had oil enough (v. 8 R. V.). The foolish had some oil but not enough. The Bridegroom has tarried more than 1800 years because the bride is not yet ready.

Jesus makes many allusions to His delay and the practical lesson is for us ever to be ready as His return is imminent.

II. "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," vv. 6-13. All are awakened by this midnight cry. The hour was one when He was least expected and the church of today needs to be awakened to a realizing sense of this truth. Both the wise and the foolish have to meet Him, but the wise were the only ones whose lights could shine and show the way into the banqueting room. They all outwardly appear alike, even to the very point of separation. The Church of God individually and collectively, has yet to sense the danger to it and to others if its light for any reason be not continuous. This cry was a call to "meet him" and we all need to ask ourselves, "are we ready to meet Him?" The hour was too late to make the needful preparation to meet Him. In their emergency they turned to the five wise ones but the wisdom of one cannot supply the deficiency of the foolishness of others (v. 9). There is no Scripture to support the teaching that one man's merit is applicable to another except the merit of the God-man Jesus as applied to sinful humanity. Hence the wise send their sisters to the original source of supply for all, and as they went "the bridegroom came." So will it be with all who put off too long the securing of the Holy Spirit in their lives.

"They that were ready" went in, they that were not ready when they came found the door "shut." To attend a marriage feast is highly esteemed everywhere, but it is a privilege that is worthy of careful preparation. Remember that Jesus is here showing the attitude towards Himself of those who profess to be devoted to Him during the period of His absence, and who expect His return as King. That being so we need to remind ourselves of the laws of the Kingdom as He gave them at the beginning of His public career. In them we hear Him saying, "Ye are the light of the world Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel but on a candlestick Let your light so shine before men that they . . . may glorify your Father which is in heaven." Matt. 5:14-16. If we apply these words to this particular parable there is revealed to us the fact that true and real waiting for Christ is that which witnesses to men, and it was in this that the foolish virgins failed. At the outset their lights were shining but they failed to be in that close contact, in the exercise of those habits and practices of spiritual fellowship with their Lord which would ensure the continuous shining of their light. This broken fellowship explains what He means by His words at His coming, "Verily I say unto you, I know you not." They had broken connection with Him, the source of needful supply. There must be the careful maintenance of the relations of closest fellowship with Him if we are to have that supply of the Spirit as shall enable us to keep the light shining clearly and effectively.

Jesus knows those that are His, John 10:27; 2 Tim. 2:19; 1 Cor. 8:3, but such are not those who make a mere outward profession of faith and lack the abiding presence and power of the Holy Spirit. The day of separation between the true and the false is surely coming, a time when the real, genuine, Spirit-filled Christians will rejoice "at His coming."

The lesson for us is "Watch." Because we do not know the day nor the hour when He will come, therefore "watch." This word does not mean simply to look or to gaze but to keep awake, to be vigilant. "True watching for the Lord is that of vigilant observance of the laws of fellowship with Him, that ensures the clear shining of light."—G. Campbell Morgan.

The Judgment of the Nations

Golden Text.—"Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least, ye did it not unto Me." —Matt. 25:45.

I. The Congregation, vv. 31-33. This is one of the difficult and much controverted passages of our Lord's Olivet prophecy. The title "Son of Man" is one which refers to our Lord's earthly relations and administration, and is one not otherwise used in this prophecy. Jesus is speaking to His disciples. He looks beyond the dark passion so rapidly approaching to the light of the ultimate fulfilling of His purpose for this world. Our Lord here makes no reference to the final judgment mentioned in the Apocalypse. In that hour earth and heaven will flee away. Here there is no such passing away nor do the dead appear. The Son is enthroned. He administers judgment. He is assisted by the accompanying angels. The believer must appear before the judgment (2 Cor. 5:10, Rom. 14:10) but his destiny is decided the moment he believes, John 5:24. Christ first came in humiliation, when He comes this time it will be in "glory" (v. 31). He may come at any moment, Matt. 24:42-44. This scene is more the description of a judgment than of a trial. The testing is taking place today. Nor do we need to conjure up a picture of the entire world assembled in one place. The nations as such are judged when their representatives are gathered together. It is for the welfare of the sheep that this separation take place. Rev. 21:27.

II. Those Commended, vv. 34-40. The separating test is the attitude of the nations towards the brethren of the Lord. Here Jesus emphatically speaks of His Kingship, hence the honored position, "on His right hand."

In His teaching Jesus had emphasized the fact that those who do the will of God are His next of kin. Here they are, "Ye blessed of my Father." This word "blessed" means, literally, "well spoken of." We are blessed of God in the heavenlies in Christ, Eph. 1:3, but we are also to be blessed with an inheritance in the kingdom. See Gal. 5:19, 21; Eph. 5:5; 1 Cor. 6:9, 10 contrasted with 2 Tim. 2:2; 4:8; Jas. 2:5; Rev. 21:7. This blessing is a gift, Luke 12:32, which has been prepared "from the foundation of the world" v. 34. Man's destiny depends upon the object and act of his faith but the test, the proof, the evidence, of that faith is in his conduct, Gal. 5:6; James 2:17, 18. Altruism does not save the soul, but a truly saved soul will be compassionately serviceable. It is ours to assuage the thirsty, John 4:14; 6:55; ours to feed the hungry, John 6:32, 35; ours to receive the stranger, Eph. 2:13, 18, 19; ours to clothe the naked, Isa. 64:6; ours to visit the sick, Luke 1:68, 78; and ours to visit the prisoner, Luke 4:18. Note carefully the unconsciousness of good deeds. The Christian is so identified with Jesus Christ as to regard these deeds as not his own, but "Christ within." The real test is not so much love for God or Christ whom we have not seen, but love for the brethren whom we have seen, 1 John 3:17. Our attitude towards our brethren is the evidence that we have received Christ. Our life of service, though we may be "the least" will be commended before the throne and the assembled nations and angels. He is identified with "the least." This sentence needs to be interpreted in the light of the entire scene and its relationship. Those commended are sent away into an age-abiding life of felicity.

III. Those Condemned, vv. 41-46. Turning now to the other side, what a change we behold! "Come" is now "depart," not to age-abiding joy, but to age-abiding fire, which is age-abiding punishment. We do not infer that this parable refers to the place of the departed dead, to the final judgment of sin but to the time of His second advent and that the life that is blessed and the place of punishment are on this earth during the age of His millennial reign. Those who do not listen to the "come" of Jesus now, will hear His "depart" hereafter. Notice there is no reference to the Father following the curse such as we find in connection with the "blessed." Men are cursed by themselves, John 5:40. Those who seek to save themselves are likewise cursed, Gal. 3:10. The kingdom is prepared for the righteous and punishment is not prepared for man. It was prepared for the Devil (41) and his cohorts.

IV. The Lesson content. Let us look at the picture. Jesus on Mount Olivet, sitting in the midst of His disciples, knew full well what was awaiting Him on Calvary. Judged by human standards He was defeated and his defeat was to be made irrevocable by that ignominious death. So His enemies confidently believed. Yet He looks beyond the circumstance to the coming centuries and through them to the end of the age, and claims the victory. He speaks without hesitation of His hour of triumph and "glory" v. 31, of the time of absolute authority, of almighty power, when He should administer affairs in the Kingdom of God, "prepared for you from the foundation of the world." His view-point should be ours. We are in the last stage of His prophecy. Nations are no longer divided by dividing lines of race, language and locality. All the world is laid upon our breakfast table along with our toast and coffee. But spiritual lines of man's relation to the Son of Man, as manifested by their relations to His brethren who are His messengers, are beginning to make clear the lines of that ultimate cleavage which shall be declared in judgment when He comes. The good servants are to have a part in His glory. The doomed depart not for their evil deeds but because of the good they neglected to do. The fixedness of this separation is indicated in verse 46 by the fact that in the original and in the revised version the same word "eternal" (age-abiding) is used to define the extent of time.

"We live and serve in the dispensation of His grace, and in grace Christ has identified himself with sinning, suffering humanity. Wherever, then, and whenever, we who bear His name render service to these, we are rendering service to him."

—G. Campbell Morgan.

Review

John 3:14-21

Golden Text.—"I come quickly; hold fast that which thou hast, that no one take thy crown."—Rev. 3:11.

The lessons of the first quarter of this year's cycle chiefly present Jesus as the great Teacher. Those of the second quarter principally concern the aspect of His Saviourhood, whereas during this present quarter we see Him mainly as the great Judge. These lessons have dealt with matters which occurred during the last months, we may almost say the last weeks, of His life. During that "year of opposition" He is met with the most determined hostility and persecution. Nevertheless He proceeds against it all with calm assurance and in strict justice without a shadow of faltering.

This reading lesson contains the most celebrated and familiar verse in the Bible. In it we see:

A mighty God—"For God."

A mighty motive—"So loved."

A mighty scope—"The World."

A mighty sacrifice—"So gave His only begotten Son."

A mighty escape—"Not perish."

A mighty gift—"Eternal life."

We here then see Jesus set forth in grace and while it does not declare that He came to judge, yet, in the passage are set forth those principles upon which He is constantly the judge, and whereby He will eventually act in the last and final judgment.

In the first lesson, that of the laborers, Jesus taught His disciples the sovereignty of God. God has a right to, do as seemeth best to Himself. In this parable we see the true motive in service, viz., fidelity and not for hope of a reward. Jesus thus prepared the way for His denunciation and the judgment of the rulers.

Lesson two, which deals with the self-seeking disciples and the self-sacrificing Saviour, is intended to teach that there is but one path to true and lasting greatness, and that is the path of sacrifice and service. In it the disciple has presented the question of association with Himself in power, and the method and value of service.

The story of Bartimaeus, lesson three, is a beautiful and touching exhibition of His activity of mercy even in the midst of the approaching judgment.

In the fourth lesson is presented the parables of the pounds and the talents. Both are spoken to the disciples and both deal with their responsibilities to Himself in the coming days. Our eternal reward depends upon our acts and attitudes in the life that now is. We are rewarded not according to what the Lord has bestowed upon us but rather as we use that which is bestowed upon us. These parables pre-eminently deal with our responsibilities to Himself in the days to come. Thus far the lessons were spoken as He approached the city. The hour was approaching, therein, in which He would declare the verdict and pass sentence upon the chosen people.

Lesson five presents Jesus as the Messiah prophesied of in the Old Testament. It deals with the story of His coming into Jerusalem. Entering thus in such a manner demands our attention for it foreshadows the time of His judicial activity with reference to the people and the nation. The next five lessons may be said to deal with this ministry of judgment.

In lesson six we see some of the preparatory signs and teaching. The blasting of the fig tree and His cleansing of the house of God are both symbolical.

Lesson seven teaches us that if we fail to be faithful in the kingdom which has been entrusted to us it will certainly be taken from us. Jesus compels the rulers to define their own failure and to pass sentence upon that failure. He then most solemnly warns them that in the economy of God, His people Israel had been set aside from service.

Lesson eight presents the parable of the marriage feast in which Jesus unfolds the plan of God's invitation and its human rejection in three stages. We are to enter the kingdom through grace; but unless we show an appreciation of that grace by accepting the robe so freely provided for the wedding occasion, another evidence of grace, we shall be cast into the outer darkness. The responsibility is ours and not God's.

The ninth lesson is a political inquiry which our Lord answered by setting forth all of the important state relationships according to the fundamental fact of the Kingship of God. "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's, and unto God the things that be God's." No other answer of His better reveals the infinite wisdom, skill and tact of our Lord.

Man's supreme duty towards God is the chief content of lesson ten. The last of these lessons are in the realm of controversy in which we hear Him as He deals with the fundamental question of law and sets over against it the master principle of love. Man is to put God first in everything.

From the Olivet prophecy we get the last two lessons. In lesson eleven, the parable of the virgins, we are taught that the Lord Jesus is coming again and we must watch and be ready against that imminent event. This lesson also suggests the responsibilities of His people during His absence.

The twelfth lesson is a prediction of the judgment of the nations and reveals the way by which He is to begin the administration which will ensue when that kingdom is established. There is a kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world for the righteous and a punishment prepared for the Devil and those who wilfully choose to do his will. Those who cast their lot with his must go with him to spend eternity. They themselves sit in judgment upon themselves; judge themselves not worthy. The chief value of these lessons during this quarter is in the revelation which they give us of the fact that when our Lord made that last journey to Jerusalem it was not to the death of a victim, one who was mastered by circumstances, who could not escape; but as a King. As He marched along that pathway "setting His face steadfastly," He perfectly understood, and resolutely faced a passion by means of which He was accomplishing the purposes of God and beyond the darkness of which He saw the brightness of ultimate victory and glory.

Christ Anointed for Burial

Golden Text—"She hath done what she could."—Mark 14:8.

Event crowds fast upon event during this the world's most tragic week. Two days before the Passover occurred, the chief priests and other leaders entered a conspiracy how to rid themselves of this troublesome Nazarene. This plot mentioned in the first two verses of the lesson probably occurred four days later than the anointing. Note the separating paragraph mark; also look up carefully a good harmony of the Gospels. Following the Olivet discourse Jesus said to His disciples, "In two days the Passover." At that very time Judas was scheming with the rulers for Jesus' arrest. John, in his Gospel, tells us that the feast was six days before, and that it was in connection with this that Judas had left the company to go to the priests.

Judas Iscariot was angry at our Lord and this incident led immediately to the betrayal. Nowhere else in all history is there a blacker picture of the human heart or the lengths of iniquity to which it will go. Everything at this hour is strange. Events rapidly converge towards the Cross. For that grace has been planning and sin is plotting.

I. Mary criticized, vv. 3-5. Jesus had His inner circle of friends and his favorite places of abode and none was evidently more precious than that home of Mary, Martha and Lazarus. In this supreme hour Jesus came to this home to bring it a confirmation of faith and some further spiritual gift. From that time of Peter's confession, several months previous, the Lord has constantly reaffirmed His statement, then made, that He must go to Jerusalem, die, and be raised the third day. This teaching amazed the disciples and filled them with fear. Jesus did not, however, awaken faith and then quench it with fear, or allow it to languish and die, John 4:46, 54. Now as the darkest hour approaches, there appeared this one touch of appreciative sympathy. Bethany was of but little dignity but there lived there a man who had been raised from the dead—Lazarus. There also resided one who brought comfort to the heart of Jesus—Mary. She had listened to Him, she understood Him, believed and loved. With a woman's keen intuition she seems to have realized that He was really going to His death. What that meant to their hopes and aspirations she seems to have divined, and to realize, more than all others, His viewpoint. How to tell Him was her desire. Out of that love she purchased a box of ointment representing in value about $50, an immense sum, and the full extent of her treasure. Ordinary action will not suffice. The hour and occasion demanded the extraordinary. To it she yielded herself lavishly pouring upon Him the wealth and fragrance of that sacred ointment intended for kings. She had sat at His feet, Luke 10:39, and was ready for this the proper hour for anointing, John 12:7. It was her all, but love does not have the calculating cunning and prudence of Judas. No doubt other wise ones deprecated such lavishness and suggested a better use of so much money, John 12:4-6, for there are always plenty of Iscariots ready to criticize the acts of others, and that spirit often carries with it all others in its company even as the disciples caught the contagion of the criticism of Judas. Neither Judas nor the disciples could understand the spirit nor the significance of Mary's act, and envy seems to have dominated their attitude. Her act was so far above and beyond them that they could not understand it. It was not "waste" and often it speaks poorly of our love of Jesus to suggest such a subterfuge. To suggest the ever present poor and to neglect the soon-to-depart Christ was shallow indeed. There are plenty who never give of their own who are ever ready to criticize both the motive and method of those who do give.

II. Mary Commended, vv. 6-9. The story is beautiful in the record we have, of our Lord's words. Mary's compensation for the criticism called forth by her conduct was the commendation of her Lord. We do not censure the disciples who did not understand, but we are thankful for the word of the Master which their criticism called forth. Jesus realized the true meaning of the act and He named it when He said, "She hath done what she could, she hath anointed my body beforehand for burying." Notice that Jesus receives the true meaning of her act as for Himself, still it was for the world, for He said, "this that she hath done shall be spoken of for a memorial of her." This was not merely a reward for Mary, it was that her act should be an inspiration to incite His followers to like activities and attitudes throughout all the ages. This is all that is asked of any disciple (2 Cor. 8:12). Love forgets self, surroundings, cost or criticism. Love pours out itself to the uttermost and its fragrance fills not alone the house but the whole of creation, for who can measure the utmost bounds of its influence? Mary understood the Master's message, though those about her understood it not, viz., that He was about to die for her (v. 8).

III. Judas conspires, vv. 10, 11. This tender story ends with the terrible account of Judas. He had no sympathy for Mary, primarily because He was not in sympathetic relations with Jesus. Rebuked for His complaint he left the company at Bethany and went out to arrange the dark details of the betrayal.

Jesus had revealed, called forth, the deepest love of Mary's heart. In the case of Judas He revealed a heart of treachery. Accepting the adoring anointing of Mary and perpetuating the same, He at the same time calls forth a revelation of that compelling motive of selfishness in the heart of Judas that led to his own self-destruction. Contrast these two pictures. We recall the crushed heart of Mary at the death of Lazarus which brought Mary into the closest fellowship with Jesus. In her shadow and sorrow she learned to pour out her love in sacrificial anointing. Covetous Judas drawing within himself and nursing his greed rushes headlong to that final guilt in the garden and a suicide's grave.

It was really but little Mary did by comparison with the wealth of the world or the gift of God's love; yet it was an expression of her love. Though nearly two thousand years have passed the story is still a source of inspiration and its telling constantly results in like sacrificial devotion.

Men sometimes think and speak about religion as though it were no more than a kind of accomplishment, a special branch of culture—like those lessons at school which are reckoned as "extras," because they form no necessary part of the curriculum; you can do without them, for they are just a matter of choice and taste. But religion means a return to our only true place and attitude in the spiritual order. To be separated from Him is the one abnormal state of existence. For our spirits were created to be in concord with the Father of spirits, and they have no peace apart from Him, until they come back to their holy and perfect home in His heart and will.

The Gospel in the World

Edward A. Marshall, Editor

The languages of the world have been numbered as approximately 2,000.

On some of the islands of the New Hebrides all the natives are now nominally Christian.

The aggregate annual issues of the Scriptures in all languages are about 20,500,000 volumes.

Seven new churches were organized in Colorado last year, of which six are self-supporting.

The Guntur Mission in India has 44,000 baptized Telugu Christians, 15,400 of whom are communicants.

There are twenty-five Italian Protestant churches in New York City, while the Roman Catholics have nineteen.

The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel has achieved a record, having received £34,000 in 1913 more than in 1912.

The Karens of Burma have 836 churches with 48,668 members. They are self-respecting, largely self-supporting, independent, Baptist churches. —“Missions.”

The Foreign Missionary Society of Norway is doing a great work in China, South Africa and the Island of Madagascar, 5,359 persons being baptized in 1911 in these different fields.

During a religious campaign carried on in Paris last summer more than 500 asked for prayer and 180 confessed Christ, most of them being former Romanists.

Of 465 young men in voluntary Bible classes of the city and student associations in Nagasaki, Japan, during the past year, 186 became inquirers and 115 received baptism.

There are ten towns, ranging from 2,000 to 15,000 inhabitants, in the Quezaltenango province of Central America where there are no regular preaching services, although each town has a few believers. The Guatemala Mission feels the need of two more native workers for this field and their support of $600.

In Africa there are 500 mission fields, of 10,000 square miles each, without a single missionary. This vast region of 5,000,000 square miles contains 70,000,000 people.—“The Endeavorer's Daily Companion.”

In China, Korea, Japan, India, Ceylon, Malaya, Palestine, in the Sudan, Persia and in the Russian Empire, there are 212 colporteurs and 76 Bible women being supported by gifts from individual friends at home.

That church papers are money losers is proven by the following item from the Lutheran Standard: “The United Lutheran’ has 4,288 subscribers and is printing an edition of 5,000 copies a week. During the past year it was published at a net loss of $2,780.46.”

Little Rock, Ark., has erected a church out of the tithe money of a little congregation of sixteen members. The Board of Church Erection supplied the $250 of the $1,200 required to complete the building.—“Presbyterian Advance.”

In Liaoyang, Manchuria, the communicants of the United Free Church of Scotland number 1,457, meeting for worship in nineteen different places and forming three congregations. In Haicheng circuit, 52 new members were added in the course of the year.

The American Baptist Year Book shows a gain in Baptist church membership for the past year of 329,803. Its total membership is 6,846,286, of which 5,989,863 are in North America and the West Indies, 12,307 in South America, 616,763 in Europe, 180,541 in Asia, 17,121 in Africa, and 29,691 in Australia.

The Bible School of the First Baptist Church, Frankfort, Ky., gave $514 to missions this year. This result was accomplished by the teachers of the school meeting in a series of teachers’ prayer-meetings. Each class was assigned a definite portion of the amount fixed, which was $350.

Mr. Li Shue Kwai, who was educated in Hong Kong in a small school of the American Presbyterian Mission, where he came under Christian influence, has volunteered to teach the coolies on the plantations of Samoa Island. His acceptance of the missionary work came in reply to an offer from students on that island to pay the salary of a Chinese teacher.

In 1809 England sent out three missionaries to New Zealand, which after many hardships they reached in 1814. For years they labored without results, and it was only in 1825 that the first conversion took place. One hundred years have passed since those first missionary pioneers carried the light of Christianity to these heathen people, and now almost the whole Maori nation is under Christian instruction and influence.

"The Missionary Review of the World" states that one-third of the members of all Christian churches in the Kongo are in missions conducted by the Southern Presbyterian church. The population of the four stations, Luebo, Ibanche, Mutoto and Lusambo, in which this church is working, is 1,700,000. Sixteen ordained ministers and one physician, two single women and fourteen married women, wives of missionaries, making a total of twenty-three, are engaged in this work. The total number of Christians in the entire Kongo is 30,000.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Sinks have written concerning their work at Wanan, China, under date of May 20, as follows: "The Lord has been with us at our new station and we have been greatly blessed in the work already. Since we came four months ago we can see a marked increase in interest. A year ago five persons were baptized. Before that time there was but one member beside the evangelist. On the 5th of this month we examined ten candidates for baptism, four of whom were accepted and a few days later baptized. Now we have twelve communicants and about as many inquirers. Some of these inquirers are problems to deal with. They know the 'doctrine' well, but their lives are so inconsistent! These Wanan people are hard to reach; they are so self-satisfied and indifferent to the gospel. But we are constantly praying that God will open a new era for the gospel in this place shortly. Unless we keep very close to the Lord out here, our efforts are like bubbles in the wind. It takes the efforts of man backed by the power of the Holy Ghost to start the gospel and then a constant fervent waiting upon the Lord to bring the increase."

Rev. John M. Springer, a missionary in South Africa, says that many years ago two men from the Blaauw Berge Range traveled 700 miles to Port Elizabeth, where they worked on the docks shoveling coal by day, and attending the Wesleyan mission school evenings. They were both converted, baptized, and joined the church. When, after three years, the time came for their return to their own people, they asked the missionary if he would send a teacher to their country. He promised them he would do his best and send them the first missionary available. But the years wore on and the missionaries were few, and each one was needed elsewhere more than there; and then the man of God who made the promise died and the men from the Blaauw Berge were long since forgotten. Twenty-five years later a young missionary named Lowe was passing through that district to open up new work. As he approached one kraal the people came thronging to meet him with shouts and excitement, which left him in doubt whether they meant peace or war. Soon two elderly men came forward and said: "We knew God would send us a missionary. All these years we've been praying for a teacher to come, and every day we have watched this trail for him."

—"The Missionary Review of the World."

A letter from Miss Emma Boehne, missionary in Tsinanfu, Shantung, China, reads in part: "Our city of Tsinan is the capital of this Shantung province, and is said to have a population of over 250,000. Like other Chinese cities it has high stone and mortar walls around it, and there are walled suburbs also on all sides except on the north, which is marsh land. We live in the east suburb, and close to the suburb walls. The English Baptists have a very useful museum and church in the south suburb. There have been as many as 3,000 people a day visiting the Baptist museum, people from the country on pilgrimage to and from their sacred temples on the hills south of us. Short, interesting sermons are given many times each day, and Christian men explain things in the various rooms. One popular room is that which shows causes and cures of common diseases of eye and skin. There are enlarged models of flies, mosquitoes and vermin, and printed explanations about them and the danger of infection and contagion, which make graphic lessons for all. Many times the same faces are seen coming again and again to listen to the sermons and to copy these printed helps on hygiene. It is a wonderfully developed work, breaking down prejudice; and the many charts of different nations, comparing each with the others on all lines, mines, railroads, ships, exports, etc., show the Chinese how little they have and do. It is a great eye-opener to the backwardness of this nation."

TO SERMONIZERS

The following four elements will probably be found essential to every satisfactory sermon:

1. There will be propositions. We must state our case, and show our people what we intend to do with our subject.

2. There will be explanations. We must interpret, elucidate, and justify our propositions.

3. There will be observations. We shall comment on, and apply our text in all suitable ways.

4. There will be illustrations. There are very few sermons that will not be greatly benefited by some illustrations to let in the light and impress the subject on mind and heart.

THE SEASON OF THOUGHTFUL REST

"The Lord your God hath given you rest."

Josh. 1. 13

The autumn rest is not like a summer vacation, when all care is temporarily laid aside, and the strained nerves sleepily recover their tone; when drowsy days and long sleep make up for their earlier overwork. It is the thoughtful rest of Israel after the conquest of Canaan; of the business man after vacation is past and he considers how he shall now settle down to the new season's work.

1. It is rest from the hurried planting of the spring and the anxious waiting of the summer, and the strenuous toil of winter has not yet come.

2. It is rest from many uncertainties and as clear understanding as possible of the actual situation.

3. It is the restful assurance that every stroke of work now will tell.

4. While autumn is said to be in the end of the year, in fact it is the beginning of the year for business and school and church. It corresponds with that spiritual maturity which looks forward to the true life of heaven.—"Homiletic Review."

"THE PATTERN IN THE MOUNT"

Hebrew 8:5

By E. E. Pohle

1. The Outer Court, typifying the BODY of Christ, the shed blood of which provided atonement and cleansing.

2. The Holy Place, typifying His SOUL, from which came light and food daily for the priests.

3. The Most Holy Place, typifying the divine SPIRIT, separated by the veil, "his flesh" (Heb. 10:20). Here God met the high priest once a year; in the heart of every regenerated believer is a "holy of holies" where the Spirit dwells.

THE NEW TESTAMENT TABERNACLE

Heb. 8:2; 9 and 10

NOTE—The passages linked together in the various pieces of furniture suggest the identification of the believer with Christ as seen in Romans 6.

THE EPISTLE TO THE ROMANS

The theme of Romans is "the Gospel of God" (1:1), the very widest possible designation of the whole body of redemption truth, for it is He with whom is "no respect of persons"; and who is not "the God of the Jews only," but "of the Gentiles also" (2:2; 3:29). Accordingly, "all the world" is found guilty (3:19), and a redemption is revealed as wide as the need, upon the alone condition of faith. Not only does Romans embody in the fullest way the doctrines of grace in relation to salvation, but in three remarkable chapters (9-11) the great promises to Israel are reconciled with the promises concerning the Gentiles, and the fulfillment of the former shown to await the completion of the Church and coming of the Deliverer out of Zion (11:25-27). The key-phrase is "the righteousness of God" (1:17; 3:21, 22).—"The Scofield Bible."

"HOW I FILLED MY CHURCH"

By Rev. M. A. Matthews, D. D., Pastor of Westminster Presbyterian Church, Seattle, Wash.

It is not a pleasure for me to talk about myself and therefore I must decline; but if you will let me answer your questions with no reference to myself, I shall do so.

1. This church has been filled for nearly eleven years. Most of the time it is crowded, and scores and hundreds have been turned away. The audience has in it from 55 to 70 per cent of men. Frequently there are from six to eight services running at the same hour in the different rooms of the church.

2. The results accomplished are entirely due to the operations of the Holy Spirit. We pray much, expect much and get much.

3. The pure, simple gospel is preached. Sinai and Calvary are held up to the people. The vicarious atonement is emphasized; the sacrifice of Christ is presented daily; His deity and His mediatorial work are kept before the people. The whole gospel, and nothing but the gospel, is preached.

4. We make the gospel apply to every condition, circumstance, and point of a man's life. We deal with his social, domestic, commercial, political, civic life, with the gospel and only the gospel.

5. Every service is an evangelistic service. We never preach the gospel or finish a sermon without making an appeal for immediate decision and confessions of Christ. In other words, we try to demonstrate a passion for souls with profound love for God, implicit confidence, faith and trust in Christ and in the leadership of the Holy Spirit.

6. We do not have a sermonette after a long musical program of questionable ecclesiastical music. Every member of the choir must be a Christian and spiritual music must be used, but that program is kept in its minor place. The sermons are not dictated by the clock. Time enough is taken to present the case of sin, produce conviction in the hearer's mind and ask for the work of the Holy Spirit to produce conversions.

7. Every man, woman and child in this church is supposed to have something to do and is required to do the thing assigned. Personal work and personal evangelism are key-notes.—"The Christian Herald."

"CASTING ALL YOUR CARE UPON HIM"

In the summer of 1879 I descended the Rigi with one of the most faithful of Swiss guides. Beyond the services of the day, he gave me, unconsciously, a lesson for life. His first care was to put my wraps and other burdens upon his shoulders. In doing so he called for all; but I chose to keep back a few for special care. I soon found them no little hindrance to the freedom of my movement; but still I would not give them up until my guide, returning to where I was resting for a moment, kindly but firmly demanded that I should give him everything but my alpenstock. Putting them with the utmost care upon his shoulders, with a look of intense satisfaction, he led the way. And now, with my freedom, I found that I could make double the speed with double safety, and then as I leaped lightly from rock to rock down the steep mountain side I said within myself: "And ever thus will I follow Jesus my Guide, my Burden-bearer; I will rest all my care upon him, for he careth for me."—"Flying Leaves."

THE TRUE RESTING PLACEOn What Are You Resting?

Fancies? Some people are. They say, "I think that if a man does his best, he can never come out very wrong at the end," or something to that effect. Do you agree with them? To say, "I think," in matters connected with your soul's salvation is the greatest folly. What you think is a poor foundation to rest on. Fancy is utterly worthless as a ground of certainty.

Feelings. When feeling happy the language of many is, "I am saved." When unhappy, their cry is, "I am lost." Have you experienced this? Then remember that feelings are not a cause, but an effect. He who is saved will, if he grieve not the Holy Spirit, have happy feelings, but, on the other hand, many feel happy who are not saved. Feelings as a foundation are worse than shifting sands.

Faith? Some well-nigh put faith into the place of a Saviour. They talk of great faith and little faith, of strong faith and weak faith. Faith is most important and essential if we would be saved; but do not forget that it ranks second to the facts which we believe, or to that glorious Person, the Lord Jesus Christ, in whom we believe. Faith is but the window of the house through which the gospel light shines in; it is not, and never will be, the foundation.

Facts? Thank God, here it is that I am resting. On God's facts. It is a fact that "Christ died for our sins, that he was buried, and that he rose again" (1 Cor. 15:3, 4). It is a fact that "Whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins" (Acts 10:43). Unlike fancies, God's facts are true. Unlike feelings, God's facts are unchangeable. Make them your true and abiding resting place. "Now is the accepted time."—F. B. H.

Notes and Suggestions

GOSPEL DESTITUTION

A most pathetic letter has been received from a Christian woman in Eastern Kentucky speaking of the moral and religious destitution where she lives, and begging some one to come and preach the gospel. Any interested might write A. F. Gaylord, 153 Institute Place, Chicago.

THE AUSTRALASIAN CHAPMAN-ALEXANDER BIBLE INSTITUTE

The first thought of this Institute was entertained in May, 1912, and after a long season of prayerful consideration the announcement of its establishment was made in November following. Advisory boards were formed in the Australian States and search was made for a man to take charge. This search resulted in the selection of Rev. J. H. Elliott, D. D., a well known pastor and evangelist, but more recently connected with The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. Dr. Elliott accepted the position and arrived at Adelaide, Australia, early in June. The formal opening took place June 13, with much enthusiasm.

THE HEBREW CHRISTIAN ALLIANCE OF AMERICA

This organization was completed in New York, May 23, 1914. The officers chosen were: Rev. S. B. Robold, Toronto, president; Rev. H. Zeckhausen, M. D., New York, vice-president; Mr. J. H. Levy, New York, recording secretary; Mr. M. Ruben, Pittsburgh, treasurer; and Rev. A. R. Kuldell, Philadelphia, corresponding secretary. The last is the only officer promised, but not assured, a salary. He gives his entire time to conferences with individual Hebrews and arranging for conferences. Contributions may be sent to the treasurer at 333 Forty-second St., Pittsburgh, Pa. It is hoped that this alliance may become the alliance of the Hebrews of the world.

OLD ANTIOCH FORUM FOUND

Excavations in ancient Antioch, conducted by Sir William M. Ramsay, have yielded the discovery of the Antiochan forum in Pisidia, a letter from the explorer which reached New York recently announced. Apart from the effects of rain and decay, it is much as it was when St. Paul walked through it, the letter said. It retains the form in which it was put about 14 to 18 A. D. An inscription of the reign of Augustus was engraved on the balustrade of the great staircase, sixty-six feet broad.

The discovery came after a bare beginning had been made on the work of excavation. Dr. Ramsay said in his letter, which was sent to the Rev. Dr. S. Edward Young, of Brooklyn, New York.—Associated Press Dispatch.

JEWISH EFFICIENCY

Some astonishing figures regarding the wages earned by Jews in various trades in comparison with non-Jews have just been published by the "Department of Labor of the United States Government." Seven groups of trades are reported upon, and in all the Jew is shown to earn more and, what is of equal importance, while working a less number of hours than his non-Jewish fellow-worker. In two of the trades, baking and printing, where there are "Hebrew unions," we find that the Jewish bakers obtain .4706 per hour against the .3000 of other workers in Boston, while in New York the figures are .5098 against .2623. In the printing trade there is the same story, Hebrew linotypers, for instance, getting .8056 against the .5417 in English, the Jews working thirty-six hours against the English forty-eight.—The Jewish Era.

ULSTER NOT BLUFFING

H. S. Morrison, of Coleraine, Ulster, Ireland, writes to a friend in Chicago, that the item sent out by a German newspaper reporter, that the threatened civil war in Ulster was "one of the most monumental bluffs in the history of the world" was not well grounded. He says that the vast majority of the people in Ulster are Scotch, who have been in that country for two hundred years, with their Presbyterianism, which has been somewhat altered, as he believes, for the better. He says it was this class of people that formed the backbone of Washington's army, and that has given ten out of twenty-six presidents to the United States. There is in Ulster now a volunteer force of 80,000 efficient men, and the number would be doubled on the outbreak of hostilities. The Ulsterites could transport 2,000 armed and determined men, within any distance of 100 miles, in six hours. He trusts, however, that war will be averted.

A LINCOLN MEMORIAL IN ENGLAND

Five generations of ancestors of Abraham Lincoln have been traced in England, a country that cherishes a noble pride in this great son of her race. These ancestors lived in the village of Hingham, in which is a priory church, one of the best preserved and most beautiful in England. A committee has been formed, called the Lincoln Memorial Committee, which will erect a tablet in the village church of Hingham, several Americans being members of the committee. The inscription which will be placed on the tablet reads as follows:

"In this parish for many generations
Lived the Lincolns
Ancestors of the American,
Abraham Lincoln.

To him, greatest of that lineage,
Many citizens of the United States have erected this memorial in the hope that for all ages between that land and this land and all lands there shall be 'Malice towards none
With charity for all.'"

STILL THEY COME

There was an increased immigration of over 200,000 persons into the United States last year, according to a statement made public by Commissioner of Immigration Caminetti July 5, who said that a total of 1,300,000 foreigners came to the United States to make their homes.

Included in the list were close to 10,000 Japanese. While this is not the largest number of Japanese ever admitted, it is an increase over the previous year.

Approximately 270,000 Italians came to the United States last year. Next in numbers were the Jews, chiefly from Russia, with over 140,000, and after them came the Polish immigrants, over 130,000 strong.

The immigration, both in the number of persons and the number of races, is a record breaker.

Two-thirds of the newcomers were males and one-third females, indicating that many came here for the purpose of establishing themselves and sending for their wives and families later.

IMPRISONED FOR LIFE

"Last week, at Glen Riddle, Pa., fifteen girls were put in prison for life. They were innocent of any crime; they had no trial before court, judge or jury; they were evidently born under the stars and stripes, and yet are sentenced to unsanitary confinement for the remainder of their lives, by a foreign court, and imprisoned in the State of Pennsylvania! And at the same time, nineteen more girls were confined temporarily in the same prison, with the understanding that they, too, eventually, are to be confined for life."

The above quotation is from the "American Citizen" of July 18, 1914, a paper published at East Orange, N. J.

The following, from the "Philadelphia Bulletin," July 7, is the occurrence which prompted the above:

"Thirty-four young women took the vows of the Order of St. Francis at an impressive ceremony today in the Convent of Our Lady of Angels, Glen Riddle. Fifteen of them took the black veil, symbolizing full entrance to the sisterhood, and nineteen took the white veil, signaling their entrance upon the novitiate after several years of probation."

The "American Citizen" thus speaks: "Our land is called in 'The Star-Spangled Banner,' 'The land of the free and the home of the brave,' and just now the centenary of that song is to be celebrated in Baltimore."

Rev. H. D. Jenkins, D. D., associate editor of "The Rocky Mountain Presbyterian," said in the issue of that paper of July 9, in speaking of the recent connection of the Chicago Theological Seminary with the University of Chicago: "The Moody Institute alone, we believe, prepares more men for the pulpit than the half dozen denominational schools that have pooled their fortunes at the Midway." (The Midway indicates the location of the Chicago University.)

Dr. Jenkins further said: "If there ever was a time when men who believed in the gospel to get together it is now. There need be no uncertainty as to the issue before us or the outcome of the battle. The rationalistic element in all our churches will go out from us unwillingly and under protest, just as they did in Germany, France, Switzerland, England and New England. And when they go they will take with them the millions given for endowment of evangelical institutions. But the Bible-loving remnant in all these churches will close up their ranks and, in reduced numbers but not with reduced courage, they will stand for the old faith. They will plant new churches, new schools, new seminaries and new missions, just as they have done in all these other countries, and 'the old, old gospel of Jesus and His love,' the gospel of lost sinners saved by atoning grace, will not perish."

Winning Men to Christ, by Rev. Robert L. Selle, D. D.

A small book with a great purpose—that of inspiring the layman to undertake the supreme work of bringing men to a saving knowledge of Jesus Christ. The author, a busy city pastor and leader in "one-by-one" evangelism, succeeds admirably in his effort, but we could wish that appropriate Scripture passages or references thereto—properly classified—might have found a place in the volume.

churches. Next year the party will be working in the central and eastern states.

The six weeks evangelistic campaign at Hazleton, Pa., conducted by Dr. Henry W. Stough and party, was one of the most important incidents in the history of that community. The large number of conversions and increased interest in church work has had a telling effect upon the people. We have been building a house and am glad to say it is completed and we are now ready for our fall and winter's work. We open with a short meeting in Des Moines (Simpson Ch.) Aug. 15, and from there go to attend the Des Moines District Conference which meets at Atlantic, Ia., Sept. 9. Miss Alice Willison, a Deaconess, now a student in the Moody Bible Institute, will be with us as Bible teacher and personal worker."—Charles R. Goff.

"We are just closing the second week of our union tent campaign at Stonington, Ill. In spite of the very hot weather the interest is intense. All the townspeople are attending the services, the farmers are coming for miles and we have several automobile loads of people from the neighboring towns at every service. The big tent is seated to its full capacity. There is an earnest spirit of prayer and the power of God is upon the people mightily. In our consecration service, hundreds of church members remained for the after meeting for complete consecration to Christ. Many sinners have already been converted and the outlook is splendid for a great, sweeping victory for Christ."—Edwin R. Dow and party.

"We just closed a great meeting at Flat River, Mo., which resulted in the conversion of 1,053, 85 per cent of that number being men and boys over 16. Two nights the pastors and converts gathered several hundred people together at Elvins, over a mile away, and marched them to the tabernacle at Flat River, led by the band and carrying banners which read—"Vote for dry men; vote for the home; vote for the Son of God," etc. We had all-day services July 4. The saloon men in three nearby towns got up picnics and spent lots of money advertising and other preparations, and hiring bands, etc. The principle object of these picnics was to get rid of St. Louis beer. But thank God, the revival meeting at Flat River drew the crowds and left them with only a few beer drinkers, and Monday morning one town alone shipped back to St. Louis nearly two carloads of beer. The saloon men said they were going to sue the revival meeting for damages. It was said it was the first 4th in years that one or more were not killed through the influence of strong drink. All the pastors are pressing the battle for better things in the Lead Belt."—Burke and Hobbs.

JEWISH WORK IN PITTSBURGH

"The New Covenant Mission of Pittsburgh enjoys a privilege which perhaps no other Hebrew Christian Mission in America does, and visitors from the European societies tell us that few there, on account of persecution, etc., have such truly wonderful open air meetings.

"Through the energy and influence of the superintendent, Rev. Maurice Ruben, street licenses have been secured each year and police protection afforded when necessary. No amount of persecution, even when politically exerted, has daunted his courageous Christian spirit in giving this far-reaching testimony been translated into Yiddish, are sung by the workers who have been specially trained in this direction and are a most effective feature. We have a splendid street organ, and whenever possible, some brass instruments are secured which greatly enhance the musical program.

"Twice each week—Friday night and Sunday afternoon—for two hours and more all the personnel of the mission make a grand sortie, as it were, and some truly stirring scenes are witnessed. It is indeed a real martial campaign; we can almost smell the gunpowder as we bring our warfare unto the very gates of

during a large part of the year—at least as long as the weather will permit. As soon as Spring begins we forsake the limited confines of the Mission Gospel Hall and under the blue canopy of heaven, in God's out-of-doors, we preach His precious Word and declare His gracious promises—"To the Jew first, also to the Gentiles," Rom. 1:16. We make use of the triangle in front of the downtown building, as shown in the cut, where more than five different streets have their beginning. This is an ideal spot in many ways, especially as it is practically the gateway to the Jewish district of Pittsburgh.

"The Jews are usually reluctant to come into a mission building, so we have a great advantage when we can offer them the same service in the open. Gospel songs, which have the enemy's camp to plant the flag of our allegiance—the ensign of the Lord Jesus. We dare not be tin-soldiers either, for if there is a fortress that Satan is reluctant to see capitulate, it is the stronghold of Judaism. When the Christian workers get busy here, Satan not only seems very real and near, but is audaciously, mockingly, conspicuously active. When some truth has been pressed home with unflinching force and no uncertain application, a murmur will arise that swells and gains momentum, and at times breaks out as menace and invective, while the speaker is challenged, not always by the religious bigot, for the young Hebrew Socialist is very prominent at these meetings and wants to be heard. Even the little children caper and grimace and caterwaul at times until they look like impish emissaries. However, these are only intermittent demonstrations, mostly agitated by those of our audience who are strangers listening to the Gospel message or songs for the first time, perhaps. The eighteen years that Bro. Ruben has sturdily preached Christ and Him crucified to his brethren has not been without a marvelous effect and a softening influence. Hundreds of Jews come to these public meetings week after week and patiently stand all through the long service, listening with earnest and even tense faces to the missionaries as they expound their own T'nach, the Old Testament, and exhort in the words of their own prophets and warn of the coming great Tribulation for the stiffnecked and rebellious sons of Abraham. This is done in Yiddish, German and English and the Hebrew is read from their own Synagogue service."—M. S.

"I have had a splendid summer's work—about the best I have ever had in the Master's service. Many have been converted and the church people greatly helped. I held the meetings in my own tent. E. O. Martin did good work with the music."—A. John Fitt.

"The evangelistic meetings, held by local Protestant churches under the leadership of Chester Birch, have started off with a swing. A good audience greeted the speaker on his first appearance Sunday morning. The campaign is taking hold of the community," says the Movable, Iowa, "Record."

DR. GRAY'S ENGAGEMENTS.

During the month of August Dr. Gray took part in Bible Conferences in the following places: Montrose, Pa., Mountain Lake Park, Md., Stony Brook, L. I., and Winona Lake, Ind. Dr. Gray's conference engagements this fall are, Winnipeg, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Davenport, Columbus, and Springfield.

Dr. P. B. Fitzwater, one of the teachers in the Bible Course, has been chosen as Registrar of the Institute. This is a new office and the duties will have to do with the assigning of students to their classes, the keeping of the student records, etc. The creating of this position will give the directors of the courses more time for the work directly committed to their care.

BIBLE CONFERENCES

The Extension department is making arrangements for Bible conferences in various cities and also is conducting correspondence regarding a series of conferences in the principal cities from New York to San Francisco at some time next Spring. A conference has been arranged for Winnipeg, Manitoba, September 20 to 27. The program is in charge of Dr. James M. Gray and he will have associated with him three or four of the leading teachers of the country. The conference will be for the promotion of Bible study, deepening of the spiritual life and the importance of evangelism as the chief work of the church. Will not the students and friends please pray for this very important work?

WINONA LAKE BIBLE SCHOOL

The sessions of the Bible school this Summer have been marked by larger attendance and deeper interest than last year and there have been many expressions by the students as to the value of the work. Persons have been in attendance from all parts of the country, among them a number of missionaries at home on furlough. The Winona Assembly makes provision for a splendid summer office and this gives the Institute an opportunity to meet its friends at this important center.

The Annual Bible Contest is one of the features of the school and an attractive part of the assembly program. This was held on Friday afternoon, August 14, when a very large audience was present to witness the contest. Three Scofield Bibles were presented to the winners: First prize, Mrs. Geo. White-side, Evanston, Ill. (United Presbyterian); second prize, Miss Myrtle E. Scott, (Presbyterian), Goodland, Ind.; third prize, Miss Laura V. Corbly (Methodist), Muncie, Ind. Miss Scott is a special worker for women in connection with the Evangelistic meetings conducted by French E. Oliver.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT

The regular workers of the department were engaged as follows in August. Mrs. Frances C. Allison, two weeks in the Bible School at Winona Lake; Rev. Geo. E. Guille in conferences at Franklin, Ind., Summerland Beach, Ohio, and Winona Lake, Ind.; Rev. Bob Jones, the Moody Church, Logansport, Ind., Claypool, Ind., and Winona Lake, Ind.; Miss Angy Manning Taylor, Bible School, Winona Lake, Ind., Missionary Conference, Wooster, Ohio, and The Bethany Girls Work, Winona, Lake, Ind.; Miss E. Stafford Millar spent a few weeks with friends on Bailey Island, Maine, after which she went to San Francisco and from there to her home in Australia, where she will remain for a year for rest before returning to her work in this country. The Institute requests prayers for Miss Millar's complete recovery. It is a disappointment also that the plans which had been made for Miss Taylor cannot be carried out. Last Spring one of her Bible classes in Richmond, Va., had arranged for her to go out under the direction of the Extension Department as a special teacher to the young women in the colleges of China and Japan, but Miss Taylor's physician has informed her that she can not endure the strain of the journey and the vicissitudes incidental to work in the Orient.

R. C. Stewart is now located at Warren Centre, Pa., as pastor of the Baptist Church. The church building has been rebuilt recently and plans are being made for evangelistic meetings.

L. Curtis Talmage, pastor of the First Congregational Church, Terre Haute, Ind., has published in the "Silent Evangel" a very strong testimonial to the splendid personality and successful work of William Lloyd Crist, who was pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church from 1907 to 1914 but who will close his work there September 1st.

G. R. Bernhard recently completed the fifth year as pastor of the Biddle Presbyterian Church, Carlisle, Pa. A local paper speaks in high praise of the work which Mr. Bernhard has done as pastor.

M. S. Amstutz has moved from Nyack, N. Y., to Germania, Pa., where he has taken charge of work among the mountaineers. He has started meetings in various places and is canvassing the district with Colportage books.

R. E. Johnson has sent us a post card giving us two splendid pictures of meetings conducted in the Tabernacle at Osceola Mills, Pa. He feels much encouraged in his evangelistic work.

E. G. Atkinson has taken work under the direction of the Presbyterian Home Mission Board and has charge of the churches at Savoy and Coburg, Mont.

I. L. Mellott has become pastor of the M. E. Church at Kewanee, Ill. His local address is 229 Chestnut St. He reports there is a splendid opportunity for work among the young people.

A card has been received from K. Taniyuchi who is located at Sonobe, Tanba, Japan. He is doing the pastoral work for a church with which six chapels and a few visiting preaching places are connected.

EVENING DEPARTMENT ASSOCIATION

The Alumni Association of the Evening Department of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago was organized Saturday, August 8th, 1914. The present senior class arranged for a picnic at Lincoln Park on this date for all the graduates of the Evening Department, and it was at this time the Alumni Association was launched. The afternoon was spent in renewing friendships and making new friends. Many tributes were paid to the school, and the many blessings received during the time spent in the classroom and since, as the result of what was received in the classroom, were testified to. Following the picnic supper, the Rev. E. A. Marshall, director of the Missionary Course of the Institute, brought greetings from the Institute and a message of encouragement. After prayer by Mr. Marshall, the Association elected the following officers: President, Clarabelle Hiney; vice-president, W. Hutchinson; secretary, Mary Mason. It was greatly regretted that the director of the Evening

ONLY A TRACT—

But It Did Its Work Faithfully

In the room on the top floor of a tenement house, a woman sat by the window sewing. Her thoughts were keeping time with her needle when a feeble voice from the cot in the corner said, "Mamma, is it almost morning? I am so hungry." A true mother only can know how she felt as she crossed the cold, bare floor to the bedside. The cupboard had been bare for several meals. Promises and imaginations could ease the pangs of hunger no longer. Tears filled the eyes of the patient little sufferer as she asked, "Will we never have anything to eat any more?"

"Yes, dear, I hope you will have all you want some day. Don't cry any more. I'll see if I can get something for you. Oh my," she said as she paused a moment at the door, "has the thing which I dreaded so much come at last? Must I go out into the streets and beg?"

Just then she noticed a slip of paper being pushed under the door. "An old advertisement, I suppose. That doesn't feed a hungry mouth. But it looks so peculiar. I'll see what it is." She picked it up and read, "My God shall supply all your needs according to his riches in glory by Christ Jesus."

"I wonder who put that here so early in the morning?" She opened the door and listened but there was not a sound. She looked at the little tract again. "It seems so strange that any one should bother climbing the stairs for such a thing as that. I often read that in the Bible long ago. It doesn't look around here as if there was much truth in it. I wonder why it is in the Bible anyway?"

She turned it over and read: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." "That seems as untrue as the other. I was never more forsaken by God or man than now." A voice whispered to her, "My child, these many years I cared for thee but thou didst turn thy back upon me. Thou forsakest me, not I thee. That is why thy way is so hard and dark. Thou didst not ask me to supply thy need. Call upon me, and I will answer and shew thee great and mighty things which thou knowest not." She knew it was the voice of God and needed no further rebuke. Simple as a child she told Him all her need and He proved Himself true to His promise. Every need was supplied. That room once so dark and dismal became a cheerful home. The child was taught to trust in God and the mother's faith in Him could no more be moved. Only a little tract, prayerfully placed, did the work whereunto it was sent.—"Silent Evangel."

"SEE AMERICA FIRST!"

Book missionary work offers an excellent opportunity for one to travel and see the country. There is practically no section of the United States in which such work may not be done. It takes one necessarily into the open air, a change often desired and sometimes greatly needed by both men and women. It may be followed wherever the habitation of man is found. Many colporters have traveled from state to state, arranging their itinerary in accordance with the changing seasons of the year.

A colporter or "book missionary" is needed everywhere. The colportage work introduces one to pleasant and steadfast friends. It puts one into a service dealing with the eternal varieties of life. It is a noble calling.

A valuable training for life is to be gathered from the experience of placing "good books" in city, town and village. The work of thus touching man helpfully is one commending itself to the earnest and thoughtful. No person carries any more important word to the world than the bearer of God's message of salvation.

Young men, middle-aged men and, frequently, women are adapted for this plan of sowing broadcast evangelical literature.

A SUGGESTIVE TESTIMONY

Huntsville, Ala.

I have never been a canvasser. I am an office clerk in a cotton mill, and have sold my books to people with whom I come in contact about my desk. The first day I sold 102 books without a sample. In a short time I sold more than 500.

It is gratifying to pass through the village and see so many factory men reading Moody. They understand him—"the common people hear him gladly." When they had read one book they wanted others.

One thing that made me successful is this: I could talk pretty well, but knew when to quit. I looked my customer in the eye and stopped many times to watch for strategic points, and if by his eye or his lips I could tell that it would be a negative decision, I put in another point and held him back. If you can get a man to the buying point, it is nonsense to get him out of the notion for books by worrying him too much.

W. V.

NOTEWORTHY

"Mary, the Mother of Jesus," by Miss Ada R. Habershon, is the title of an exceedingly useful tract in dealing with Roman Catholics. Specimen free.

An unusually large number of new colporters representing various states were enrolled during the months of July and August.

At last the Italian edition of "The Way to God," by D. L. Moody, is ready for distribution. Its title is "La Via Che Mena a Dio." Pray for the blessing of God to follow it!

HOW ONE WORKER DOES IT

Bloomsburg, Pa.

I am very much delighted with my colportage work. I have received many blessings since I have engaged in it.

In my present method, I first interview the pastors of the different denominations, and explain to them the nature of the work. From them I secure a letter of recommendation and a card of introduction to the Sabbath-school superintendent and president of the young people's society. From the Sabbath-school superintendent I secure cards of introduction to the teachers, and from then I secure an order for the books. I leave a printed list of the books with each teacher, and allow the class to make their own selection of the books.

While waiting for these books I make a house-to-house canvass of the town, and secure the names of the non-churchgoers and those who are unable to purchase the books, and give their names to the pastor of the church towards which they lean. I encourage the missionary committees to purchase books to be supplied to such people by the pastor free of charge.

All the pastors have thus far been willing to give me all the assistance possible; some are even willing and anxious to make an announcement from the pulpit. Sabbath-school superintendents are willing to announce and encourage the teachers to take up the work.

I state my plan, because it has been a success with me, and it may be helpful to others.

A MINISTER-COLPORTER REPORTS

Geneseo, N. Y.

Recently I was staying over Sunday where there was no church service within five miles. My first impulse was to walk, but being lame, I judged that it would be unwise. In order to improve the time, I sought out a family who do not go to church and I visited them, asking the privilege of reading one of Moody's sermons, which they were pleased to grant, so I read one and sang a hymn and prayed with them. The longer I live, the more I see the need and the usefulness of spreading good books and tracts and, of course, first of all, God's holy Book.

FAVORITE SONGS

Selected from Great Revival Hymns No. 2

We have just issued a 32-page book for use in shop and factory meetings.

Preachers and singers who speak in meetings of this kind know how valuable it is to use the same songs in their shop meetings that they use in their regular campaigns and it is usually inconvenient to bundle up a hundred or two of a large book and cart them off to a meeting of this kind, hence the necessity for this little book. It contains 32 pages of the favorite selections from great Revival Hymns No. 2 and is durably bound in manila binding at 5 cents a copy; $3.00 per hundred, not prepaid.

Outline Sermons on the Old Testament

This volume, containing 139 outlines of sermons by 46 eminent English and American clergymen, is fully indexed by subjects and texts.

Outline Sermons on the New Testament

This volume contains 300 outlines by 77 eminent English and American clergymen; it is fully indexed by subjects and texts. The outlines furnished in these two volumes have been drawn from the leading pulpit thinkers of every denomination in Great Britain and America, including Rev. Drs. Wm. M. Taylor, John Cairns, Howard Crosby, Theodore L. Cuyler, Charles H. Spurgeon, E. S. Storrs, H. J. Van Dyke, James McCosh, J. T. Duggan, Alex. MacLaren, Joseph Parker, C. F. Deems, Canon Farrar, Dean Stanley, Bishop Phillips Brooks, and many others. The subjects are practical rather than controversial.

Outline Sermons to Children

With numerous anecdotes; fully indexed by subjects and texts. This volume, containing 97 outlines of sermons of a very high grade of thinking, by men of acknowledged eminence in possessing the happy faculty of preaching interestingly to the young. It contains enough illustrations and anecdotes to stock for many years the average preacher of children's sermons.

Anecdotes Illustrative of Old Testament Texts

529 anecdotes and illustrations, fully indexed by subjects and texts. Dr. Guthrie says his hearers often remembered the illustrations in his sermons when they had forgotten the abstract truth.

Anecdotes Illustrative of New Testament Texts

614 anecdotes and illustrations, fully indexed by subjects and texts. Preachers will find this book a very godsend to their preparation for the pulpit, and full of windows to let in the light.

Expository Sermons and Outlines on Old Testament

These sermons by distinguished preachers embrace a great variety of subjects from the Old Testament, are rich in application, and will be an education and inspiration to many.

Pulpit Prayers by Eminent Preachers

These prayers are fresh and strong, the ordinary ruts of conventional forms are left, and fresh thoughts of living hearts are uttered. The excitement of devotional thought and sympathy must be great in the offering of such prayers, especially when, as here, spiritual intensity and devoutness are as marked as freshness and strength.

Platform and Pulpit Aid

Consisting of striking speeches and addresses on Home and Foreign Missions, the Bible, Sunday-school, Temperance, and kindred subjects, with illustrative anecdotes. Just the book an overworked pastor who has many speeches to make, with little time for study, will appreciate.

Gentlemen

I am sorely in need of a large number of the Moody Colportage Library books for general distribution among my people. I also need several hundred copies of the Emphasized Gospel of John for the same purpose. There are hundreds of families and many hundreds of individuals in this great destitute field who are without any part of God's Word or any religious reading whatever. There is a great intellectual and spiritual awakening among the many thousands of my poor neglected people, and they are constantly appealing to me for something to read. The Moody Colportage Library books have been blessed in the salvation of many precious souls among my people. The Emphasized Gospel of John is the only part of God's Word many of them have in their homes and some do not even have a Gospel. Can you help me in the effort to meet this great need?

The Mountain Book Fund, instituted by Mr. D. L. Moody years ago, and maintained by popular subscription, is able, as contributions permit, to meet such appeals as Mr. Thorne's, with donations of gospel literature. Your aid is solicited.

Yours in his service
Wm Thorne

To the Jew First (Romans 1:16)

Does this grate on you? God's word grate on you—His child? Won't you start the New Year with a new method, God's method? Just how much of your money, for instance, was spent last year to help give the Gospel to the Jew? To go farther, did you ever pray for God's ancient people? Can you wonder, then, that there are so few Jews who believe in Christ?

Hudson Taylor's Example

The sainted Hudson Taylor made it his life habit to send a check each January to a Jewish Mission in London, marked "To the Jew First." Isn't it time you began doing something like that? "To the Jew First" is God's order in Missions. It has never been changed by God. You have simply forgotten it, that's all. It does not mean preference, it means order. Are you following God's order? Don't you want to begin now? Send us your check, be it one dollar or a thousand; we'll at once mail you "The Chosen People," and other helpful Jewish mission literature, while your money will be used in carrying on our increasingly large work among the 400,000 Jews of Brooklyn.

But, write now—right now!

Editorial Notes

"At all times as the matter shall require."
1 Kings 8:59.

"As every day shall require" is the rendering of the Revised Version. "The thing of a day in its day" is even nearer to the Hebrew.

Cut from Read on from verse 24 to get the the connection, and then consider what Loaf a blessed thing it is that we have to live only a day at a time, and that God is ready to supply all its need!

Recently a man not much beyond three score, was heard to pray for grace to endure the monotony and tediousness of life. We wonder if there be many of our readers who have this burden on their hearts at the beginning of this New Year! If so, let us recommend them to the comfort of this beautiful and simple faith, "the thing of a day in its day."

❖ ❖

This is the question that presses at the beginning of this New Year. We have had strong hope of a revival for some time, but

Can We somehow or other the hope is getting dimmed. When commercial
Have a difficulties closed in around us last Revival? year, and factories shut down and dividends were cut off, we believed our people would find time for God and for the thought of the life to come. Indeed, there was a movement heavenward for a while, and prayer-meetings were better attended and religious bookstores noted quickened sales; but this has not increased, and in the strong prospect of returning business this year it is likely to diminish. Across the water, too, there is disappointment. We learn from good authority that in Great Britain the awful ravages of the war are not having the effect of humbling the people of God as it was thought they would, and while the churches have filled up in some degree, yet the prayers of the saints have not yet shaken the throne, and there is no sign of a coming shower.

We have been impressed by the remark of a current writer on this theme, that while God's foreknowledge and decree have arranged the time of every revival, yet we have never known one apart from human instrumentality. We quote his reminder that Pentecost came after God's people waited in worship and prayer. The Reformation broke out through the prayers of Martin Luther. The Methodist revival began in the meeting-house in Fetter's Lane, through the chosen leader, Wesley. The Welsh revival had its birth in a prayer circle, and its human leader was a miner's son. To this we add the story of that inviolated woman's prayers that explained the opening up of the great Moody and Sankey revival in Great Britain in the seventies. God forbid that we should work up a revival in the world's sense of that term, but as this writer says, God equally forbids that we should fail to call one down. If we wait at the throne, He will work from the throne. Phillips Brooks, at a noon-day service for men, said: "Give me one hundred men with a passion for the salvation of this city, and I will answer for it, Boston shall be saved."

"Where is the revival?" asked a visitor of a policeman in a certain city where meetings were being held. "Beneath my coat, Sir," was the reply. Is there a revival beneath your coat, dear reader? If not, God is ready to put it there, and then it will soon get under your neighbor's coat.

The Spirit of God is now ready,
To kindle a flame that shall rise,
From the depths of the dusky valley,
To the dome of the vaulted skies.

And the sinners shall come from the shadows,
To find in the ruddy blaze,
The beacon of their salvation,
And hope of diviner days.

But say—as you wait for its coming,
Praying God to abolish the dark,

And craving the blaze of revival,
What fuel will you give to the spark?

❖ ❖

It may be recalled that in Theodore Roosevelt's address at Princeton University last fall, he expressed his contempt of the "scraps of paper" and other treatises that

A Posse may be swept aside like dust in a Comitatus windy street, and his hope that an international status may be achieved out of which may come a posse comitatus to coerce any recalcitrant power. We know not whether he obtained his idea by a study of prophecy, but as we have said before, something like that is foretold of the millennial age. The following passage in Isaiah 2 is familiar:

"And it shall come to pass, in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top (at the head) of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it. * * * For out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among (or between) the nations, and shall rebuke many peoples."

Here is a central nation (Israel) holding the balance of power not only, but something more, i.e., the posse comitatus to coerce the recalcitrant. This posse comitatus, however, is not found in dreadnaughts, Zeppelins, submarines and a standing army, but in a going forth of supernatural power that shall bring condign punishment on the rebellious and disobedient. He shall "govern the nations upon earth" (Ps. 67:4). "There shall be the plague, wherewith the Lord shall smite the nations that go not up to keep the feast of tabernacles" (Zech. 14:18).

The "New York Evening Telegram" speaks words of truth and soberness when it says that "Digging down behind all apparent and

The War immediate motives in a search for an Outcome bedrock influences, thoughtful of a False men have discovered the seed
Philosophy root of the present colossal European struggle, in the pernicious philosophy of Nietzsche.

His repudiation of Christianity, his ruthless exaltation of the superman, his preachments of the master morality of brute force, have borne ample and awful fruit in the blood-drenched battle fields of Europe."

Apropos of the same thought, Dr. Len. G. Broughton, of London, is quoted in an English paper as saying that, in his judgment, "The end of this struggle will have no more marked influence upon any department of life than that of Christian theology. The church will have seen the folly of all rationalistic religion, and will turn its attention again to the old paths, which, though they oftentimes lead through fog and mist, will end at last, thank God, in truth and right."

The present war has greatly stimulated popular interest in the second coming of Christ: The press, the pulpit, the club, the shop, the fireside, all bear witness to it. "For such a Time as This" Multitudes are inquiring about it who never before thought of it seriously. Books on the subject are having a quickened sale.

But we wonder how many of our readers have considered the preparation for the intelligent study of it which was afforded by the International Prophetic Conference held in this city last February, under the auspices of The Moody Bible Institute? It was a surprise even to those most interested, to see the large gathering of people at that time, to learn of the long distances they came, and to behold the interest and enthusiasm with which they followed the reading of the several papers and took part in the discussion of the different themes. From that moment an interest was revived not only in this country and Canada, but across the water, which seems to have come as a gracious forerunner to strengthen the hearts of God's people for these calamitous times. Little did we dream of such a war, or of such a need for this consolation, but how wisely and lovingly God provided it! This is the secret of the unwonted interest of His people at that time, the moving of His own Spirit upon their hearts.

Mordecai said to Esther, "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the kingdom for such a time as this?" and the question came into mind the other day as we thought of the place of that conference in relation to the present spiritual need.

"The Continent" said a wise thing on this subject some time ago that we should like to emphasize. Speaking of the university instructor who had publicly denied

The Bible the Virgin birth of Christ and rein referred to His post-resurrection
Colleges appearances as subjective psychological impressions, it affirmed that any university or college unable to find teachers of another type to take their Bible courses had better drop them altogether. We say so decidedly, and make the charge that any university or college announcing Bible teaching in the curriculum under instructors of this type is deceiving the unwary. We speak with feeling, because we are constantly receiving inquiries from Christian parents as to where to send their sons and daughters to be educated. Hitherto we felt that we might recommend the university now in question with confidence, but our idol has been shattered and whither now to turn we know not. It were better not to teach the Bible at all, than so to teach it as to destroy all faith in it as the Word of God.

A leader in Christian work in England, one who is obliged to secure a good deal of money annually to meet his needs, is reported to have said recently, that the spiritually-minded people who used to give him once a year now give him two or three times a year. He added that they were withdrawing more and more from the enterprises associated with the higher criticism. We are glad to learn this, and pass it on for the comfort and instruction of others. Our own experience has taught that the best givers to the Lord's work are evangelical people, and that the work they love to give to most is that which stands for an inspired Bible and a full gospel.

The Title-Deed to Our Estates

By Rev. J. H. Jowett, D. D.

TEXT: "Faith is the substance of things hoped for." Heb. 11:1.

Bishop Lightfoot used to say, "If we could only discover a number of business documents and ordinary correspondence written when the New Testament was written, we might come to a new and rich interpretation of New Testament words. If we could only find out how ordinary people used the Pauline words in ordinary ways, if we could find someone using a Pauline word in a letter to a friend, or if we could find them using the Pauline words in some business document, some ordinary message of commercial transaction, the discovery might add a new color, if not a new content to many New Testament terms." Bishop Lightfoot used to say many of our New Testament words are interpreted from the standpoint of the scholar when perhaps they ought to be interpreted from the standpoint of the man in the street. What Lightfoot hoped for has now arrived, and we are discovering letters written when the New Testament was written, and business documents having the same date, and we are discovering them in almost bewildering quantity. And we are finding ordinary correspondents in the apostolic days using words which Paul used in his letter to the Romans and his other Epistles.

Among other words disinterred is the word in my text translated "substance." You would find a man going to buy a house, or a seller of a house, using that word with the content of "title-deed." Many believe that the writer of Hebrews must have had this content in mind when trying to express his conception of Christian faith, for life and color come into the word when we take this meaning and insert it in the text. "Now faith is the title-deed to things hoped for." Yes, thrice blessed, the word leaps into actuality. It becomes fervid and full of color. You have the figure of a man with a title-deed in his hand, to take possession of splendid estates. There are vast moral and spiritual estates waiting for their heirs, and faith is the title-deed which gives possession and makes them ours tonight. Faith is the title-deed to things hoped for. Just as when you have the title-deed of a house the house is yours, so faith is the title-deed to all the glorious things hoped for in the Word of God.

The Christian Dowry

Well, if I may insert that newly-discovered content into our text tonight, you will see the faith that carries a dowry of that kind must be a vital and generous thing. There is a spurious kind of faith about, which carries no deeds and can produce none when challenged. A great deal of faith on both sides of the water is only another name for patronage. We think we are believers in the Lord Jesus when we are only interested patrons. And faith of this kind carries no title-deed. There is a kind of faith still better than that, but not good enough for Christ. A faith which is conviction but not consecration. There is a faith which has touched the mind but not really gripped the soul. It fears God, but does not trust Him. It knows God as a thief knows a policeman and all it is concerned about is to avoid him. And concerning that kind of faith we are told in the Bible, "The devils also believe, and tremble." That is a faith which carries no title-deeds. It is entitled to nothing and therefore cannot claim the things hoped for in the Word of God. But, putting aside this spurious and extravagant faith which can avail nothing, let me turn to the opposite side, and ask, What is faith? Suppose we try to analyze it.

The first step in all faith is the lifting up of the eyes upon Christ. You have the primary element of faith in the first two lines of that exquisite hymn of Ray Palmer's:

"My faith looks up to Thee Thou Lamb of Calvary."

The first content of faith is an acquaintance, a mental uplift, a fixing of the mind, a direction of the thought upon Christ. It is a man putting his will behind his mind and fixing his mind upon Jesus. That is the first step in faith. Even in the Old Testament Scriptures, before the Lord Himself had appeared, you find this primary content of faith in the uplifting of the eye upon the Lord. If I had time I could quote whole Psalms where men are expressing their faith. "I will direct my prayer unto Thee and will look up." "Mine eyes are ever toward the Lord." "They looked unto him and were lightened." "Looking unto Jesus." "Set your mind on things that are above." The first element in all faith is to think on Jesus.

And I should say that the second element of faith is an action of the will. Faith is never merely a thought, a reverie, a contemplation, but always an action. There is no faith without faithfulness. There is no faith without fidelity. Therefore, while the first element in vital faith is the uplift of the mind, the fixing of the thought on Jesus the Lamb of God, the second element, is obedience to the vision.

Friendship Expressed in Silence

I now come to the last content. If you lift up your mind to the Lord, I do not say in prolonged discourses, for few can talk to the Lord in prolonged conversation. The proof of the most blessed friendship is when two friends can be silent. In the early days of courtship love has much to say. My longest letters were in those happy days. But when love ripens, passes out of the early spring-time into summer and autumn it is surprising how much it can say by silence. The husband and wife can sit by the fireside with a glorious intercourse absolutely independent of speech. And our friendship with the Lord is measured in the same way. In our early stages we thought we must be always talking. But as we ripen in friendship we can walk along all the way, just a look and a feel to see that He is there. A blessed friendship all the way, with eyes uplifted, your mind fixed on the Lord. When I have my mind set on my great Companion and my will set in obedience, there grows a mystic intercourse with the Lord. It is almost too mysterious for words to express, but, when my mind is on the Lord and my will set to do His will, there is an open-ness between me and my Lord like the open-ness between two friends, two lovers, like husband and wife, in an ineffably greater degree. Between me and the Lord there is a ceaseless inter-passage of glorious converse. I give Him my aspiration; He gives me His inspiration. I give Him looks; He gives me blessing. All the day long two open doors, my Lord's open, mine open. The two in blessed intercourse. "If any man will open his door I will come in and sup with him and he with me."

So you see faith is a simple yet vital and composite thing. In all vital faith you find these three things present. How can you have faith without the fixing of the mind and the obedience? Or how can you have faith without the Lord confirming your faith by a blessedly gracious and intimate and endless communion. If you have faith like that you have precious title-deeds, and these title-deeds will give you possession of things hoped for.

What Do You Hope For?

What kind of things hoped for? Young people, follow the simple course of my mind tonight. If faith is what I describe it, giving me the title-deeds to certain possessions, I want to know what these possessions are that I may claim them and walk about my estates. What can they be? I want you to try and picture to your mind some glorious hope. What shall it be? Then I am going to ask you by faith in Jesus to claim it, and claim it tonight. Mind you, I am not going to say because you obtain possession of your estates tonight you are going to obtain every possession. You cannot do that with a material estate. If by some fortune, happy or unhappy, I were to receive the bequest of an estate tonight in Scotland or England, by those title-deeds the estates would be mine, and yet not mine. Mine by the power of law, but not mine by the power of a blessedly inward experience. I go down and walk about the estate and come upon things I never expected to find. A clump of woodland here, I never knew that. Another day I come upon the music of some hidden stream, a cluster of wild flowers, a clump of heather; I never knew I owned them. Every day I should be making discoveries which were mine. It is just the same with the inheritance of the saints in light. In a moment mine, yet not mine, because every day I shall be having surprises of grace. I never thought about draughts of refreshing water which hitherto had never touched my lips, the unfolding of promises which almost set me in a dream; glory upon glory in Christ Jesus. Spurgeon was richer every day he lived, and yet the estates were his from the beginning. Mine in a moment, and yet it will take eternity to give me every possession.

Well then, what shall we hope for? I want you to stretch your mind ahead. When I had got thus far in preparing my address I put my pen down and took to wondering, "What shall I hope for?" I began to think of what I would like to be, what I would hope to become, that when I fix my eyes upon the great possibilities I may then by faith in the Lord Jesus claim it. I will tell you what I put down as the thing I would hope for in Christ Jesus. I would hope for a complete spiritual emancipation of all my powers. Let me repeat that lest I should lose myself in the vagueness of a great phrase. I hope for the complete spiritual emancipation of all my powers. Young people, have you ever tried to make an inventory of your powers? I think one of the most useful things I learned from phrenology was to recognize how manifold are the actions of mind and heart, and how exceedingly complex is my constitution. Just look at me, and look at yourself. See what powers we have. They begin down at the animal. They begin with basal energy, primal passion, then rise to those finer conceptions and apprehensions which can have communion with God. There are all kinds of faculties and emotions ranged in their different ranks. When I begin to think it is like taking an inventory of the officers of some little kingdom. I cannot mention half of them. I have the power of thought, of conscience, of will, of love, of hope, of hate, of jealousy. I have got all manner of passions paraded here—power to talk with God, power to commune and be friendly with the devil. And here when I look at my powers I find some of them seem to be asleep, some even seem to be dead, some seem to be in a consumption, a rapid decline—others weakly, without any power. I look at all the powers, from the animal up to the angel. I look at them in all their disarray, in all their confusion, and I pray God to grant, perfect and complete the emancipation of all my powers, that instead of being a discord they shall be a wonderful harmony that shall make music in my Saviour's ears. One sentence of Matthew Arnold's runs like this: "What we need is to develop ourselves in our totality." Well, that is just what I am trying to do, though he did not give me a gospel or any inspiration with which to do it. I want my life to be like a great estate without a single yard lying useless or waste. I want to keep all my animal passions under mastery. I want to keep them where they ought to be, in the basement, in the lowest basement, supplying heat and energy to every other room in my soul. I want my social affinities to be rare and acute and fine. I want my perception of God to be as familiar as of my friends. I want my life to be as clear and pellucid as a fountain spring. I want, well, I want every part within me to be brought into subjection to the Lord Jesus, relieved and released from all ignoble bondage—springing up like flowers in the sun. Is that a worthy thing to hope for? That the Lord Jesus may get control of all my powers, and like the conductor of an orchestra, harmonizing and co-operating them all—appetite with conscience, conscience with will, hope and obedience with love, making an orchestra to the Saviour's name! Faith is the title-deed of that thing to be hoped for. Faith in Jesus will be reached in the long run by patient, diligent perseverance. It will be complete, blessedly complete in the beginning, but day by day, week by week, year by year, I shall be coming into more complete Christ possession, until some day it shall be true of me as the Psalmist prayed for himself, "Let all that is within me praise and bless His holy name." Is that to be hoped for? Well then, take the title-deeds and claim it tonight.

I will give you another thing that I wrote down on my paper when my eyes ranged over the field of possibilities, as a thing to be hoped for. I hope for the blessed and untrammelled intimacies of the divine friendship, that I may day-after day and week-after week enter more and more deeply into the wealth and glory of the friendship of Christ. Is that a thing to hope for and to live for? We rightly count it a privilege and distinction to be introduced at our honorable English court. My American friends count it one of the highest distinctions of their life to have introduction into the pure court of the English sovereign. But lift your minds to the infinitely greater privilege of being an intimate friend of the King of kings and having access into the serenity and glory of His most holy court. If you ask me who ever had been graced with the finest title ever man wore, do you know what reply I should give? I should not go to the baronetcies or the burgesses or the university degrees. The proudest title ever worn by mortal man was given by the Lord Himself in this phrase: "Abraham, My friend." My friend! And to enter into the secret of that glorious friendship, untrammelled intimacy with my Lord, is a thing I crave.

Gladstone's Companionship With Christ

One of my greatest hopes is to be like the men and women who even partially attained to this intimacy, the great friends of Jesus who were in possession of their estates, and to have my estates join theirs. By the mystery of grace we shall be joint-owners, co-heirs with Christ. I mention Gladstone, for one can mention him in the place of worship without political color, unmarred by political tone. Why I mention him now is this: I do not know any statesman of our time who had such a friendship, such a deep friendship with his Lord. I would like to read you an extract from his journal which was never intended to be seen by the eye of the world. Listen how this man practiced the presence of Christ. Listen to this, young men! One of the greatest men of our time, a man of colossal intellect. He spoke thirty-five minutes on the University bill, then wrote this at night when he got home, "Spoke with more ease than I hoped, having been more mindful of the divine aid." In the Oxford debates, 1847, he wrote: "O Lord, help me, strengthen me. Thou hast covered my head in the day of battle." When he made his first budget speech in the House of Commons he made his entry on the morning of the day, "O turn Thou unto me and have mercy upon me. Give Thy strength unto Thy servant. Help the son of Thine handmaid." When he was introducing another great bill he has this entry: "This message came to me this morning, 'Hold thou up my going in Thy paths that my footsteps slip not.'" All through his life he was in that companionship of his Saviour; in the domain of literature or politics out went his hand to feel the Lord and enjoy the intimacy of His presence. Leaving Gladstone, let me recall another, whose life you ought to recall—Keith Falconer, who became the most brilliant scholar in Cambridge. At the age of thirty he went to Arabia, that he might proclaim the glorious news of the gospel of Christ, and burnt himself out in six months. What a sense of God he had, and yet he was not gloomy with it. He was not a poet that went about in sable robes. He loved a clean jest. They say he simply scorched anybody that introduced, even suggestively, the remotest reminder of uncleanness. But his laughter was like the morning song of birds. I never read Keith Falconer's life without feeling he only had to reach out his hand and God was there. And when he was stricken by the fever that took him away he was continually saying, both in his moments of brightness and delirium, "Nearer, Lord, nearer, blessed Lord." The friendship of Keith Falconer is a thing to be hoped for, and I hope for it tonight.

Westcott and the Verger

I give you another, if I am not wearying you with these blessed experiences. I mentioned the scholarly Bishop Lightfoot; now I mention the great saint who succeeded him, Bishop Westcott. I regard Westcott's diary as one of the most beautiful, bracing, invigorating, spiritual biographies that has been published in our day. Take this incident: When he was Canon of Peterborough he went out to conduct prayers in the Cathedral. It was a wet, blustering morning. The only person present with the Canon was the old verger. So they went through with the prayers. When he got back home his daughter said: "Was there anybody there?" The Canon answered, very quietly: "Full, full." He had seen the Lord, as Isaiah says, "high and lifted up and His train filled the temple." Full! My poor, tearful widow on your lonely, empty road, would not you like it to be full? The soldier's wife with your husband away in the field, would you not like your life filled with the blessed companionship of God? And when you come to the darkened way and enter the valley, the lonely valley of the shadow, or when the Lord may take you into some chilly road of bereavement, would not you like it to be such that a neighbor whispered to you on the road: "Full"—God crowding the lonely road and making the vacant place glow with His blessed companionship? That is what I mean by friendship, by intimacy, to have such a glorious sense of friendship that when there is nobody in the place you can say: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death Thou art with me," and the road is filled with the glory of the heavenly presence. Is that worth hoping for? This blessed and untrammelled friendship with Christ? Well, then, if you would like to have that estate, take the title-deed. Faith is the title-deed of this thing hoped for. Sure? Absolutely sure! Not a doubt about it? Not a shadow of a doubt! There's dogmatism for you. There is the dogmatism of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amid all the doubts and uncertainties of our time, when a man has the title-deed of faith he enters into his estate, of a glorious friendship with Jesus, and day by day, and week by week, and year by year, the friendship will deepen, and deepen, and deepen, until it shall be true of them, as it was with those two men trudging to Emmaus, the road shall become illumined with heavenly radiance, and when we take the communion bread into our hands and break it, it shall become a sacramental piece. I hope for the spiritual emancipation of all my powers, and I hope for the blessed unhindered, intimate friendship of my Lord. And, lastly, I hope for an abundant entrance into my eternal home. Do you think that is rather a drop from the other? We have come into a day when it is regarded almost effeminate to speak of heaven, and we are all the poorer for it. I am perfectly sure we are never going to make stalwart crusaders in the heavenly way by shutting our eyes to the glory that is to be. All the men of New Testament, and all who have been pilgrims on the same road as those in the New Testament, have been men who have lifted their eyes from the smothering dust and hardship of the road, and have set their eyes upon the city that is to be, on Jerusalem the golden. In twenty years time the greater part of this congregation will be gone, and the place that knows us now will know us no more. Is it wise to drop the curtains, to wear the blinders and look away? Or is it better to draw the blinds and have a steady look at what is to be? My brethren, I cannot help but think about the morrow, and when I think about the morrow I am all the more competent for the service of today. It is the man whose eyes have been washed in the glories of the new Jerusalem who can see the truth in the Jerusalem that is. The men who have seen the glories of heaven can see the grime of earth.

"Here in the body pent,
Absent from Him I roam,
Yet nightly pitch my moving tent
A day's march nearer home."

Intimations of Immortality

I have reached the prime of my life. I feel as if only my life had just begun. And they who are older than I, men and women reaching their seventieth and eightieth year, tell me they feel as though the prelude was scarcely over. I feel as a sculptor might feel who had just got well hold of his chisel, ready for work. Or like an instrumentalist who had just got the instrument in tune in a great oratorio ready to begin. And I cannot think that when I have just got my chisel well in hand, that is going to be the end. When I have got the instrument in tune the curtain is to ring down. I am bound to think of the morrow. And of the morrow I think. And I hope for an abundant entrance into my eternal home. I am no weakling for thinking thus. I think that Richard Baxter was no weakling. He endured insults and curses for his Lord and contemplated the "Saints Everlasting Rest." Samuel Rutherford was no weakling. He bore insults innumerable. I think of David Brainerd, of Andrew Newman, of Spurgeon, was there ever such a worker? And how he fed his soul in the land of milk and honey, and because he did he brought some of heaven's milk and honey for you! Ian Maclaren was no weakling, a man so soldier-like in body it was splendid to see him come along the street, so soldier-like in soul, a glorious warrior in the cause of the Master. Those who know the secret of his life can testify that he was continually lifting his eyes upon the glory that he might deal more effectually with the shame. And when, away in America, the Lord called him to rest, even then in his latter days his thoughts were all in the heavenly country. He asked for the old Scottish hymn, and they sang to him:

"I'll ne'er be full content
Until my e'en do see
The golden gates of heaven,
And my ain ccountree."

I am not going to put these things out of my sight, my brethren. I cannot afford it. I cannot afford to put these things out of my sight. On Wednesday I return to New York, to all the bewilderment of that bewildering city. Do you think in the bewilderment of that city one can rest with the title-deeds in their soul? The Lord grant it. Fix your faith on Jesus, young people; put your thought on Him. The lifting your eyes to Him may just be in a phrase. The Syro-Phenecian woman expressed her faith in the shortest phrase the Bible records: "Lord, help me." Rest your mind on Him, enlist your will with the Lord. Commune with the Lord and the title-deeds are yours. Surely? Surely! Can anybody steal them? Nobody can steal them. Can you lose them in old age? No need to do that. Can death take them away? Death has no power over them. They carry you through the day of life, through the day of death, through the day of judgment, and on through the day of eternity. The glory land is yours. The life eternal is yours. Christ is yours, and Christ is God's. Now faith is the title-deed of things hoped for. Let us enter into our estates and claim possession.

Ewald, the higher critic, ignored or violently abused the labors of predecessors or contemporaries. He rarely quotes other books than his own and the primary sources. "See the History" is the language in which he refers to his own account of the history of Israel as if there were no other.—Philip Schaff.

John Harper, The Mighty Man of Prayer

By F. Spencer Johnson, London, England

I WAS resting on the coast of Normandy when the sad news reached me concerning the home-going of my beloved friend, Pastor John Harper.

My first visit to Scotland was "under his wing" quite recently. Shall I ever forget his prayers? How he pleaded for his beloved land! At times the floor would be wet with his tears as he cried: "O, my God, save Scotland."

On my return to London a friend inquired what had impressed me on my trip, and I replied: "John Harper's prayers." All I could compare such praying with was the graphic accounts I had read of that remarkable giant of faith, John Knox. It would have been worth journeying a hundred times as far again to experience such a burning enthusiasm and genuine passion for souls!

Today a large number in London have not ceased to wipe their weeping eyes! No wonder his choir at Walworth Road Chapel broke down as they tried to sing at the memorial service. But what shall we say of the great multitude in Scotland who mourn the loss of this beloved servant of God?

As we walked, arm in arm, together through the slums of Glasgow, men and women came to doors and windows to greet the man who had so faithfully given many years of his life in ministering to their spiritual and temporal needs. Trophies of grace came forward to shake him by the hand, and welcome him back to the spot where they first heard the glad news of salvation from his lips.

How they crowded into the old hall to see and hear him proclaim the Word once more, from the old rostrum. Shall we ever forget the sight of the sea of faces, the eager expressions, and best of all, the signs that followed?

One morning he took me into his old vestry, a small and very unpretentious room. He told me how he had there poured out his heart in prayer for that vast district. Not hours but days of pleading, and then with tears of joy, he related, to the glory of God, how a great revival came, and swept into the Kingdom, a multitude of souls.

Everywhere we went during this trip the Spirit of God witnessed with remarkable power to the Word of life. Into those few days he crowded enough work that would have occupied some men several weeks. I have never met his equal for real hard work. He was desperate for souls. A suggestion from any one who loved prayer, to spend the whole night in pleading for Scotland, immediately met with his hearty approbation.

And this is the mighty man of prayer who has, with many others, gone down with the "Titanic." Methinks I hear his prayers rising from the deck of that giant liner.

John Harper would be "quick of scent" to understand why God had directed his plan to board this ship. No sooner would those loved ones be safely inside the life boat, than he would be guiding the footsteps of all, who would hear his voice, to the heavenly lifeboat, and to Him who guides o'er the seas of eternity.

Last Sunday night I lay awake. The happenings of the previous Sabbath came vividly to my mind. I heard the crash, and saw the icy waters, rushing into the so-called "unsinkable" vessel. This was no vision. My mind was simply recalling all that I had heard, and read, of the calamity. The band might play its ragtime music with might and main to drown the fears of the wealthy saloon passengers, but that would never prevent this "John Knox of our day" sounding forth the sweetest music the soul can ever hear,—"The love that gave Jesus to die." The music that dispels all fear, and welcomes death, scattering all gloom, in the light of a joyful eternity. It may be that John Harper's greatest work on earth was accomplished between the hours when the floating palace struck the iceberg and the moment when the final cries rent the air, as the vessel leaped forward and plunged downward, flinging a multitude into eternity. John Harper's shout would be one of triumph. No stone would be left unturned, and thus would he well deserve—"Well done, thou good and faithful servant." He has "entered into the joy of his Lord." Eternity alone will reveal the mighty things accomplished, and the victories won, through his ministry upon that ill-fated ship. Shall we not smile through our tears and say, "Thy will be done?"

Deep down in my own heart there is a strong feeling that the Kingdom of God is not going to lose one jot or tittle by the home-going of this beloved servant of the Lord; but rather that mighty things are yet to transpire, and revival experienced, such as he himself yearned to witness, and for which he pleaded so persistently.

Let all those whose hearts have been broken by the startling solemnity of his sudden departure, remember the words—"though dead, yet he speaketh," and as we seem to hear his voice urging us all to "go forward, doubting nothing," shall each not respond to the Lord—"Here am I, send me?" Then shall the pleadings of John Harper bear the fruit he so longed to see. Furthermore there shall be joy in Heaven over sinners repenting, and saints being filled with all the fullness of God.

An Exhortation to Prayer

By Rev. John Harper

(This address of Mr. Harper, delivered at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, England, February 9, 1912, and reported stenographically for "The Christian Workers Magazine" was probably the last public service rendered by him outside of his own church work prior to his sailing for America on the ill-fated Titanic. Through an oversight it only recently came into our hands, but it is timely at any period.—Editors.)

I WANT to read you a verse or two in the fifth chapter of James. "Is any sick among you let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him."

We do not have much of that nowadays. I do not know whether you have it at the Tabernacle. Perhaps some folks think the elders have enough to do to pray for themselves without being called to pray for the sick.

"The effectual, fervent prayer." There are some prayers that are still-born children, some prayers that never touch God. We have been praying, both in the afternoon service and this morning, that we may be equipped for effectual service. May I suggest that there is no effectual service that has not behind it effectual prayer? It is only when we learn how to prevail with God we can prevail with man. "The effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." I want to take just these words, "Prayer . . . availeth much."

Prayer availeth much. There are some things which we are all convinced do not avail much in the work of God. Oratory does not avail much; it may on the philosophical platform but not in the pulpit. Personality does not avail much. The salvation of souls through personality is very little. After all, I am afraid a good deal of our evangelistic work, the so-called fruit of it, is personal magnetism rather than the power of the Holy Ghost, so converts fade away like morning clouds. Converts by personality do not abide. Converts by the power of the Holy Ghost do. The power of the purse does not avail much. In this morning's service we heard some one praying and saying, "The love of money is the root of all evil." The church of God is crying for money. All the money that all the millionaires of earth have won't make this machine go without the power of the Holy Ghost. Modern methods do not avail very much. What a marvelous lot of machinery we have, and in fact every conference suggests a new bit, and all the machinery we can bring into operation will only weaken instead of strengthen God's work, without prayer.

The Lack of Power

Prayer availeth much. I think the confession of all our hearts this afternoon is this—we have not power. We have not power first of all, to awaken the slumbering mass, because the mass is working one way and the church is working another. To be popular is to say something optimistic—I am not seeking to be popular.

It is marvelous the condition into which we are fallen. If the magazines are right the church was never a mightier force than it is today but if this mighty force is doing such mighty things in London, how does it come that there are four millions of people who never enter the church? We lack power to arrest the masses. I wonder how many in London will be unable to sleep tonight because of the terrible conscience awakened by the church of God. I wonder how many will be unable to go on indulging in sin because of a life-like testimony of the church of God. I wonder how many in London tonight will be saying, "Men, brethren, what shall we do to be saved," because of the church of God. I am told everywhere that we are not to expect that today, that people are so educated and cultured they can reserve and restrain their feelings better than in those early days. That is all humbug. If the power of God were to rush through this meeting and a sinner were held by the power of God he would be glad to sob out, "Men, brethren, what shall I do." We have not the power to arrest the slumbering mass.

An "Open Close"

We have not the power to retain the great multitudes that are passing through the church. I heard of a church that was called "open close." You know what a "close" is—an entrance up to the house but no opening beyond. An "open close" is open at both ends. This church was called an "open close" because the people went in one side and out the other. That is not the only church. Where are those multitudes that were in the Sunday-school years ago? They are lost. Where are the multitudes, all the young men who were in the Bible classes years ago? They are certainly lost, in most of the churches.

My dear friends, isn't it true? I am not speaking of the Tabernacle. Thank God for the mighty things that are being done here. I am speaking for the country; we have not the power, even in spite of all we are doing. Was the church ever making a bigger effort to retain them than at the present time? Did the church ever try to keep young people round them as it does today? Yet the picture palaces get them, and we have not the power to deliver even the special cases that are being brought to us from time to time. There is not one, but many, who have said something like this: "I got him to the church, I got him to come for a little while, but I cannot now. Will you pray for him?" My dear friends, have not we all been brought face to face with some and they have gone without being delivered? Isn't it true, dear friends, that we cannot cast them out?

We have not power to regain or restore backsliders. When I came to Walworth I found over 100 names on the roll no one could give any account of. My dear friends, I tell you what I found, too; many had gone right back into the world, and it seemed as if no power could bring them back. If all the people who have professed conversion in evangelistic efforts the last twenty years were standing today, the world would be robbed of tens of thousands. Oh, the backsliders that we cannot get back! It is enough to make us have a day of prayer for that alone, and breathe out before God our powerlessness.

An Explanation of Conditions

Why is it that we have not power? God says, "Ye have not because ye ask not." One explanation of the conditions today is in that failure of prayer. I believe that prayer is effectual to work on the masses, effectual to hold under the influence of the church those that have passed through its influence, effectual to deal with special cases. Our Lord said, "These come not out but by prayer and fasting." I think since I came to London it looks as if they went out by entertainment and feasting. They want to get the devil cast out by billiards and bagatelles. My dear friends, this will never be done. Prayer availeth much in the presence of these conditions.

I want to appeal that this day shall bring us to where God wants us to be, back to the resources of prayer. We see that prayer availeth much in the presence of the evils of the day, which are intangible evils, for "We wrestle not against flesh and blood but against principalities and powers." We are not fighting just with man, we are fighting with the forces that are dominating these evils. And in the presence of these evils, if we are seeking to get through them, it will be through effectual, fervent prayer. Powers of darkness are not driven back by fasting, they are driven back by prayer. The forces of darkness are not conquered by any introduction of methods, the forces of darkness are conquered by men who plead the name of Jesus.

So we stand in the presence of forces of darkness, first of all, assailing the Christians and possessing the unsaved. I read in one of our leading magazines that there are a few cases of demon possession in China. I may tell you that every unsaved soul is demon-possessed, every unsaved soul is under the power of darkness. This is the demon power of darkness, it is in them, dominating, controlling, moving them. Only by prayer and fasting will the powers of darkness be cast out. I would like to know when the heavens of brass have been melted if it has not been by prayer. The church has never had a great revival that was not wrought by prayer. I believe, dear friends, the conditions round us will be changed when the church gets to its knees. Drought, dryness and difficulties melt before effectual prayer.

A Lost Prayer Meeting

I remember a story of dear C. H. Spurgeon, telling of an old Scotch minister to whom another minister came and said, "There is not the power in the services there used to be; I wonder what is wrong." The pastor looked up and said, "Brother, I have lost the prayer meeting." "What do you mean?" "Brother, if you come to the Wednesday evening prayer meeting you will see I have lost it. The praying people do not come." No man can set mountains on fire unless God's people are praying. There are difficulties in the ministry, but as soon as people pray the ministry will be effectual.

Even in the presence of disease and sickness, prayer availeth much. Every day many of God's people are suffering in their bodies who, through the effectual prayer of the church, would be raised up. Prayer availeth much. Oh! may God give us a day to get back to the true condition of prayer, humble prayer, relying on Him to show what prayer can do—and the blessing of God will come.

How Do We Know the Bible Is Authentic?

By Rev. James M. Gray, D. D.

(An address at the Augustine Presbyterian Church, Winnipeg, Canada, and published, by request, in the "Winnipeg Tribune," from which we copy.—Editors.)

EVERY Christian knows that there is a conflict between the powers of light and darkness, between Christ and Satan, and he knows, too, that the storm center of this conflict is the Bible. But perhaps he does not know that there are three outposts that must be taken by the enemy before the citadel itself is reached. These outposts are the authenticity, the truth, and the inspiration of the Bible. The first named is perhaps the most important.

What Authenticity Means

The question of authenticity is simply a question of authorship. Was the Bible written by the authors whose names it bears, and are its contents in all material points the same as when they came from their hands?

It is a very simple question, as you see, although a very important one, and can be answered in a very simple way. It is only necessary to trace the history of the Bible like that of any other book along the stream of time as nearly as possible to its source. The source of the New Testament is the period of Christ and his apostles; while that of the Old Testament may be called the period of Ezra, who is the last of the inspired writers of the Old Testament and recognized by scholars as its final editor—in other words, the one who put it into its present literary form. The period of Ezra is the fifth century before Christ.

The Starting Point

We begin our investigation at about the fifteenth century of the Christian era, because then we have our first printed copy of the Bible. You know how impossible it is to change the text of a book after it has gotten into cold type, as we say, so that it is a very simple matter to compare a printed copy of the Bible of the fifteenth century with one of the twentieth, and determine whether the two correspond as to authorship and contents. It is unnecessary to say that this has been done again and again with satisfactory results.

But it may be asked: "Where was the Bible before it was printed?" And the answer is that it was then in written or manuscript form, these manuscripts being numerous scattered throughout the public and private libraries of Europe.

It is only a few years since the Revised Version of the English Bible was given to the world, whose editors had in their hands in the preparation of its text as many as 5,000 of these old manuscripts—2,000 of the Old Testament and 3,000 of the New. Therefore, it is plain that if in our day so many of these manuscripts exist, a much greater number must have existed five hundred years ago. Of course, it is not said that all of these manuscripts cover the whole of either the Old or New Testament in any case, but only parts of them; nevertheless, with this qualification it is proper to say that this number is still possessed.

Surer Than Classics

The value of this fact as bearing on the authenticity of the Bible is of great importance. The world has certain books of which it thinks about as much as the church thinks of the Bible, and which are called the Greek and Latin classics. The history of these books is traced in the same way as the Bible, but the number of old manuscripts in existence in their case is scarcely more than ten to twenty. If, therefore, the scholars of the world feel satisfied that they have an accurate text of a Homer or a Virgil, based on an examination of manuscripts as few as these, may not the church be satisfied as to the accuracy of the text of the Bible when her scholars have thousands of manuscripts to compare?

The Age of the Manuscripts

But if these manuscripts are no older than the fifteenth century and our first printed Bible, then no matter how numerous they are, they do not add a feather's weight of testimony to its authenticity. But as a matter of fact many of them are very much older.

Limiting ourselves just now to the New Testament, at least three of these manuscripts are as old as the fourth century of the Christian era. They are known as the Alexandrian manuscript, or Codex "A," the Vatican, or Codex "B," and the Sinaitic, or Codex "Aleph." The last two are certainly of the fourth century, and the first named of the earlier part of the fifth at least.

It is notable, too, that the custody of these is divided between the three great branches of the Christian church, the Protestant, the Roman Catholic, and the Greek, in the order named. The first is deposited in the British museum, the second in the Vatican Library, and the third in the Royal Library at St. Petersburg. Moreover, to quote the "Primers of the Faith," "The fact that these manuscripts are thus held by the three branches of the Christian church, in which there has been much rivalry and contention on points of doctrine, has contributed not a little to the preservation of the integrity of the text and the evidence of its authenticity."

In speaking of the manuscripts of the classics, it was not stated that they are no older than between, the tenth and fifteen centuries of the Christian era; but this is the fact, notwithstanding that their authors were as remote as the time of Christ and His apostles, and in some instances, much earlier. How much stronger, therefore, is the evidence for the authenticity of the New Testament, whose manuscripts are so many centuries older. In these manuscripts the books are ascribed to the same authors and the contents are just the same as in our printed copy.

Quotations From the Fathers

But we can go back still further and trace the history of the New Testament through the quotations of the Christian fathers of the third century. By "Christian Fathers" we mean the leaders of the church in that day, and who were in the habit of writing sermons and apologies for or in defense of the Christian religion in which they quoted copiously from the New Testament. So copiously did they quote that if every copy of the New Testament were destroyed, the whole of it might be put together again from their writings. This is not a fancy but a fact which has been tested and proven true.

Spanning First Century

There is still one century intervening, however, before the time of Christ and his apostles, and in this, the second, we find the New Testament just as we have it today in the versions of the period. A version differs from a manuscript in this, that the latter is a copy of the Old or New Testament in the original language in which it was written, that is, Hebrew or Greek, while a version is a copy of either in a different language. There are two versions of the second century, the Latin and the Syriac, the former of which was the Bible of the western and the latter the Bible of the eastern church in that early time.

It is not claimed that these versions exist today, but through copies of them which are possessed, and the testimony concerning them in the writings of the early church fathers, there is no question as to their existence at the time referred to. Indeed, the Syriac dated probably from 150 A.D., which warrants the inference that if a collection of books known as the New Testament was in existence at that time, the separate books which formed that collection must have existed earlier. But it does not have to be very much earlier to bring us into the time of Christ and his apostles, since John, the last of the twelve, did not die until the close of the first century.

We thus see that as early as the middle of the second century of the Christian era there existed the books we now know as the New Testament, ascribed to the same authors and containing in all material points the same text.

Tracing the Old Testament

It is possible to do for the Old Testament just what we have done for the New. Beginning with the printed Bible of the fifteenth century, we trace the Old Testament through manuscripts of the ninth and tenth centuries.

Just why there are no earlier manuscripts of the Old Testament now in existence than these it is impossible to state with historical precision, but there are one or two facts which aid us to approximate an answer.

One of these facts is the sublime reverence of the Jews for their sacred writings, and another is the existence for centuries of a class of Hebrew scholars whose office was to study, interpret and transcribe those writings. This body of scholars was a kind of self-perpetuating one known as the Massoretes. It had its origin at about the first century of the Christian era, and its office was to collect and examine manuscripts of the Old Testament with a view to the preparation of what would be called in these days an accepted text.

The work of these men was laboriously and patiently pursued for centuries, closing about the ninth century of the Christian era, and it is supposed that with the setting forth of their results all pre-existing manuscripts were destroyed because of the feeling of reverence referred to. Thus, in the language of another, "by the work of the Massoretes and their predecessors from the close of the first century onwards, the stream of the transmitted Hebrew text was made to run in a clear-cut channel and guarded from the possibility of defilement."

Targums and Versions

But it must not be supposed that because there are no earlier Hebrew manuscripts we are unable to trace the Old Testament any further back. Indeed, we have more than one way of doing this. For example, after the manuscripts come what are called the "Targums." This word means literally an "interpretation," and its history is about as follows:

When the Jews were carried into captivity in Babylon, 588 B. C., they gradually ceased to employ the Hebrew as a spoken language, although in their synagogues these sacred oracles were still read in that tongue. Necessity, therefore, compelled the interpretation of the Hebrew text to those who did not know that language, which was done in a kind of running commentary or paraphrase. This paraphrase subsequently came to be written down and took the name of "Targum."

These "Targums" in the Chaldean dialect were, no doubt, numerous at first, although those which have descended to us are all later than the Christian era, the oldest of which, covering only a part of the Old Testament, however, dates from about the seventh century. It can readily be seen how important these "Targums" are in identifying the existence of the Old Testament at that early time.

The Septuagint

But back of these "Targums" again, we have versions of the Old Testament just as we have of the New. There are many of these of different dates and in different languages, but the earliest and most historic is known as the Septuagint, dating back as early as the third century before Christ.

The Septuagint version gets its name, which means "seventy," from a company of Hebrew scholars of that number, who were engaged, it is said, by Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt, to prepare the work for the Alexandrian library. It was begun somewhere about 285 B. C., but the date of its conclusion is not so well known. In the early church this version was considered of great value, and is that used very frequently by the inspired writers in their quotations in the New Testament.

Summing Up

We thus see that by a chain of very few links, the Old Testament of our day is joined to that antedating Christ's day by nearly three centuries. And if one asks whether it be not a long period to account for between the third century B. C. and the fifth B. C., when Ezra flourished, the answer is in the negative.

President Patton in "The Seat of Authority in Religion," employs an illustration which fits admirably in this case. If we are journeying on a railroad train, he says, we do not insist that it shall deposit us in our portecochere, but are satisfied to be left at the railroad station because we can easily walk the rest of the way.

If, in other words, the Old Testament were in canonical form in the third century, it is clear that the separate books of that canon must have been in existence long prior to that time. But two hundred years, more or less, is not a long time for the formation of a canon, and leaves little opportunity for the promulgation of a forgery of such magnitude.

Finally, the authenticity of the Old Testament is settled satisfactorily for every Christian by the fact that it was used by our Lord Jesus Christ. The Old Testament of our day was the Bible of His day, and if He were satisfied as to its authenticity His followers may not stand in any doubt.

The Larger Christian Life

By Rev. C. I. Scofield, D. D.

(Reprinted from the "Dallas News.")

TEXT—"He brought me forth also into a large place."—Ps. 18:19.

You observe that we have here a testimony, not a promise. God actually had done this thing for David. He was a shepherd lad, obscure, conscious, but dimly if at all, of his own capacities, shut up to the small things and small thoughts of a young rustic. Then God began to work in his life, stimulating him with great promises, leading him into great ventures, beating him with the hammer of adversity till the crude ore of him was turned into tempered steel; but all the while breaking shackles, tearing away enmeshing nets, lifting the wings of his soul, filling him with divine inbreathings, expanding, enlarging, disenthraling him; until at last David came to the consciousness that he was a free man and in a large place. He could stand with lifted head, strong young arms outflung, upraised chest breathing deep the free, ample air, a man at home in the universe. I repeat it, David is testifying here, not theorizing. He had found it so. Upon which I remark:

The Real Christian Life Is Large

It is the men who are living without God who are living in a small and narrow place. There is no more shameless lie afloat among men than that the Christian life is a narrow life, and that the life that does not subject itself to the will of God is a high, free thing. We are all, I believe, passionate lovers of liberty. We seek room; we want a place in which we may expand and broaden out. A great many young people of today have a fancy that to come into the will of God is to come into narrowness. It is Satan's lie. But let us not blame the devil overmuch. He never could have got his lie believed if so many of God's people had not made "religion" a poor negative thing; a system of "don'ts" and of outward observance.

It was to intensely "religious" people—in this sense—that Christ spoke His great word, "If the Son shall make you free, then shall ye be free indeed." He came to preach deliverance to the captive of formalism no less than to the captive of sin. The gospel is a call out of littleness, out of pettiness, out of insignificant things, to the breadth and sweep of great thoughts and forces, and to the wide horizon of limitless possibilities.

Now it is true of every child of God that he is brought into a large place. Unfortunately, many persist in living narrow lives in the large place. To be free and not to know it, this seems to me tragical and pathetic beyond words. One thinks of old prisoners set free, and weeping for the old dungeon again.

Just here permit me to anticipate a very natural objection. You say, "I live in obscurity; God has set me in narrow circumstances, in a routine of petty duties. I live in a farm house; I live in a village; I toil in a factory; I monotonously feed pieces of leather or wood into a machine and never see them again; I plow, I delve, I sell cloth by the yard, I wash pans and dishes. I know of no large and beautiful way to wash pans. I keep a little district school; I must have my mind on my work; my back grows bent and my muscles stiff and sore. I am no exultant young David anointed of the Lord, free to go and come, to sing deathless songs, to rule over men."

Patience, Dear Heart, Hear This!

Jesus Christ lived thirty years in Nazareth, but he never permitted Nazareth to give the measure of his life. You may think of him as a boy helping his mother, holding baby, fetching water from the fountain and chips from the shop. He made yokes, I suppose, not wholesale with a big iron machine, but one by one, patiently fitting them to peasant shoulders, broad and narrow, stooped and straight. Thirty years he lived there, and there was matured the finest human character the world ever saw. The baptism with the Spirit added power; suffering perfected sympathy, but it was the largest, freest man that ever lived who laid down the carpenter's tools one day and walked down to Jordan to be baptized of John.

Do you not see the secret? He never permitted Nazareth to put its littlenesses upon him. The one man upon whom there are no limitations whatever of race, of circumstance or of character was a villager who toiled for bread! It is not given to many of us to live in great scenes and to be a part of great transactions. Our life is a round of small cares and duties. But Jesus Christ lived in narrower circumstances than ours. The newspapers, the telegraph, the railway and steamship bring largesses to the remotest of us. Homer chanted his deathless songs from door to door, in poverty, unappreciated, for a crust of bread. Milton, shut up to physical blindness, ranged in spirit from the Paradise that was to the Paradise that shall be. Dante, in exile, in a petty, mediaeval town, learning "the steepness of another's stairs and the saltiness of another's bread," fathomed the upper and the nether depths.

Do you say, "But we are not Homer, Milton, and Dante?" Thank God! I would rather have my two eyes than Milton's fame; my own good native land than Dante's exile; my humble home than Homer's wanderings. But surely our souls have some power of flight; their wings may beat the upper air for some distance, somewhere, if they may not take Dante's tremendous spirals.

What We Are, Not What We Do, Determines the Largeness of Life

Lacordaire says: "A King may pass through our streets clothed in purple and fine linen, and he may be a mean and base man, because his thoughts are mean and base; and there may pass by a poor man in vile raiment and he may be a great man, because his converse with himself is high and great." That is true. Things do not make life large. Men do large things sometimes in small places, and others do small things in large places. If we are of kin to the great souls we shall some time be known as of that strain. A homely American poet has put this into his poem, "The Unexpressed." Three men, writer, musician, builder, plod through life, toiling day by day for daily bread; and the writer never pens the epic which he dumbly feels; the musician never composes the oratorio which resounds in his soul; the builder builds wooden houses instead of the cathedral of which he feels himself capable. And then they die, and the three men who greet them are Homer, Mozart, and Michael Angelo.

"This dead musician's soul went forth
Into the darkness drear—

A glad voice smote the clouds apart—
The brother-greeting of Mozart,

Who hailed him as his peer.

'Souls know,' he said, 'that music best
That haunts the dumb soul unexpressed.'

Yes; many a life of obscurity, poverty, neglect, self-denial and pain is essentially great because it is lived in fellowship with great things—the things of God. Such a soul can wait. It is elect, and shall yet come to its own.

"Serene, I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind, or tide, or sea;
I rave no more 'gainst time or fate,
For lo! my own shall come to me.

"I stay my haste, I make delays;
For what avails this eager pace?
I stand amid the eternal ways,
And what is mine shall know my face.

"Asleep, awake, by night and day,
The friends I seek are seeking me.
No wind shall drive my bark astray,
Nor change the tide of destiny.

"What matter if I stand alone?
I wait with joy the coming years;
My heart shall reap where it has sown,
And garner up its fruit of tears.

"The waters know their own and draw
The brook that springs in yonder height;
So flows the good with equal law
Unto the soul of pure delight.

"The stars come nightly to the sky,
The tidal waves unto the sea;
Nor time, nor tide, nor deep, nor high,
Shall keep my own away from me!"

The Secret of the Larger Life

If now you ask me how all this larger Christian life may be lived, I shall venture three suggestions:

1. Put your life under the great law of exclusion by preoccupation. Keep littleness out by being with greatness. There was no place in Christ for mean things. It was not that Christ refused small cares, drudgeries, duties. It was that He accepted them and was filled with the joy of doing them.

2. Live your Christian life in the sense of its great verities. You are children and heirs of God by faith in Jesus Christ. Say every day, "I am a child of God." I defy circumstances to narrow and dwarf the life that is lifted by the consciousness of divine sonship and divine fellowship.

"The larger Christian life is independent of circumstances."

There drifted into my house once a human wreck. He had been the editor of a great daily newspaper, and was a man of rare gifts. It was the old story; little by little the drink habit had fastened upon him and had dragged him down to a living hell. I could not tell him to "assert his manhood"; he had none. I had a better gospel than that. I told him that he could be born again; that he could become a partaker of the divine nature, and a son and heir of God. He fell upon his knees. "My God!" he cried. "Can a dog like me become Christ's son." And he poured out his heart, giving himself away to Christ. I shall never forget his transfigured face, nor the singular solemnity and loftiness of his bearing as he took my hand and said: "I am a child of God."

Get out under the stars on a clear night, and look over your estate. The stars are yours and Christ's. Know that as a child of God you are greater than any possible estate, and you will not wash pans, plow and reap any less thoroughly, but you will do these things royally, like a king or queen. Remember, you are of the family of God.

A poor saint went into a very aristocratic church in a strange place. "I believe," said the usher rather dubiously, "that I do not know you." "Do you know the Lord Jesus Christ?" asked the poor saint. "Oh, yes." "Well," said the poor man, "I am a brother of his."

3. Be a vital part of Christ's work.

"The field is the world." Your field is the world. Keep your sympathies world wide. If your heart is in China or Africa or Central America, and with the work there, it is just the same as if you were there, wherever your body may happen to be.

At the Student Volunteer Convention in Cleveland they had Carey's cobbler's hammer. It was better worth seeing than the crown jewels in the tower. No scepter in Christendom is so venerable as that hammer. It is as if it came out of the shop in Nazareth, almost. Carey beat hobnails into peasants' shoes with that hammer; beat sturdily and well. But, as one thinks of him, the narrow walls of his cobbler's stall fall away, and his humble bench changes to the likeness of a throne, and one sees a pierced hand hold over his head the diadem of righteousness. For that cobbler, bowed over his daily task, was sweeping the darkened continents into his yearning, and holding a world up in prayer to God.

We do not mortify self in order to be justified, but because we are justified.—Selected.

The law smites the doer of the law for righteousness, whether it be doing in whole or in part; whether it be trusting in Christ and filling out something by merit, or whether it be filling out merit without Christ at all.—Bishop.

Why He Became a Missionary

By Norman C. Davis

(Notes of an address to his fellow students in The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

FROM an early age I was planning to be an electrical engineer. I loved the study of machinery and was never happier than when working with it. I liked mathematics. With a fondness for these two essentials, there seemed to be no reason why I should not rise in the profession which I had chosen for my life's work. With this end in view, at the age of sixteen, I entered a shop in Toronto to begin work with the intention of making an A1 electrical engineer. Time passed, but I could not find the joy in my chosen profession I had been expecting. Time after time I went to the floor above, and burying my face in my hands, cried out in despair because of failure to get the joy and happiness that should have come to me.

After passing through an experience of loneliness, trial and tribulation for some time, one day I went into the basement of the factory where I was working, and there on my knees I found Christ.

The next week I was standing by the side of my bed, and of a sudden was filled with a burning desire to go out among men and preach Christ. I felt a conviction that the Lord was calling me as in Romans 15:20: "Yea, so shall I strive to preach the gospel not where Christ was named lest I should build upon another man's foundation." It was then that the first conviction came to me to go to the Sudan. It was with this conviction that I came here to the Institute seven years ago, and during the years that I have been away from here pursuing studies elsewhere, there has not been a moment but that I have felt satisfied in this conviction and ready to lay all on the altar of service.

Every Soul Should Have a Chance

My second reason for going to the Sudan is that I believe that every man in this world should have a right to receive the message of the gospel. When I realize that more than three-fourths of the world is in darkness, I feel that I must carry the light to them. I believe in John 3:16, "God so loved the world." I believe in the great commission of Christ when He said, "Ye shall be my witnesses unto the uttermost parts of the earth." I believe Christ meant what He said. I believe that the evangelization of Africa and every other un-evangelized field lies close to the heart of Jesus. I believe we are in the closest place of blessing when we fellowship with Him in this work. When I look at the great un-evangelized world, I can see no reason why I should settle down in a pastorate at home.

I have just come some hundreds of miles through the country, rolling along on the train through town after town and city after city. I never went through one town or hamlet that I didn't see one or two, or even three or four, churches. Yet, Robert Moffat said he could go up to the mountain top near his station and see the smoke from a thousand villages where they had never heard the name of Jesus Christ.

Something Is Wrong

I was speaking to my mother several days ago. Her heart was feeling wrenched and torn as her two boys are going away. I said, "After my graduation from college, if I had had two calls to service, one from a little town of about five hundred people where they already had five churches, and one from a great city of half a million people where there was no church, but where I would have the opportunity to plant one and preach for the first time the gospel of Jesus Christ,—which would I accept?" I would go to the large place of opportunity and privilege. But take that great city of half a million, and plant it in Central Africa with surroundings that call for hardship and trial, separation from father and mother, and is the call any the less strong? I tell you, men that are going into the ministry, I don't see how you can consistently graduate from this school and settle down into a pastorate without having a special revelation from God to do it. If you can go out into the ministry after having to face the un-evangelized parts of this world, there is something wrong with your Christian experience.

I had the privilege of preaching in Mr. Philpott's church, in Hamilton, several times. Many a time as I looked into that congregation of two thousand people, I would say, "Lord, I would rather go out into Africa and preach the gospel there than to stay at home and have as large an opportunity as this." If you offered me the pastorate of Moody Church, I would consider I was falling from grace, neglecting opportunity by accepting it, if I could go out to West Africa and there preach the gospel.

If every minister, every Christian worker in this land, should say, "Lord Jesus, I give you my heart, and life and all my talents, all that I am, to do what Thou dost want me to do, to go where Thou wouldst have me go," I believe there would be thousands of empty pulpits next Sunday, and thousands of workers on their way to the un-evangelized parts of the world. We need to pray that God will thrust out laborers into this harvest.

A New Suit and An Overcoat

Some of you students that never expect to go to the foreign field, take a fellowship in this work. I can testify this morning that one of the greatest joys I have ever had in life is being able to put a little money into the foreign field.

About three years ago a man came into our church in Toronto and spoke for India. He said, "If I could get one hundred native workers supported, I could have a harvest of ten thousand souls for Jesus Christ." That statement of his was ringing in my ears all through the summer. It came to me, "Why don't you support a native worker yourself? Why not do it yourself?" Then, I began to argue. I was just a poor student. I hadn't any money, any means; I couldn't be expected to do such a thing, but the thought came, how about that little nest egg you've got in the bank? Well, I needed a suit of clothes and an overcoat, and I was saving for that very purpose. I faced the situation and at last I came to the conclusion I could trust God for my suit and overcoat, and I would take the chance and have the joy of supporting a native worker. I took it. A few weeks rolled by after school opened, and I was down town preaching at one of the city missions. After the service a man came to me and said, "Here is something for yourself, Mr. Davis," and put a little piece of paper in my pocket. When I took it out later, I saw a check for $25.00, just enough to get my suit of clothes. By the way, I got one here for $5 when I was a student. A few weeks later, some friends said, "We want you to come to our house for Christmas, we have a present for you." When I went, there was a brand new overcoat, not a secondhand one, but one made for the purpose.

I can testify that the greatest joy I have ever tasted in life has come from my contact with the mission field. If there is a man here whom God has called for foreign missionary work, never let any opportunity at home, never let any invitation make you swerve from the purpose God has planted in your heart.

Archbishop Whateley's Saying

My third reason is this: I find I have in the gospel of Jesus Christ a message that can carry dynamic power, that can go down into the lowest depths and take up the most degraded and transform them and make them new creatures in Christ. Archbishop Whateley says if our religion is false we ought to change it; if it is true, we ought to propagate it. Can I stay at home when I have a message that can transform the degraded people in Central Africa? Can you stay at home when you have such a message? May God lay upon us the burden of souls and the desire to bring men and women out of that darkness.

I thank God, with all my heart, that He has honored me in calling me forth into this work.

THE COMING OF THE KING

By Rev. Roby F. Day

All along the Christian ages,
Men have looked for right and peace,
For the time when all the nations
Would their awful warfare cease;
And they hailed each new invention,
Each new off'ring man could bring,
As a substitute sufficient
For the coming of the King.
Alas! Alas! Alas!
Such dreams will pass away,
But the hope of His returning
Grows more precious day by day.

Soon the promises He gave us
Of His coming back again
He will keep; and we shall see Him
Coming with His heavenly train,
Riding on the clouds of heaven,
Calling to His saints, "Arise!

Come, my people, come and welcome
To the meeting in the skies!"
Awake! Awake! Awake!
Ye sleeping saints, arise!
Join the hosts of all earth's faithful,
For the meeting in the skies!

Brother, will you share the blessing
Of that meeting in the air,
When the saints of all the ages
Shall behold the Bridegroom fair,
And with Him shall reign forever
On His throne so long foretold—
Promised to Him by His Father
And by all the seers of old?
All hail! All hail! All hail!
Thine shall the Kingdom be;
Prince of Peace and Lord of Glory,
Reign on earth in majesty!

Wanted, More Shamgars

By Rev. Howard W. Pope

A Breakfast Talk at The Moody Bible Institute

AND after him was Shamgar, the son of Anath, which slew of the Philistines six hundred men with an ox goad; and he also delivered Israel." Judges 3:31.

When the chosen people entered the promised land God left certain nations of the Canaanites in the land in order to prove Israel by them, to see whether she would be faithful to Jehovah or not. These nations were assigned to different tribes of Israel, and God promised that he would drive them out on certain conditions. These conditions were that Israel was not to associate with them, or marry them, or bow down to their gods, or even mention the name of their gods. But Israel did not obey, and the steps of their downfall are recorded in this chapter; they did not drive out their enemies, they took their daughters to be their wives, they dwelt among the Canaanites, they served their gods, they forgot the Lord their God, and He sold them into the hand of the enemy. The book of Judges is a sad, sad story of disloyalty, defeat and bondage, brightened now and then by a description of some noble man or woman whom God raised up to defend His honor, and to deliver Israel from her sad condition.

Among the heroes whom God used for this purpose no name shines out more signally than that of Shamgar, of whom it is said that he slew six hundred men single handed with an ox goad. And that is all that we know about him. To my mind this is a striking proof of the inspiration of the Scriptures. If the Bible had been made by man he would surely have devoted a whole chapter to such a remarkable achievement, but the Holy Spirit for reasons best known to Himself gives only twenty-six words to it. The inspiration of the Scriptures is proven as conclusively by their silence, as by what they say.

Shamgar, a Personal Worker

Shamgar is a good type of the personal worker. We need many like him today. We have men enough to complain and criticise, but not enough of those who are willing to grapple with the problems of life, and attempt to solve them. If he had been like some men he would have called a convention to discuss the state of religion in Israel, passed resolutions, appointed a committee to report and returned home. Shamgar was not that kind of man. He believed in personal work, and so he took hold of the matter himself, and, lo, the whole problem was solved.

Furthermore, he was not a trained worker. In these days we have schools to instruct workers in the best methods, but Shamgar had received no training at all. He knew nothing about war, and he had no weapons except an ox goad. It is not likely that he killed those Philistines quite as scientifically as some might have done it, but he did it just as effectually, for he killed them dead. There is a large place for untrained workers in our day. There is always something that anyone can do, who really wishes to help, and in the doing of it he gets a certain training. While it is true that God can accomplish more with a trained worker than with one who is untrained, just as one can cut more grass with a sharp scythe than with a dull one, still let not anyone be discouraged because he is not able to attend a training school. Some of the best Christian workers the world has ever seen never spent a day in college, seminary, or training school.

Mr. Moody and Mel Trotter

Where did Mr. Moody get his training? Or Uncle John Vassar, Mel Trotter, or a host of others who have been signally successful in winning souls to Christ? Shamgar had faith in God. He was familiar with his Bible, and he remembered that God had promised Moses and Joshua that one should chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight. Here were only six hundred Philistines, and if God's promises were reliable that was an easy job.

I suppose it came about in this way. The Philistines had raided the country so often that the people were intimidated. We read in Judges 5:6 that the highways were unoccupied, and the people traveled in the byways. In the spring of the year the frightened Israelites crept out into their fields and sowed them. During the summer their enemies left them unmolested; but when the crops began to ripen they raided them constantly, and carried off the harvest. One day a band of Philistines came down upon Shamgar's field. Some men would have run away, but not so Shamgar. He said: "This thing has gone far enough. It is a disgrace to our nation, and to Jehovah as well. If no one else will resist them I must, and I may as well begin now as ever."

Accordingly he attacked the six hundred men with nothing but an ox goad. God honored his faith and gave him the victory. This put fresh courage into fainting hearts. When they saw what God and one brave man could do they rallied as a nation, and soon threw off the yoke of the enemy.

Jealous for God's Honor

Observe, too, that Shamgar was jealous for God's honor. It was not the loss of his own crop, or even his neighbors' crops which led him to enter such an unequal contest. He felt that God's honor was at stake, and he could not bear to have the Philistines despise Jehovah or His people. And so he was willing to run some risk, if indeed there be any risk in trusting God's promises.

Jonathan did the same thing, as we read in 1 Samuel 14:6, and Nehemiah also, and God honored their faith in a similar way. God needs more Shamgars in our day—men who are willing to work for Him in a small way, and work alone, and work with what they have. Will you be one?

Three Downward Steps

By Adam I. Berninger, M. D.

A WORD of warning must needs be offered to many Christians who in these days are taking three awful steps downward. The steps are error, heresy, and apostasy.

Error

What is meant by error is any departure from the body of revealed truth; any unbelief of the things which have been held by the true Church of Christ. Unbelief is undoubtedly an entering wedge of Satan. Some do not believe the Word of God about hell. Some doubt the deity of Jesus Christ. Some do not believe He is coming back to earth again. Others refute the virgin birth. And yet others do not believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures. These are all errors. This is the starting place downward. So long as this is held by the individual without being told to others, it remains to his own hurt and his own loss. But some tell their doubts and unbeliefs to others; and some grow bold and begin to teach their errors. They then take another step downward.

Heresy

The person who begins to propagate error is in the snare of Satan. He is working for the enemy of Christ and of his own soul, but, of course, does not know it. All such are usually very zealous. Satan has them thinking that they are working for God, and they are often easily distinguished, because of their unusual zeal, zeal without knowledge.

It is a sad condition, indeed. But they are hard to reach, because they are sure they are right; their mind is darkened from seeing truth, through the operation of Satan. And all because they began by doubting God's Word. Some doubt one point, some another. But the end is the same—spiritual darkness. However, these souls are not necessarily lost. Many heretics have been recovered from the snare of the devil. Jesus is able and willing to deliver them, if they will call upon Him. The danger is that they may persist in this way so long that they will be led by the enemy to take another step downward, and "fall away" from the body of true believers. This is called

Apostasy

When a person who has doubted some portion of God's Word, then propagated his doubts, and finally becomes offended because of the Word, and turns away wilfully and deliberately, he is an apostate. Such was done by many in Israel in days of old. And the same is being done today. For this there is no remedy; only judgment remains. What a judgment it will be to meet a Saviour from whose word they turned away!

Beware of doubts. Let God be true, though every man be a liar. As a little child, receive His Word of truth, which is able "to save your souls." Let others doubt if they will, but warn them if you meet such. Know this, that all the writer knows of those who have "fallen away," were persons who doubted some portion of God's Word; and that was the starting point for their steps away from God.

Beware of error and of doubting God's Word in anything. Beware of heresies of all kinds—false teachings. Beware of apostasy; there is no remedy for it but judgment.

THE WORLD'S BIBLE CONFERENCES

The conferences were organized and are directed by Rev. Sol C. Dickey, D.D., of Winona Lake, Ind., and are intended to be an extension of the Winona Bible Conferences held without a break for twenty years, condensing the program into six days instead of ten. The series for the fall closed at Columbus, O., December 11.

The speakers at their conference include several popular pulpit orators, some Bible expositors, and some leading evangelists. The regular team consists of Dr. Cobern, archaeologist; Dr. Palmer, specialist in methods; M. B. Williams, evangelist; besides Dr. Dickey, as director and Lincoln G. Dickey, as business manager.

Practical and Perplexing Questions

Answered by the Editors

SECRET SOCIETIES

I recently heard a sermon based on the parable of the good Samaritan, justifying secret societies and fraternal orders. Are not these societies and orders a kind of amalgamation of the church and the world, and do they not illustrate Cain's offering of works instead of the faith of Abel?

We fully agree with the correspondent as to the nature of certain secret societies, though we admit that good men are often mixed up in them, alas!

THE ORIGIN OF THE HEBREW CEREMONIAL

What is the meaning of Amos 5:25 and Jeremiah 7:22 and when was the ceremonial worship of the Hebrews instituted?

The ceremonial worship of the Hebrews was instituted by Jehovah in the time of Moses about 1500 B. C. The passages in the prophets quoted do not contradict this although they were written respectively 700 and 900 years later. Amos is rebuking Israel because they did not present their sacrifices and offerings to God in the wilderness as they should have done; and Jeremiah is intimating that all the enactments relating to sacrifices are not to be compared with the importance of the moral law. In other words, his negation has a rhetorical rather than a logical significance.

THE ALLIANCE OF SYRIA AND ISRAEL AGAINST JUDAH

Kindly give me light on Isaiah 7:16, "the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings."

As to the meaning of Isaiah 7:16, the reference is to the alliance against Judah which had been made by Syria and Israel. To quote "Barnes' Commentary," the land is that of those two nations, which is here mentioned as one land because the nations were then united in this compact of invasion and conquest. The phrase, "which thou abhorrest," means "which thou fearest." As a matter of fact the Assyrians came against Syria and slew Rezin (2 Kings, 16:9), but a short time after he had joined with Remaliah in this threatened invasion; while Pekah, the son of Remaliah, was slain by Hoshea in the fourth year of Ahaz, perhaps not more than two years after this prophecy was delivered (Cf. 2 Kings 15:27-30 and 16:1).

CARD-PLAYING

Will you please explain card-playing to me, that is, is it harmful or not? At school we have talked about it very much.

There are some innocent games like "authors" and "logomachy," but we presume our correspondent has in mind euchre, whist, etc. In regard to these, we consider them very questionable amusements for Christians, always laying them open to the charge of inconsistency. In the second place, they are dangerous in that card-playing for pastime soon becomes a passion for which men have been known to forego home, family and business. They are dangerous because they lead to gambling, which is one of the most soul-destroying sins. We would recommend our correspondent to consider card-playing in the light of such passages of Holy Writ as these: John 8:29, 1 Corinthians 10:23, Philippians 2:15, 1 Timothy chs. 3, 4 and 5. We doubt if any card-playing Christian is living well-pleasing to God, or abstaining from every appearance of evil, or shining as a light in the world, or exhibiting the power of Godliness.

THE MEANING OF SHILOH

How does Shiloh imply Prince of Peace, and why is it used in Gen. 49:10? How do you determine that it refers to the Messiah?

Commentators are not agreed as to whether this word refers to the Deliverer Who was to come or to the deliverance that would characterize His coming, but nevertheless in both aspects it carries the thought of peace and yet of mighty power. It was a most unusual word in the time of Jacob who spoke it, and perhaps never before uttered. There was wonder and mystery around it then, and there is still, for while it can not be definitely determined as referring to the Messiah, yet both Jews and Christians are practically agreed that it does so refer. The Jews say that He is yet to come, and Christians say that He has come to suffer, and will come a second time to reign. On the supposition that its application is Messianic, and to us the context seems to make it so unmistakably, it should be observed that since "Shiloh" came, the sceptre has departed from Judah, and the "law-giver from between his feet." In other words, for more than nineteen centuries Judah, as a nation, has not had a recognized existence.

PHARAOH AND JUDAS

Why do interpreters of the Scriptures interpret Exodus 4:21 as they do when the Bible says, "I (meaning God) will harden Pharaoh's heart?" They say that God never deals unjustly with His creatures and that Pharaoh hardened his own heart.

Then is not Judas another example of the same kind? If Judas was predestined to betray Christ in order to bring about fulfilment of the Scriptures, could he be a free agent?

Why must we accept some Bible teaching as worded in Scripture and not others? It seems as though some thoughts were changed to suit the mind of the interpreter.

1. As to Pharaoh, it is true that Exodus 4:21 makes God say that He will harden Pharaoh's heart, but in other places in that same book it is said that Pharaoh hardened his own heart. The explanation is that Pharaoh by his conduct, put himself under the law by which a man's heart becomes harder the longer he resists divine mercy. The law was one ordained of God in which sense, and in that alone, it may be said that God did the hardening. For parallel places see Romans 1:18-23 and 2 Thessalonians 2:8-12.

2. As to Judas, we do not recall any Scripture which says he was predestined to betray Christ. That it was foreknown he would do so is another matter. God foreknows every sinner that ultimately will be lost, but that does not mean that He arbitrarily wills it so, nor does it mean that the sinner is not a free agent. He might repent if he would, but he will not. There is a deep mystery here which the finite cannot fathom, but we should be careful as to the spirit in which we inquire about these things lest we be found replying against God.

3. The third question is somewhat ambiguous, and cannot be answered satisfactorily in a wholesale way. If the correspondent will furnish an illustration of what is meant we will reply later. At present we can say only that the context has much to do with the interpretation of any passage of Scripture. However, no interpreter has the right to explain any passage according to his own mind, but only according to God's mind which it is his duty carefully to ascertain.

I Wonder What and How, and Why and If

By John C. O'Hair

I wonder why people believe the world good,
When thousands are suffering for raiment and food;

When sin, crime, and misery, all over abound,
Filling prisons, asylums, and holes in the ground?

I wonder if ever this world could display
More ungodly sinners than are here today?

I wonder what age had more greed, graft or lust

When more laws were enacted to make people just?

I wonder what politics can bring about
To rid the world's evils, and sin to wipe out?

I wonder if churches are really alive
And still have the power to bless and revive;
Or how many churches are rather asleep
Or how far the goats outnumber the sheep?
I wonder why preachers preach social reform
To the devil's delight, for it does him no harm?

I wonder why they do not heed God's behest,
And preach the "old gospel" which meets every test,

And leads men and women to sorrow for sin
To faith in a Saviour, and new life to begin?

I wonder if sinners can find the right way
By searching the lives of church folk today?
And I wonder if sins in the lives of church folk

Will justify sinners who hide in this cloak?

I wonder if heathen across the deep sea

By millions are waiting from sin to be free;
I wonder how churches respond to the call,
Whether members like missions as well as dance-hall?

I wonder how many new sects will yet sprout
To confuse the poor sinner and cause him to doubt?

I wonder why sinners, helpless and lost,
Won't receive God's salvation, without work or cost,

Which was purchased by Christ Who suffered and bled,

Who bore all our sins when He died in our stead?

I wonder if some one's not really to blame
For all of earth's miseries, sorrow and shame?

I wonder why people deny Satan's power
When he's blighting and damning earth's millions this hour?

I wonder if he's causing this present distress,
Throughout all the nations, felt more or less?

I wonder if shortly, some awful event
Will cause hearts to tremble and the world to lament?

I wonder why Christians like the five virgins wise

Are not looking for Some One to appear in the skies?

The Bridegroom soon cometh to take home His bride,

When He closeth the door will you be outside?

Lesson 13

The Rejection

Chapters 18:31; 19

At this point we enter the period of Christ's formal rejection of His nation with which we have been made acquainted in the other synoptics, and pass on to that which is peculiar to Luke, the conversion of Zaccheus (19: 1-10).

Jesus never declined an invitation to hospitality, but this is the first instance in which He ever invited Himself (v. 5). Murmured at for lodging with a "sinner," He justifies the act (vv. 9-10) and then spake the parable of the pounds (vv. 11-17) to "dispel the mistaken supposition that the Kingdom of God would immediately appear."

In this parable Christ is the nobleman. The pound represents the opportunity for service given each of His disciples, and on that disciple's use of it will be determined his place in the Kingdom, when the nobleman returns to set it up. This parable differs from that of the talents (Matt. 25: 14-30), though the two resemble each other. This speaks of opportunity, that of ability; and yet they agree in this, that the character of the service in the age to come will be that of ruling. But notice the reference to the "citizens" as distinguished from the servants. When Christ went away these two classes were left on the earth, and when He comes back the same two classes will meet Him, friends and enemies. Hence there can be no millennium before He comes. Notice also where this parable was spoken, Jericho. There was still to be seen there a palace of Archelaus, who had gone to Rome to get kingly power confirmed upon him. His citizens did send after him to frustrate his object, but he returned to reign in spite of all their efforts to influence Caesar against him. As their attempt failed in the one case, so will it in the other. (Stuart.)

The triumphal entry into Jerusalem (vv. 28-48) we pass over as having been sufficiently treated in Matthew 21, dwelling a moment, however, on verses 41-44, which are original with Luke. (Compare chapter 13: 34-35.) Christ's was the only sad heart in that rejoicing multitude, and sad not for Himself but the city that was soon to finally reject Him.

Questions on the Lesson

1. What three things in this lesson are original with Luke?
2. Why was the parable of the pounds spoken?
3. How does this parable differ from the "talents"?
4. Wherein do they agree?
5. What rendered the speaking of this parable in Jericho specially appropriate?

Lesson 14

The Last Teaching in Jerusalem

Chapters 20, 21

The facts of this lesson are: (1), the challenge of the chief priests and scribes as to the authority of Jesus which, as we saw in Matthew 21, was equivalent to their formal rejection of Him who had just entered their city as the Messiah in fulfillment of Zechariah's prophecy; (2), the parable of the vineyard which, as we saw in the same place, was equivalent to His formal rejection of the nation; (3), the questionings of the Pharisees, the Sadducees and the scribes, "that they might take hold of His words, that so they might deliver Him unto the power and authority of the governor" (vv. 19-47); (4), the incident of the widow's mite (21: 1-4), dealt with in Mark 12; (5), the Olivet discourse on His second coming being a shorter record of that in Matthew 24, and covering in this chapter verses 5-34.

In the questioning of the Sadducees (20: 27-40) Luke gives particulars unnoticed by the other evangelists. He adds the words of Jesus (v. 36), explaining why they who are counted "worthy to attain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage," because they never "die any more," but, in that sense, "are equal unto the angels." In other words, the ordinance of marriage is not needed to perpetuate the race. A further particular is at verse 38, "For all live unto him." Death does not terminate man's existence—either the righteous or the wicked, the believing or the unbelieving. As unclothed spirits they live before God, and of course this will be true in the further sense on the resurrection of their bodies from the dead.

Another particular peculiar to Luke is in the Olivet discourse. Verses 20 and 24 are not given by Matthew or Mark. The whole of that section in Luke refers to the siege of Jerusalem by Titus, A. D. 70, when the city was taken; but that siege foreshadows the greater one at the end of this age of which we learned in the Old Testament. In the siege at the end of the age the city will not be taken, but be delivered by the appearing of Christ (Rev. 19: 11-21). The references in Matthew and Mark, unlike this in Luke, are to this last siege and not to the earlier one. In Luke, the sign is the compassing of Jerusalem by armies (v. 20), but in the other Gospels it is the abomination in the holy place (2 Thess. 2:4), (Scofield Bible). There is no contradiction among the evangelists as to this, as a comparison shows that questions touching both the commencement and the end of Jerusalem's trouble were put to Christ by His disciples. But the different narrators give those which relate to our Lord's reply as each was guided by the Spirit to record them. The trouble of Jerusalem caused by the rejection of Christ, began with the siege under Titus, but will not end till the times of the Gentiles have run their course (Luke 21:24).

Questions on the Lesson

1. Name the great facts of this lesson.
2. Why is there no marrying in the resurrection life?
3. What words of Jesus prove life after death?
4. What essential difference will there be between the sieges of Jerusalem, that in A. D. 70, and that at the end of the age?
5. To which does Luke refer?
6. How would you harmonize the different statements of the evangelists on this point?

Lesson 15

The Last Day Upon Earth

Chapters 22, 23

Here we meet the momentous events recorded in Matthew 26, 27, and Mark 14, 15, and there treated as fully as space permitted.

The incidents peculiar to Luke are, first, the explanation of Judas' conduct when Satan entered into him (22:3). Satan can enter into no man without his own consent, but the only safeguard against that is the new birth (John 3); second, the information that Peter and John were the two disciples sent to make ready the passover (v. 8); third, the report of the strife among the disciples at that feast (vv. 24-30); fourth, the prediction of Peter's fall as the direct result of the work of Satan upon him (vv. 31-34). Satan's desire here should be understood as comprehending all the twelve, although it is Peter only for whom the Lord would pray as the one in danger. We cannot fail to contrast the sin of Peter with that of Judas, the former being forgiven while the latter was not. Peter, a child of God, was ensnared by Satan; Judas, a child of the devil, was his tool. That is the great difference which faith produces. Fifth, the story of Gethsemane is enriched by Luke in the mention of the angel from heaven strengthening Jesus, the drops of blood He sweat, and the circumstance that it was "for sorrow" the disciples slept (vv. 39-46). Sixth, in the arrest, Luke alone reports the words of Jesus to the betrayer, "Betrayest thou the Son of man with a kiss?" the request of the disciples whether they should "smite with the sword?" and the healing of Malchus' ear (vv. 47-53). Last, but not least, so far as chapter 22 is in mind, it is Luke who tells us that "Peter remembered the word of the Lord" about his denial of Him, after the latter had "turned and looked upon Peter" (vv. 61-62).

Coming to the next chapter, Luke tells us the nature of the indictment against Jesus before Pilate, and perhaps the very form of it (v. 2); and he alone gives us the hearing before Herod (vv. 6-12). On the way to Golgotha, he describes with detail the procession. Simon the Cyrenian is bearing the Cross "after Jesus" (v. 26); that is, as some think, Jesus Himself is bearing the Cross, but the other is carrying "the lighter end of it behind Him." A great multitude are following, and lamenting women among them (v. 27). To these Jesus addresses the warning of verses 28-31 not recorded elsewhere. Luke also gives the correct meaning of Golgotha (Aramaic) and Calvary (Latin) as "the skull" (v. 33).

Luke's account of the crucifixion is different from the others. Matthew and Mark bring out men's hatred of Christ in the fullest way, John presents Him as a divine person in whom is the calmness of One who knew whence He was, but Luke shows us "the man Christ Jesus, suffering, but showing grace even on the Cross." Of the seven sayings on the Cross three are found only in Luke, one when interceding for His murderers, one when about to breathe out His life, and the third in His reply to the penitent thief.

The story of the thief is original with Luke, who presents Him as a witness to Christ little expected at that moment and in that place. But what a miracle of grace is he—a malefactor saved, blessed, and received into Paradise!

Questions on the Lesson

1. In what chapters of Matthew and Mark are the events of this lesson paralleled?
2. Name the incidents in chapter 22 peculiar to Luke.

3. Do the same with chapter 23.
4. Contrast the sin of Peter with that of Judas.
5. Give the Aramaic and Latin words for "the place of a skull."
6. Give the sayings of Jesus on the Cross as recorded only by Luke.

THE GOSPEL OF LUKE

Lesson 16

The First Day of the Week

Chapter 24

The order of our Lord's appearances on this day was given with Matthew 28, and need not be repeated. Indeed, all of the events in the chapter were dealt with there, except the walk to Emmaus (vv. 13-35). Three score furlongs represent nearly eight miles (v. 13). Cleopas, "one of the two" on this journey is not met with elsewhere, and is to be distinguished from the "Cleophas" of John 19:25. Luke has sometimes been identified as the other, but this is conjecture. The story runs on smoothly and requires little explanation; but, following Stuart, we remark on the wisdom Christ displayed in dealing with the men. He brought them to the written word, and He left them there (vv. 25-27), furnishing no fresh revelation, but expecting them to rest on the old one. What He expected of them He still expects of His disciples, and the sooner we realize and act on it, the sooner will we have peace.

Another interesting item is the reference to Simon Peter (v. 34) which no other evangelist mentions, but which Paul records later (1 Cor. 15:5). The reason for silence concerning it was the question of communion with His Lord that had to be settled for Peter. Could he again enjoy it after what he had done? "That visit settled it," says Stuart. "We say visit because evidently it was the Lord who sought him out." He "hath appeared unto Simon." The effect of this interview on Peter is seen in John 21:7.

Luke is very definite concerning the evidences of Christ's resurrection. "A spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have" (39). There is no mention of blood, for that is the life of the flesh (Lev. 17:14), and was poured out when He died for guilty men.

Luke's version of the commission to the disciples is new, in that "repentance and remission of sins" were to "be preached in His name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem" (v. 47). This is "the gospel of the grace of God" (Acts 20:24), and is to be distinguished from the gospel of the Kingdom which our Lord and His disciples preached throughout His earthly life. That gospel will be preached again as we have seen (Matt. 24:14), but not until after the translation of the church, and Israel takes up her mission once more among the Gentiles.

Power was needed for the preaching of this gospel, and it is promised (v. 49), but our Lord must first ascend ere it can be "shed forth," hence the record following (vv. 50-51). This reference to the ascension in Luke makes his Gospel the most complete outline of the four, for it begins with the announcement of the birth of John the Baptist as none of the others do, and closes with this event which Mark alone alludes to and in the briefest manner. Speaking of verse 51, the "Scofield Bible" says very beautifully, "the attitude of our Lord here characterizes this age as one of grace, an ascended Lord is blessing a believing people with spiritual blessings. The Jewish, or Mosaic age, was marked by temporal blessings as the reward of an obedient people (Deut. 28:1-15). In the Kingdom or millennial age, spiritual and temporal blessings unite."

Questions on the Lesson

1. Have you reviewed the order of our Lord's appearances?
2. How was Christ's wisdom displayed on the walk to Emmaus?
3. What reason for silence is suggested in regard to our Lord's appearance to Simon?
4. Why is the mention of "blood" omitted in the testimony to Christ's bodily resurrection?
5. What is the distinction between the two "gospels" mentioned?
6. In what sense is the third Gospel the completest?
7. Distinguish among the three ages, the Jewish, Christian and millennial.

BLESSED ASSURANCE

By Mrs. S. F. Fisk

What though our sins do sometimes rise,
And tow'ring up so high,
Shut out e'en heaven before our eyes,
Our advocate is nigh.
And hast'ning to the mercy seat
His faithfulness we prove,
While there he doth for us entreat
The Father's pard'ning love.

The Holy Spirit now descends,
And, witnessing with ours,
Assurance brings, and doubt now ends,
While love our faith empowers.
Amazing love! so full and free!
True source of peace and joy!
His praise who showed such love for me,
Shall all my powers employ.

Deborah and Barak Deliver Israel

Judges 4:4-16

Golden text.—“The righteous cried, and Jehovah heard and delivered them out of all their troubles.”—Ps. 34:17, R. V.

There are two inspired accounts of this victory, one in prose (ch. 4) and one in poetry (ch. 5). They present different views of the same event. Israel had been oppressed for twenty years under Jabin and Sisera, his chief captain (4:2), though it seems that the northern tribes, Naphtali, Asher and Zebulun, were chiefly concerned.

I. Deborah's Call to Service, vv. 4-9. As the people forsook God He forsook them, and they became easy prey. If we withdraw from God's service we also withdraw from His protection. Although Joshua had burned Hazor (Josh. 11:1-11), yet because of Israel's backsliding it is now strong enough to become the ruler. When, however, Israel repented and cried unto God (v. 3) He raised up a deliverer and in this case it was a “mother in Israel,” (ch. 5:7). Deborah means “bee,” and it is suggested that “she answered her name by her industry, sagacity, and usefulness to the public, her sweetness to her friends, and sharpness to her enemies” (Matthew Henry). Her husband's name is given, but none of his achievements. From her dwelling place at Jetha as she sat beneath a palm-tree she gave forth her wisdom and judgment to the people who brought their difficulties before her (Exod. 18:13; Deut. 17:8-12). Judgment of sin always precedes any manifestation of grace (I Cor. 11:31-32). Deborah, the judge, recognized the gravity of the situation, for she was not only a judge, but a prophetess by divine appointment (2 Pet. 1:21). When she called Barak at once recognized her note of authority (v. 6). Deborah gave Barak explicit instruction and direction. In this chapter only the two tribes most interested are mentioned (5:17-18). Barak seems to have had more confidence in Deborah than in God, and for this he is destined to lose the greatest honor that could come to him in that “the Lord shall sell Sisera into the hand of a woman.” Barak's name means “lightning,” but for a moment he belied his name. He should have remembered the words of Moses, “if Thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence” (Exodus 33:15). God's presence with us is vastly more important than that of any human leader. “I,” (v. 7, R. V.) refers to God. When Deborah chided Barak as to Sisera's fate she was speaking prophetically as the sequel proves.

II. Barak's Defeat of Sisera, vv. 10-16.

Barak was a bold, sagacious leader, and chose one of the world's best and most famous battlefields, Esdraelon. Barak led his men to Mt. Tabor, from which could be seen the whole region where Sisera's armies were spread out upon the plain. From chapter 5 it appears that some came to the battle from the tribes of Manasseh and Issachar, 5:14, 15, and that others were expected who failed to obey the summons (5:15, 17). From the slopes of Mt. Tabor, Deborah and Barak saw Sisera and his iron chariots advancing across the plain. One of the descendants of Hobab, Moses' brother-in-law (Num. 24:22, R. V. m.), and Judges 1:16 had revealed the place of Barak's camp (v. 11). Heber should have been in the land of Judah and Simeon and not in such close proximity to the enemies of Israel. Deborah, however, urged Barak to attempt the battle, “for this is the day in which the Lord hath delivered Sisera into thine hand.” As we read verses 11 and 12, together with 5:17-19, it would look as though Sisera seemed to have the advantage against Barak and his ten thousand men. Sisera did not, however, count on Barak's powerful ally—God. “Is not Jehovah gone out before them?” Deborah depended upon the sure word of God, and was devoid of fear (See Rom. 8:31). God had said that victory was certain (v. 7). Her charge, “Up Barak!” was a clarion call, and served to nerve the entire army of Israel. Verse fifteen tells us who it was that won the battle that day (See also 5:20, 21; Josh. 10:10; I Chron. 13:15-17). Even the stars fought against Sisera, meaning that God turned the elements to the advantage of Israel's army. Showers of meteors have been recorded in this land in recent times, and 5:21 tells of the floods of water that “swept away,” overthrew the chariots of Sisera. The word “discomfited” we are told, scarcely suggests the sudden terror and confusion which fell upon Sisera's army. Like all of God's victories, it was most complete. By this battle the resistance of the Canaanites was completely overthrown and the Israelites secured the complete ascendancy over the land. Sisera fled northward towards Hazor, the capital city, along the same path followed by the Turks in 1799, when Napoleon and his allies defeated their army on this same field. Barak followed the main army and the chariots, and thereby missed the chief prize. Sisera in his flight came to a settlement of the Kenites, which he thought he could trust, and turned into the tent of Jael, the wife of Heber. Weary, he fell into a deep sleep, which gave Jael her opportunity. Taking a hammer and a tent pin she drove it through his temples into the ground, completing the victory of Deborah and Barak, and fulfilling the prophecy of verse nine. We are told that the Bedouin tents of the women are always closed, whereas those of the men are always open on one side, and for a man to enter the tent of a woman, other than that of his wife, is punishable with death. Jael defended her life and her reputation by the only course open to an Arab woman, and especially in a time of war. A brave, outraged woman executed a sentence which some male member of her family would certainly have been bound to carry out.

The "curse of Meroz" (5:23) is that bestowed upon the shirker, the cowardly and idle. It is the curse of uselessness.

The Call of Gideon

Judges 6:11-13, 33:40. (Read entire chapter.)

Golden text.—"Blessed is the man whom thou choosest."—Ps. 65:4.

We have before us now the fourth apostasy and servitude of Israel, one which seems to have chiefly affected the four northern-most tribes (v. 35). In preparation for the call and work of Gideon, the sixth judge, "the children of Israel cried" unto Jehovah, and God sent unto them a prophet who turned them back to Jehovah (6:1-10). The now impoverished and overridden Israelites, who had enjoyed prosperity after their former deliverance, had again "done evil" and must first judge their sin and obey the voice of Jehovah before they could receive a message of hope and deliverance through one of Jehovah's prophets.

I. Gideon in prayer, vv. 11-13. That the angel of Jehovah was a manifestation of Jehovah is clear from a careful reading of verse 13. There the word "Lord" used the first time is not capitalized, whereas in the second instance it is capitalized. This angel was a foreshadowing of the incarnation in Jesus of Nazareth. He is clearly identified with Jehovah (See Judges 2:1, 2; Gen. 16:10, 13 R. V.). It was thus that Abraham saw "my day" (John 8:56). "The angel of the Lord" at no time appears after Jesus came, as the revised text shows. The nomadic Midianites brought ruin to Israel as the bitter fruit of its sin. Then was uttered the cry for relief (Ps. 130). The father of Gideon is passed by for he was a worshipper of Baal (v. 25). They who bear the vessels of the Lord, those through whom He works, must have clean hands. God's call to Gideon came to him. (1), While he was alone as he was threshing wheat in the hiding place of a wine-press, for he dare not thresh in the customary open place of a threshing floor; (2), As he was faithfully performing his duty, the one nearest his hand. (See v. 11, Ex. 3:1, 2; Luke 2:8, 9); (3), In a time of great distress and danger. Next Sunday's lesson records the fulfilment of the prophecy.

II. Gideon in Doubt, vv. 13-16. Gideon's thought must have been one of amazement as well as of doubt. His question: "Why then is all this befallen us?" was most natural, and one that men even now are asking when they are in great trouble. All suffering and misery is not to be laid to God's door, though He permit it, but is the result of sin (See Ps. 77:7-9; Isa. 49:1, 2). It is possible that Gideon had not yet recognized his heavenly visitor (cf. v. 21). The name Gideon means "Hewer" or "Treefeller" and indicates, as all eastern names do, something of his personal character or appearance. Hence the significance of verse 14. The Lord, in the person of the angel, looked upon him and said: "Go in this thy might . . . have not I sent thee?" It would seem that the experience related in verse 13 and these words of verse 14 would have assured Gideon who his visitor was and what his task was to be. Verse 15 suggests more of Gideon's estimate of his own prowess than of the humbleness of his family, though it is probably true that the small number of his kindred gave him but a small following. God is with him, hence the gracious message of verse 16.

III. Gideon Assured, vv. 33-35. Gideon's first act on being assured of this heavenly communication was worship (vv. 17-26). His second was to take ten picked men and overthrow the altar of Baal, thereby demonstrating the impotence of Baal. The tribesmen at once light upon him as having performed this act, and demand his death from Joash his father, who seems to have been a caretaker of the idol (v. 25). These men later became Gideon's enthusiastic followers (vv. 34, 35). It was one man against the community, and to further rebuke them he erected an altar to Jehovah (v. 28). No blast from Baal struck him, nor any mark of displeasure hence the suggestiveness of the words of Joash (v. 31). But now there is another raid (v. 33), and God is about to strike a blow on behalf of Israel. Whenever men get right with God, Satan plans a special assault (See 2 Tim. 3:12). A literal rendering of verse 34, is, "The Spirit of the Lord clothed himself with Gideon." Gideon was merely the agent, the instrument through whom and by whom Jehovah is about to do a mighty work. The only satisfactory and sufficient equipment we can have for effective service is the endowment of the Holy Spirit (See Luke 24:49, Acts 1:4, 5, 8). Notice this endowment came upon Gideon after he had by obedient service shown his trustworthiness. Men recognized in his call a note of the authority with which God had entrusted him, and of which his previous acts were a proof.

IV. Gideon's Caution, vv. 36-40. Spurgeon said that he never entered his pulpit to preach without trembling, and Gideon would have been more than human, even after assembling his army, had he been absolutely free from doubts. Gideon proved his heroism in part by his caution; he was afraid of himself, but was sure of God. Caution and courage are never far apart. Once assured of God's leading he was willing to lead three hundred men against the overwhelming force of his enemies. If such a demand were a weakness God dealt with it with marvelous patience and tenderness.

The fleece suggests a "figure of forlorn Israel." The dew, the presence of the Holy Spirit. In the old dispensation the dew rested upon Israel, while others were dry. In this dispensation Israel is dry, while the dew of God rests upon the nations. This episode of the fleece is an assurance to Gideon that he was not mistaken in believing himself to be called of God for this mission of deliverance.

Gideon and the Three Hundred

Judges 7:1-8, 16-23

Golden text.—"Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith Jehovah of hosts."—Zech. 4:6, R. V.

This was the period of Israel's transition from a nomadic to an agricultural life. The record we have is an alternate succession of idolatry and subjugation with a return to Jehovah and to liberty.

I. "Gideon and all the People," vv. 1-8. Rallying about him his clansmen Gideon chose a position at the spring of Harod near Jezreel, his back to Mt. Gilboa and the Midianites to the north next to Mt. Moreh. He thus controlled the fords of the Jordan, and could prevent the enemy from returning to their homes in the desert country. Outwardly the great discrepancy of numbers made the situation look dubious for Israel, but in reality the danger was that the army was too large, that when the victory was gained they might "vaunt themselves." Individuals and churches usually count their strength according to numbers (See 2 Cor. 12:9). If we desire God's strength it must be as we ourselves are weak (Isa. 40:29). When God delivers He leaves no room for boasting (See Eph. 2:8, 9; Rom. 3:27). God can save as well by the few as by the many (1 Samuel 14:6), and frequently uses the weak and despised things to confound the mighty (1 Cor. 1:27, 28), that "no flesh should glory in His presence" (1 Cor. 1:29). These were two tests whereby Gideon was to select his warriors: (1), "Go to, proclaim . . . whosoever is fearful . . . let him return" (v. 3). It is not well to too severely criticize the 22,000 who returned. (2), There is yet another sifting. God gives Gideon the clew (v. 4), viz., to decide by their method of drinking. Those who drank "as a dog lappeth" were those not to be taken off guard, even while drinking. An ox glues his eyes upon the water, and is oblivious to all else; not so a dog. It was also a strange equipment God gave this army. All they took was food and trumpets (v. 8). The all essential things for the followers of Christ are the Word of God for food (1 Pet. 2:2) and the voice of prayer for a trumpet (Num. 10:9, 10; 2 Chron. 13:14; Rev. 12:11).

II. Gideon's Second Assurance, vv. 9-15.

It was absurd, humanly speaking, for 300 men to expect to defeat 135,000. Gideon and Phurah at God's command, entered the valley and drew near the Midianite host. Avoiding the guard, if any, they drew near enough to hear one soldier tell his dream to another. Another Midianite interprets this as nothing else than the "sword of Gideon" (v. 14). Gideon worshiped God, and at once returned to arouse the camp of Israel.

III. The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon, vv. 16-23.

In all probability these men wore their usual weapons as soldiers, and carried food for their use in pursuing the enemy. However, for this midnight attack they needed only three weapons, lamps, pitchers, and trumpets. Each of these have a spiritual suggestion for the Christian. (See Matt. 25:4, Ps. 119:105, also 2 Cor. 4:6, 7 and Ezek. 33:3, 6, 1 Cor. 14:8). Gideon's stratagem caused a lively panic among the Midianites. That Gideon had faith and courage in himself, and in the Word of Jehovah, is suggested in his words: "Look on me and do likewise." We are to look to the "captain of our salvation" (Heb. 13:2), and by our lives of obedience prove the devotion of our life. (See John 15:14, 14:21). As already suggested, there were probably no defenses surrounding the enemy, and in the darkness Gideon and his men easily approached the camp. It is easy to imagine the scene—the midnight hour, the terrific deafening shout, “The sword of the Lord and of Gideon,” the blasts of trumpets, three hundred torches suddenly exposed to view amid the crash of broken earthenware; all of this in the midst of dense darkness, where all had been a dead silence. The Midianites, in the confusion, turned their weapons against each other and fled toward the Jordan, and into the regions beyond toward the desert. Others, perhaps followed by the ten thousand, flew toward Succoth and Penuel. We of this day have our wars, and battles against the wrongs, the principalities and powers of evil, which are around us, and within us. Such battles require the same courage and skill, and consecration of ourselves, as did the wars of those ancient against the enemies that threatened the very existence of the people of God. (See Eph. 6:10-18, I Tim. 6:12). The trumpets were a call to God and a type of prayer; the pitchers (earthen vessels) a type of our frail bodies in which we have the treasure of the gospel truth. (See 2 Cor. 4:6, 7, Matt. 5:16). Our business is to blow long and loud the trumpet and hold forth the light, which is the Word (Phil. 2:16), and being broken ourselves (See John 12:24, Gal. 2:20, R. V.), expect to see the enemies of God overthrown. As every man stood in his appointed place (v. 21), God did the fighting and brought confusion to the enemy (v. 22).

God's work in this world is often done by a few persons who have had a vision of Him, who have grown in character and devotion, and who use the simple weapons of lamps, pitchers and trumpets, even as that small company of one hundred and twenty on the day of Pentecost, filled with the Spirit of God, led the forces which ultimately overthrew invincible Rome. Luther's reformation, the work of the Puritans, Carey in India, the Wesleys in England, and countless other instances are illustrations of this truth, that “one with God is a majority.”

The Birth of Samson

Judges 13:8-16, 24, 25

Golden text.—“Beware, I pray thee, and drink no wine nor strong drink.”—Judges 13:4.

The story of Samson bulks big in the book of Judges and in the interest and imagination of all men ever since his day. Gideon wisely refused to be the king of Israel, but his son Abimelech sought that honor, and forfeited his life. This being the only lesson in a seven years course we suggest, in outline, Samson's entire life.

I. Samson's Parents. God chooses a humble man and woman to bring forth and rear this great deliverer, folk of piety and prayer. The angel's most improbable promise (13:3) is accepted by Manoah and her husband, (13:6, 7). It was reasonable to believe that the one who brought the promise could also tell them how to train and nurture the child. God honored the mother's prayer and she shares her experience with the father (v. 9). As the mother of a Nazarite she must keep herself from all things unclean (v. 14; 2 Cor. 6:17). Even as Mary, the mother of Jesus (Luke 1:38). The experience of the sacrifice, the worship of Manoah and his wife and the fact of Samson's birth completes the record of chapter 13. Manoah could not worship the angel, but could show him hospitality. Verse 18 (R. V.) seems to indicate that this was another pre-manifestation of our Lord Jesus.

II. Samson's Power. Every race has its superman and usually it is one of physical strength. That Samson had no physical evidence of his superior strength is evident from the fact that Delilah asked to know his secret. Nor was his strength in his hair else there was no need that the “Spirit of Jehovah” should come upon him. The secret of his power is indicated in 13:25. The word “move” suggests to play upon a harp, as if Samson's heart was open to God as a harp is open to human touch. “Samson's power was the result of a faith that was open to the infinite storehouse of the divine dynamic.” Such spiritual power is within the reach of every man. Samson, (“sunny”) was full of laughter; not the comic, but the joyous. But Samson came under the spell of an evil woman and all of this true laughter and glad joyousness left his soul. Chapter 13, verse 25, illustrates the anointing of the Holy Spirit for service as perhaps distinguished from the same Spirit for holiness. The laughter heard in the haunts of sin has lost its buoyancy, is forced, is different, is that of men whose hearts are unclean.

III. Samson's Impurity. A woman can make or mar the man with whom she associates. As a Nazarite Samson was dedicated unto God, should not allow a razor to touch his head, was not to touch anything unclean, nor drink intoxicating liquor. This vow was usually for a short period. Samuel and John the Baptizer are other Nazarites recorded in Scripture, and are said to have been such from birth (See 3:14; 16:17; Luke 1:15). Samson's strength burned out when he lay his head in a harlot's lap. Samson left the atmosphere of God's Spirit for that of sin (See Prov. 4:23). His vow helped him greatly during his youth, separating him from heathenism and the destructive vices of youth, but it did not take him long to lose his strength and become the sport of his evil companions. Our false friends are the first to make sport of our weakness. Samson kept trifling with temptation. He was a judge of Israel for twenty years (15:20) yet died a miserable, though heroic, death.

IV. Samson's Imprisonment. We find him after his excesses grinding in the Philistine prison where he perhaps overheard praises being sung to Dagon who had overthrown Jehovah's judge. It is never safe to play with temptation though conscious of our own strength; then is when we are most apt to fall (See I Cor. 10:12). One act and the gay hero is grinding in a prison-house. Year after year Samson plodded his round of enforced toil, a type of the force and power of intemperance and other impure habits. During these years he doubtless put his hand upon his head and said, "my hair is growing again" and it gave him courage to believe that God would yet give him another chance.

Finally, "when their hearts were merry" (16:25) he is brought out to make sport. During one of his resting periods he said to a boy near by, "Let me feel of the two pillars," those upon which the main walls rested and which were within a man's reach. Then it was that he was able to grip the mysterious power of the unseen (16:30). Was Samson a suicide? No! He accepted death as the inevitable consequence of his act of duty. (See Heb. 11:32).

The Temperance Teaching of this lesson is all too plain. It must begin in the home and continue throughout all of life. As we have scattered the fire of information throughout our land we have seen the work of temperance advancing mightily. Samson's exploit with the lion is a temperance sermon in parable (See 14:5, 6; Prov. 20:1). The business of the temperance forces is to slay the lion. We are also to eat "honey out of the rock," and like Samson we can give honey to others. To be strong physically, mentally, or morally is to keep clean.

Ruth Chooses the True God Ruth 1:6-18. (Read entire book.)

Golden text.—"Thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God."—Ruth 1:16.

The book of Ruth is a great love story, full of deep spiritual suggestiveness. Amid the tales of war, deceit, success and failure, this story most beautifully illustrates another side of the life of the Israelites. The author of the book is supposed to have been the same as of Judges, perhaps Samuel.

I. "There was a Famine in the Land." This famine drove Elimelech, his wife Naomi, and their two sons, Mahlon and Chilion, into the land of Moab, even as Abram before them "went down" into Egypt. The immigrant sons married in that land. After the death of her husband and sons Naomi, hearing of returning prosperity in the home-land (1:6), elected to return to her own people. Through this Israelitish alliance Ruth learned of the true God and the record of this book reveals God to be the God of all who turn to Him in sincerity and truth. This suggests the essential missionary character of the Old Testament.

II. "Entreat me not to leave thee." When Naomi thought Orpah and Ruth had gone far enough she sought to dismiss the younger women and expressed to them the tender affection which existed between them. A woman in an eastern land can find rest only in the house of her husband, and these young widows stood but poor chance of securing husbands among those who hated their race. Moreover, we must remember that they were penniless. There seemed to be nothing for them to gain if they proceeded any further (v. 12). Orpah reluctantly and tearfully turned back, but Ruth clave to Naomi (v. 14). This illustrates our experience when we have to decide whether to leave friends, home and everything that we may follow Christ, or, on the other hand, to choose the things which are good and refuse to follow the best (See Matt. 10:37; Luke 14:33). Judged by this world's wisdom Orpah made the better choice, for the chances seemed to be in her favor that among her own kin and tribesmen she would be provided for, yet it was Ruth who gained the "better part." (See Phil. 3:8; Luke 10:42). In going back Orpah forsook Jehovah for the impure Chemosh of the Moabites. All of this occurred in the face of her voluntary profession at the outset, "I will return with thee to thy people," v. 10. In this Orpah was "not far from the Kingdom." (See Mark 12:34).

III. "Whither thou goest I will go." Naomi gave Ruth another opportunity to go back to her people, and this time bases her appeal upon the love of Ruth for Orpah (v. 15). The word Ruth means "friendship," and one of the strongest motives for a loving nature to forsake the Lord is the love for those that are of the world. Read 2 Cor. 5:14, 15; Rom. 10:37. This test caused Ruth to count fully the cost, and no more beautiful nor immortal words can be found in all literature than Ruth's reply (vv. 16, 17). Ruth's words are still sung as best expressing our song of life devotion. They have furnished inspiration for countless lives, sermons and stories, and have been the inspiration for some of the earth's greatest musicians as well. (1) "Entreat me not to leave thee." No difficulties, duties, fascinations nor persecutions are to turn us aside. (2)

The Gospel in the World

Edward A. Marshall, Editor

It is stated that ninety-eight per cent of the Bible sales in Java during 1913 were made to Mohammedans.

The British and Foreign Bible Society states that last year at the Nijni Novgorod fair in Russia, which lasted two months, over 7,000 copies of the Scriptures were sold.

The A. B. C. F. M. (of the Congregational Church) is rejoicing over the financial outcome of the past year, the receipts being the largest in the Board's history, $1,082,218.21.

In Montevideo the Y. M. C. A. has a membership of 650. Buenos Aires has a fine Y. M. C. A. building which cost $200,000. Of the 5,000 students in various schools, of college and university rank, 300 are members of the association.

A Sunday-school, started by a Christian woman some years ago among poor children on the outskirts of St. Petersburg (Petrograd) has grown until it has an average attendance of one thousand during the midwinter season of the year.

The A. B. C. F. M. has nineteen missions, Africa, Turkey, India and Ceylon and China having three each, and Japan, the Philippines, Micronesia, Mexico, Spain, Austria and the Balkans one each. In these nineteen missions there are 106 stations, at which missionaries reside, and 1,457 out-stations. Connected with the missions are 636 missionaries and 5,091 native workers. The Board reports the number of churches as 673, and the number of communicants as 82,559.

Mr. Thomas G. Hitch, a former student of the Moody Bible Institute, with Mrs. Hitch and a native worker, has opened a mission in Payenjung, Kansu, China, to reach the Tibetans, since it is not yet safe to enter Tibet. Payenjung is about one hundred miles from the border of Tibet. The city is made up of Chinese and Mohammedan families, while scattered around outside, in all directions, are about three thousand Tibetan families. Every day many of them are to be seen on the streets of the city, coming in to buy and to do business. Tibetan work is carried on by other missions at Taochow, Choni and Kweite.

The Presbyterian Church is supporting on the foreign field 1,226 missionaries and 5,766 native workers. These are conducting 1,781 schools of various kinds with 64,687 pupils, 3,104 Sunday-schools with 154,139 pupils, 173 hospitals and dispensaries with 305,035 patients, and ten presses issuing 95,105,452 pages last year. The Board states that "all this costs less than one-half the annual budget of Columbia University alone." Yet last year the gifts to the Board failed by more than $292,000 to meet the outlay.

The Bible House of Los Angeles employs, in the distribution of Bibles and portions of Scriptures, ten colporteurs in Spain and eighteen in China. The aim of this society, as stated in its report, "is to give to every person who can read some portion of God's written and living word 'without money and without price.'" This is done by visiting from house to house. The colporteurs spend a short time in each house, seeking to explain to the people God's plan of salvation. On leaving they give them a copy of a Gospel or of a specially prepared book of selected portions of Scripture. If the people desire to purchase copies of a more complete Bible, these are sold to them; or, if they show a real interest in the gospel and are unable to buy the larger portion of the Scriptures they desire to possess, a copy is given to them.

Bishop Frank W. Warne, of the Methodist Church in North India, reports that while at first caste leaders took little notice of the mass movements among the outcastes toward Christianity, these movements are now assuming such proportions that they are becoming alarmed. Some of them recently prepared a document which is a sort of pledge to renounce the Christian faith and to drive out of their village all foreign preachers. This paper the humble believers are asked to sign by affixing a thumb-mark. Under such condition only are they promised freedom from persecution. At a large conference of Indian preachers who care for a community of at least 50,000, the Bishop inquired, "Have you ever known any of our Christians to put his thumb-mark on such a document?" A chorus of voices answered, "No, not one."—"The Missionary Review of the World."

The A. B. C. F. M. in its quarterly "News Bulletin," quotes one of its missionaries in Marash, Turkey: "From one of our best out-station churches 72 out of 94 male members have been called out as soldiers."

The Canary Islands belong to Spain, but are really governed by Roman Catholicism. Pastor Brown, writing of his missionary work there, describes a famous idol in the city of Laguna, which the people call the "Christ of Laguna." They come in thousands from all parts of the country to worship at its shrine. It is dressed like a man, and once a year they change its clothing, and the priest in the presence of the people gives the wooden Christ an annual bath, after which the dirty water is given to the people to drink to wash away their sins. Miracles of healing are also ascribed to the image. Pastor Brown opened a mission in the city in 1912, amidst the most bitter opposition, and placed in the window an open Bible. One day a captain in the Spanish army visited the missionaries and told them that he had lived for forty years without seeing or knowing the Bible until he saw it in the mission window.

PIONEER WORK IN AFRICA

The Nyasaland Mission of Central Africa is much encouraged in the progress being made in opening up the new territory in Portuguese East Africa. As the work has developed, however, there has arisen an active opposition on the part of the Roman Catholics, who have two or three missions in the district, but who heretofore have been asleep, or even worse, "dead and corrupt."

Rev. A. J. Liebenberg, a former Institute student and who has been laboring on the field for the past twelve years, in company with Rev. A. G. Murray, has recently completed a journey of nearly 1,000 miles on foot and the backs of donkeys, visiting the governor general at Tete, and the territory two hundred miles south of the Zambezi River, in the interests of the mission. The journey was full of new and remarkable experiences, including hardships. One day they reached the banks of Lumadzi River with forty-one people in their party, three donkeys and five fowls, but without a drop of water to drink. To their great disappointment the river was dry. They dug holes in the sand and finally found a muddy, coffee-colored liquid, with which they tried to satisfy their thirsts. This continued for two days until they reached the Chinta Mountain, where they found a beautiful, clear mountain stream. Here, too, they found a splendid plantation, belonging to a half-Portuguese man of seventy, on which is grown an abundance of fruit, vegetables and rubber for export. Mr. Liebenberg says that neither he nor Dr. Andrew Murray ever saw anything like it before in Central Africa. "The view is simply beyond description." On this plantation they preached the gospel, and Farnandi, the owner, said: "I never heard a white man yet tell me about God." He heard the gospel for the first time June 14, 1914.

Miss Alma E. Hultman, another Institute student, writes from Mkhoma, the new head-station of the mission, and says that since she left the Institute there has never arisen a shadow of doubt as to God's will for her, and she will ever praise her Master for having called her to this field, to labor with such earnest, God-fearing people. During the month of August 1,178 persons received medical aid. These were ministered to by one doctor and Miss Hultman.

Mr. Liebenberg wrote, the last of August, that he met Miss Hultman after he returned from his journey south of the Zambesi, at a missionary conference at Mkhoma. He says: "She is a great success and everybody is greatly pleased with her. She had several European cases since coming to the mission, and they cannot talk too highly of her. Our council said to me that if there were more such nurses at Moody's, the mission will take ten of them right away."

The mission at present needs one physician, one teacher for the normal school, two trained nurses, and other missionaries. Any-one interested and desiring to know more of the work should correspond with Rev. B. B. Sutcliffe, Secretary-Treasurer of the Council, 153 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

FORGIVEN

"Thy sins are forgiven."—Luke 7:48.

Introduction.—These are very simple words, but they are very blessed and very wonderful words. They are specially wonderful when we consider who spoke them and to whom He spoke them. Picture the scene (Matt. 11:28; Luke 7:36-50). They teach us several very important lessons:

1. That Jesus Christ Has Power to Forgive Sins. Many claim this power. Jesus has it.
2. There is Forgiveness for the Vildest Sinner.
3. This Forgiveness is to be Had Now.
4. All that One Has to Do to Get this Forgiveness is Just to Believe (v. 50).

JEWS AND THE GOSPEL

"To the Jew first, and also to the Greek."—Rom. 1:16.

I. The gospel for the Jew: "Gospel of Christ" (see text). Yet "a stumbling block" (1 Cor. 1:22-24).

II. Same gospel for Jews as for Greeks: (1) Need, "all under sin" (Rom. 3:9). 2. Remedy, "the redemption that is in Christ Jesus" (Rom. 3:23-26). 3. Condition, "faith" (Rom. 3:30).

III. Gospel first to Jews, then to Greeks: (1) The Lord's command, "beginning at Jerusalem" (Luke 24:47). (2) The Apostle's practice, "as his manner was," "to the Jew first" (Acts 13:46; also text). (3) The Christian's duty, "debtor" (Rom. 1:14; cp. 9:5).

IV. Success of gospel among Jews, as well as Greeks, "many thousands believed" (Acts 21:20). Statistics show that at least 224,000 Jewish converts were received into the Christian church during the nineteenth century, among them Neander, Edersheim, and Saphir.

Finally, "He that scattered Israel will gather" . . . "life from the dead" (Jer. 31:10; Ezek. 34:13-14; Rom. 11:15).—John Wilson, in "The Christian."

JOHN 6:68

"Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

In this utterance of Peter we have, in suggestion:

I. A Great Heart-hunger. A longing for eternal life.

1. A natural longing.

Many things make glad our earthly life, but there are some things which make it unsatisfactory, as:

- (a) Its brevity.
- (b) Its incapacity.
- (c) Its inequalities.

2. A universal longing. Following upon the above.

II. A Settled Conviction. We may understand an ellipsis: "To whom (but to Thee) shall we go?"

1. Jesus is uniquely the Teacher on the doctrine of eternal life.

2. Jesus is uniquely the Giver of eternal life (John 4:14; 7:38, 39; 10:10, 28).

3. Jesus is uniquely the Sustainer and Director of this new life.

(a) Each day He sustains and guides the new life (John 15).

(b) One day the Lord Jesus will clothe His own in the glorious garments of immortality (2 Cor. 5:1; 1 Cor. 15).

III. A Solemn Decision.

1. To Thee we will go.

2. Thee we will follow.

3. And we will make glad confession to the blessing received.

—John S. Hall.

THE PUBLIC READING OF THE SCRIPTURES

The five characteristics of good reading are: (a) Accuracy. (b) Distinctness. (c) Intelligence. (d) Sympathy. (e) Reverence.

THE TIMES OF THE GENTILES

The Times of the Gentiles is that long period beginning with the Babylonian captivity of Judah, under Nebuchadnezzar, and to be brought to an end by the destruction of Gentile world-power by the "stone cut out without hands" (Dan. 2: 34, 35, 44), i.e. the coming of the Lord in glory (Rev. 19:11, 21), during which time Jerusalem is politically subject to Gentile rule (Luke 21:24).—"The Scofield Reference Bible."

THE POWER OF INFLUENCE

A Seattle paper tells how a little clock in a jeweler's window in a certain western town stopped one day for half an hour at fifteen minutes to nine. School children, noticing the time, stopped to play; people hurrying to the train, looking at the clock, began to walk leisurely; professional men, after a look at the clock, stopped to chat a minute with one another. And all were half an hour late because one small clock stopped.

Where can we find a better example of the fact of influence? Every life has an influence. What is yours? Does it lead others astray?—"Herald of Holiness."

John Reeve was accosted in the Kensington road by an elderly female with a small bottle of gin in her hand. "Pray, sir, I beg your pardon, is this the way to the workhouse?" John gave her a look of clerical dignity, and, pointing to the bottle, gravely said: "No, ma'am, but that is!"—"Presbyterian Advance."

A MINISTER'S SABBATH EVENING PRAYER

Another Sabbath, Lord, is ended,
A day of work and worship blended;
Small need of praise its hours have won;
Forgive the faulty word, the duty left undone.

I thank Thee, Saviour, if my toil today
Has helped some climber in the upward way;
If mine has been the matchless art,
Of comforting the troubled heart.

Strange that to least of saints Thou givest grace
To preach Thy glorious gospel, and to trace
Thy purpose in men's lives, and say That Thou Thyself wilt be our refuge and our stay.

If to the weary there has come a word
In season, or if any soul has heard
Thy truth with longing for more light,
To such reveal Thyself in love and power tonight.

O may the effort of this Sabbath bless
Some wanderer, and make him closer press
To touch Thy garment hem, till all
His soul shall answer to Thy loving call.

And if tonight there's joy above
Over one penitent whose growing love
For Thee began because I preached Thee crucified, I give Thee double thanks; I'll tell the story while I live.

Since he that winneth souls is wise,
Let me this godlike labor prize
Above all else; and let my chief ambition be To lead the sinful back to Thee.
—Rev. Joseph Brown Turner, in "The Presbyterian."

A TELLING SERMON

A minister called upon a member who had been neglecting the week-night service, and went straight up to the fire-place in the sitting-room, and with the tongs removed a live coal from off the fire, and placed it on the hearth, then watched it while it turned from the red glow of heat to a black mass. The member in question carefully observed the proceedings, and then said: "You need not say a single word, sir: I'll be there on Wednesday night."—Selected.

The man who prays "Thy kingdom come," and does not give some just proportion of his income to promote His kingdom, is a conscious or unconscious hypocrite.

IS RELIGIOUS CONVERSATION A LOST ART?

I am reminded of my experience on a New Haven train a while ago, when a pleasant-faced man took his seat by my side and asked me a question about some work that was being done by dredgers not far from the roadbed. I happened to know what was being done and answered his inquiry. As he showed a disposition to be sociable we continued to chat, and I closed up my newspaper to hear what he had on his mind. It was not long before he touched on a familiar Bible quotation, and began to explain what it had meant to him. While he was talking he drew from his hand-bag a loose-leaf book about four by six inches, which seemed to be filled with Scripture texts and comments, written evidently in his own handwriting. He was thoroughly familiar with its pages, and turned easily from one part of the book to another, and found at once what he wanted.

I was being entertained much more agreeably than I had given him to suspect. Finally I made a remark relative to my church, which caused him to look up suddenly and ask: "Are you a Christian and a church member?" I told him that I had the great honor of being a deacon of the First Baptist Church of my city. He tossed his book into his bag, threw up his hands and laughed loud enough to be heard three seats back. "To think," he said, "that I have been for twenty miles trying to convert a Baptist deacon."

I assured him that it was within the bounds of possibility for so faithful a Christian worker as he was to convert even a deacon. He was anxious to know just how I thought his method of approaching a man would appeal to any one else, and just how he appeared to me, questions that he could not ask one who had no interest in his subject.

He also asked me to guess what he was. I told him he was either a preacher, a Young Men's Christian Association secretary, or a home mission worker. "No," he said, "I am none of them. I am president of a large manufacturing corporation in New York, and as I go about on my business I never lose an opportunity to pass the 'message' along." We exchanged addresses, and when I left the train at the next station I felt that this experience was a rebuke to me, because of my lack of faithfulness in this direction.

Let us not say that religious conversation is a lost art, but rather see to it that we make an honest, earnest effort to bring it up to date.—E. J. D. Malden, in "The Watchman-Examiner."

A "dead work" is a work upon the merit of which one is trusting for salvation.—A. C. Dixon.

Notes and Suggestions

NEW ZEALAND "DRYS" LOSE

A Wellington, New Zealand, dispatch to the London "Times" says complete returns on the New Zealand elections now show 246,000 for continuance of the present licensing laws against 240,000 for national prohibition.

"RALPH CONNOR" GOES TO WAR

Rev. Charles W. Gordon, D.D., author of "Black Rock" and "The Sky Pilot," known and much beloved throughout the United States as "Ralph Connor," has volunteered for service as chaplain with the second contingent from Canada, which will probably join the allies in the great European war. Dr. Gordon is a distinguished Presbyterian preacher.

Y. M. C. A. GYMNASIUMS AND RELIGION

A movement is now being made that in addition to the general moral effect of gymnasium training, there should be religious stress exercised through the physical department, and to that end the Y. M. C. A. physical directors are binding themselves to co-operate with the religious work committee in the development of a practical program of religious appeal. In the examination of persons applying for membership in the gymnasium classes hereafter a conversation on religion must be included.

PROHIBITION IN RUSSIA

The decree of prohibition throughout the Russian Empire was, if possible, a greater surprise to the world than the breaking out of the war. A peasant of the province of Samara, 55 years old, was the human agent that started the movement. He introduced a prohibition measure in the council of his own city, later in the national Duma, and finally secured an interview with the Czar. The outbreak of the war furnished the occasion for the edict. A current periodical says: "In spite of the general depression caused by the war, the paralysis of business, the closing of factories and the interruption of railroad traffic, the people felt no privation. Savings banks showed an increase in deposits over the preceding month and over the corresponding month of the preceding year. At the same time there was a boom in the sale of meats, groceries, clothing, drygoods and house furnishings. The 30,000,000 rubles a day that had been paid for vodka were now being spent for the necessities of life."

MONEY FOR AMUSEMENT, NOT RELIGION

"Girard," in "The Public Ledger," calls attention to the significant fact that the collections or offerings in all the 900 churches of Philadelphia on a recent Sunday did not equal the $137,000 paid to see the Harvard-Yale football game, although the congregations numbered ten times as many as the football spectators.

WILL PALESTINE BECOME INDEPENDENT?

One result of the present war may be the realization of the dream of centuries past—the settling up of Palestine as an independent Jewish State. Both England and Russia will favor the project, says the London "Globe"—England because a small neutral State in the Holy Land will be the best possible protection to Suez and Egypt, Russia, because it will make the way easier for her to settle certain Jewish problems within her own borders. Continuing, the "Globe" says: "The events of the moment show how immediately Egyptian integrity is imperiled by the fact that a right of way through Palestine is open to a hostile power. Palestine must become either British or neutral. There is an obvious political objection to a British occupation. Neutrality is the more desirable solution. But if Palestine is to become neutral, who is to govern it? Directly that question is raised the claim of the Jews forces itself upon our attention. We have to deal with the remarkable fact that a people which lost its country more than 2,000 years ago still cherishes the memory of that loss, and links the hope of recovery with its deepest religious instincts. Here then we have two influences at work for the re-establishment of a Jewish State—the British desire for a neutral Palestine, and the territorial instinct of the Jews themselves. There is a third influence. Russia has pledged herself to the re-establishment of an autonomous Poland under the Czar. But in Poland, as we know it now, there is one obvious obstacle to the development of a Polish State strong in its national consciousness, and that is the presence of a large Jewish element. All who know Russian Poland will agree that a settlement of the Jewish question is essential to the complete success of the great scheme to which Russia is pledged, and will recognize that it is precisely to the Polish Jews that the reconstruction of the Jewish State would make the strongest appeal."—"The Presbyterian Banner."

Book Notices

Any book favorably mentioned below may be secured at price named from the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 826 North La Salle Street, Chicago.

The Problem of Lay Leadership, by Ernest Eugene Elliot.

This little book gives a careful analysis of the manifold problems which arise in an ordinary parish. It also suggests approved methods of utilizing the lay talent, and developing the gift of leadership wherever it is discovered. No work is more profitable for the pastor, and he must be very dull who cannot find in this book many suggestions of great value. It is worthy of careful study by any pastor.

The Larger Vision, by A. R. Lambert.

This is a collection of splendid essays on very interesting topics. The author has done his best, and his best is pretty good, to prove that the world is growing better, and that everyone ought to be an optimist. The weak point in the argument is that his proof is drawn mainly from books of poetry and general literature, rather than from the Book of Books. His treatment of the Bible is always reverent, but is based upon the conception that the mission of the church is to convert the world, rather than to evangelize it.

With the Bible in Brazil, Being the Story of Marvelous Incidents from its Circulation There, by Frederick C. Glass, with a "Foreword," by the Rev. J. Stuart Holden, M. A. Illustrated.

Our readers have read after Mr. Glass in these columns, and know how interesting he is in the portrayal of incidents of his life and work in South America, and will be prepared for something more than ordinary in this brief volume. For fifteen years he has been at work as a colporteur and missionary in Brazil, and as Mr. Holden says in his "Foreword" his adventures and experiences are a story of modern miracles.

The Soul-Winner's Gospel, by Gerrit Snyder, D.D.

The Gospel of John is well described as the soul-winner's gospel, since almost every chapter contains some incident illustrating the various ways in which our Lord dealt with different individuals. The author unfolds the Master's method of approach, and the spiritual teaching of those chapters which bear especially upon the theme of conversion in a very suggestive and helpful way. The writer speaks from a wide experience, and some of the illustrations are very striking.

The Weaving of Glory, by Rev. G. H. Morrison, D.D.

Here is a collection of thirty sermons, which, from several standpoints, are of exceptional excellence. If the author of these sermons ordinarily presents such material we most heartily endorse the words of Sir William Robertson Nicoll: "He is a preacher born and made. He knows how to choose his subjects. He understands what to say and what to leave unsaid. He has a wide knowledge of literature and thereto he adds an evangelical fervor." There may be slight absence of the evangelistic note and entire absence of dispensational truth, but aside from these defects, the sermons are most heartily commended.

Christianity in the Modern World, by the Rev. D. S. Cairns, M.A.

The author enumerates the main causes which have produced what he calls the present anarchy of belief, which has subjected Christianity to the most severe intellectual strain in its history. The chapter headings indicate its scope: The Modern Praeparatio Evangelica; Jesus and the Fatherhood of God; Jesus and the New Life; Jesus and the Kingdom of God; The Kingdom of God and Science; Christianity in the Modern World. The book is valuable to any careful student, but a word of caution is necessary concerning the author's teaching as to the fatherhood of God, and his doubt as to the authenticity and authorship of the fourth Gospel.

The Grammar of the Greek New Testament in the Light of Historical Research, by Rev. A. T. Robertson, M.A., D.D., LL. D.

A great Greek scholar is amongst us, as all now must admit since Germany, Austria, Holland and Great Britain unite with America in acclaiming him. The Southern Baptist Theological Seminary which has always been one of the largest, soundest and best in the country, now steps into the front rank, indeed, and will be distinguished the world over for at least a generation, because of this masterpiece by one of its professors. Astonishing as it may seem, it displaces Winer's work, and is acknowledged by those among the most competent to judge in many lands, as superior to anything that has gone before and the greatest work of its kind in existence. Of course this is to be said in explanation, that its able and painstaking author has had the advantage of the light of historical research during the past half-century or more, and yet other Greek scholars have had the same advantage, but have failed to utilize it for the benefit of the whole church.

If it were a book simply for scholars of the class-room, our enthusiasm would be qualified to that extent, but even an elementary acquaintance with the Greek tongue will find it of the richest value; while our endorsement of it is rendered still more cordial by the fact that Dr. Robertson is a conservative of the best school, and handles the holy book "not as the word of men, but as it is in truth, the Word of God."

The Triumphant Ministry, by "Timothy Kilbourn."

The importance of this book is altogether out of proportion to its size. Nothing so valuable for young men considering the Christian ministry has appeared equal to it since "The Ministry of the Word," by William M. Taylor, and "Yale Lectures," by Bishop Simpson. The introduction is by Prof. Charles R. Erdman, of Princeton Theological Seminary. It is inspirational, doctrinally sound, and up-to-date in every respect.

It is a series of five letters, the subjects being: The call, the equipment, the tax, the fellowship, the goal. No apology is offered for the following somewhat lengthy quotation:

"The great desideratum in all the social service, teaching and movements carried on by the Church and Christian workers, today, seems to me just this. They do not express the determination to know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified. I have followed the efforts of several men to meet the 'down-town proposition' in the cities with institutional methods of work; and I have followed the present-day movements of 'the church and country life' with sympathy and hope; but again and again I am yearning for something that seems to be left out. There is an aroma of spices and sweet perfume belonging to the Spirit's breath that does not blow on my face. I hear the accent, strong and distinct, on soil, and crops, and domestic science, and athletic clubs, and educational classes, and mothers' clubs, and lecture forums, and so forth and so on, and I can see that more or less interest is excited for a time in every place; but I miss the light and warmth and heating beams of the Sun. And, somehow or other, I don't catch sight of the Captain of our salvation as much as I should like to. I see some stalwart men who wear the uniforms and are called by the names appropriate to his aides, but too frequently they seem to be in command alone."

Let every young man preparing to enter the ministry, or entering it, get this little book.

We have received from Messrs. Morgan and Scott, London, "Choice Sayings," being notes of expositions of the Scriptures revised by Robert C. Chapman, and also a booklet entitled "The Secret of Adoration," by Andrew Murray, D.D.

The greater you want, the greater God's goodness in supplying them. The greater your enemies the greater the display of God's power in subduing them. The greater your unworthiness, the greater His grace in saving you. The greater your trials, the greater the comforts of His Spirit, and the greater the joy in which they shall end.—"The Christian."

We have just begun to give the invitation to the unsaved and in five meetings 293 have decided for Christ."

"We are having a good meeting here at Athens, Pa., and were crowded out of the church at the end of the first week. We now occupy the skating rink, which will accommodate about fifteen hundred people. Gave the first invitation last night, and thirty people publicly espoused the cause of Christ. Carl E. Burch is with me again for the ninth season, and is doing excellent work with the music. He has a chorus here of nearly two hundred voices."—Robert L. Jones.

Willett S. Colegrove and party closed campaigns at Fredericksburg, Ia., and Kenosha, Wis. The first meetings continued three and one-half weeks, and it was the general feeling that never in the history of Fredericksburg was there so great a revival, there being 150 forward in the meetings. The meetings at Kenosha also took on interest from night to night. At the men's meeting on Sunday afternoon, 276 went forward. The evangelists next went to Lake View, Mich. Mr. Colegrove was assisted by O. L. Cotterell.

H. D. Kennedy writes from Farmland, Ind.: "We are in the midst of a glorious revival here. Seldom have we seen such a manifestation of God's power. Last week we never got away from the church any night until after 11 o'clock and last night (Sunday) it was 12:30 before we left the church. Every night seekers are on their knees, all over the building, crying for mercy, and the most of the personal work is done by the converts. The older Christians simply hang around and won't leave the church. All the churches of the town are in with us."

A good report comes from Mahanoy City, Pa., of Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings in November. He was assisted by Prof. J. J. Lowe. The "Mahanoy City Record" says: "After five weeks of his gospel presentation in this city, the people feel and maintain that a higher plane of Christian living has been attained, that Mahanoy City has been purged as never before, and that seeds have been sown which will accrue with incalculable harmony in the coming years. One result remains indisputable—630 souls have professed conversion."

E. L. Bowyer is now Assistant District Superintendent of the Christian and Missionary Alliance, southern district, at Houston, Tex. In writing to us, Dec. 9, he mentions the good work done by the Star of Hope Mission in Houston, under the management of Rev. S. J. T. Williams. The mission is well equipped to care for the "down and outs," and the gospel of the grace of God rings out clearly from the platform every night in the year, and the meetings are fruitful in the salvation of souls. The mission is run under the auspices of the Baptist denomination, but has the support of all denominations.

As a result of the evangelistic campaign conducted in Columbia, Pa., for six weeks by the Nicholson-Hemminger party, a spiritual and moral wave has swept over the community and adjacent towns that promises to build up the churches and put a blanket on worldly pleasures. There were nearly 1,000 professed conversions. A choir of 400 led the singing. Their next meeting was in the Moody Church, Chicago, where they continued from Nov. 22 until Dec. 20. The meetings took a strong hold on the young people of the church, who assisted in the choir and in personal work. The evangelist did not spare church members, and warned them not to trust in church membership for salvation and to keep themselves clean from all worldly amusements that hinder the work of the gospel. Large numbers of the church members and some Moody Bible Institute students reconsecrated themselves to the Lord.

FROM THE OLD YEAR INTO THE NEW

Rev. H. B. Hartzler

I can not know, and none can tell,
What coming days may bring to me;
But this—thank God!—I know full well,
That "as my day, my strength shall be."

This is enough! In this I rest;
It wraps me round and holds me close,
Like helpless babe on mother's breast,
In sweet content and calm repose.

For this I thank thee, O my God,
No matter what may come to me—
The soft caress, or chastening rod—
I know it shall be well with me.

I never made a sacrifice. We ought not to talk of "sacrifice" when we remember the great sacrifice which He made who left His Father's throne on high to give Himself for us.—Livingstone.

FACULTY ENGAGEMENTS

Dr. Gray was a speaker at the Bible Conference in Columbus, O., December 6-8, and preached in the Englewood Baptist Church, Sunday, December 13.

Dr. Evans was teacher of the Union Bible Class in Pittsburgh, December 4 and 11. Dr. Fitzwater spent a week at Greensburg, Pa., where he delivered a series of lectures on the books of Daniel and Matthew. Mr. Sellers spoke in the Y. M. C. A. and City Rescue Mission in Milwaukee, Wis., Sunday, December 20.

Mr. Marshall has been suffering with a severe attack of pneumonia. His many friends are pleased to know that he is steadily recovering.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT

The regular workers were engaged in December as follows: Mrs. Frances C. Allison with the Bob Jones party in Martins Ferry, O.; George E. Guille, Bible classes in Tyrone, Pa.; C. P. Meeker, Dousman, Wis.; John C. Page, in the Los Angeles Bible Institute; Miss Angy Manning Taylor hopes to return to work after January 1.

CORRESPONDENCE DEPARTMENT

From September 1 to December 1, 1915, 50 students finished courses by correspondence and their names appeared on the program at the closing exercises of the Institute, December 17.

In Pittsburgh, Pa., there are nearly 100 correspondence students, the majority of them being in the Synthetic Bible Study Course.

There are two classes of Scofield Bible correspondence students in Muskogee, Okla. One of these is taught in the Presbyterian church by Mrs. Gamble and the other in the Baptist church by Mrs. Graham. The classes together number about 85 members.

J. H. Ralston, Secretary of the Correspondence Department, visited Columbus, O., and addressed an audience of nearly 300, chiefly men, in the Y. W. C. A. building on the evening of December 7, on the importance of knowing the Bible. This meeting was arranged for by Miss Mary Adelaide Grace, the rector of the religious life department of the Y. W. C. A., of that city who teaches a large class of correspondence students taking the Scofield course. The class, numbering about 80, is in three divisions, meeting at different hours.

THANKSGIVING DAY AT THE INSTITUTE

"Let everything that hath breath praise the Lord." This was the spirit that characterized the festivities of Thanksgiving Day at the Institute. At one o'clock an excellent dinner was served with an abundance of good things that go to make up an "old-fashioned Thanksgiving" dinner. Fifty-five tables were spread, with plates laid for over seven hundred.

Immediately following the dinner a program was rendered, Dr. James M. Gray, Dean of the Institute, officiating as toastmaster. Toasts were given by Miss Annie S. Dran and Mr. Albert Johnson. The male quartette, Messrs. Simonds, McKay, Young and Reep, gave a selection composed by the first graduate of the Music Course of the Institute. Several selections were rendered by the ladies' quartette, the Misses James, Burdon, Gunn and Williford. Telegrams from former students and friends of the Institute, bearing greetings to the faculty and student body were read. The afternoon was given up to various entertainments, followed by an informal musicale given in the lecture room. Those taking part were: Mr. and Mrs. Fellers, Messrs. Kimball and Arlander, the Misses Burdon, McElvaine, Gunn and the male quartette. This portion of the program was brought to a close with a prayer of thanksgiving by the Rev. L. W. Gosnell.

Mr. Edward A. Marshall gave an illustrated lecture on educational cartoons for 1914, which was one of the outstanding features of the day. Luncheon was served in the dining room at 6:30 o'clock, followed by a Victrola concert in Massey Chapel, in charge of Prof. Homer A. Hammontree.

The presence of the Holy Spirit was manifest throughout the day, the exercises being brought to a close by a fervent service of praise and prayer.

GRADUATING EXERCISES

The fall term graduation exercises consisted of the following program:

The oral examination of the expectant graduates took place before the Faculty on Thursday, December 28, 30. Thursday, December 17, 11:00 A. M. class exercises were held in the Moody Church, the exercises not being held in the evening because of revival meetings in the Moody Church.

Shearer; representing the Music Department, Elmer E. Rupp. The words of the class song were written by Henry K. Bentley and the music by Henry Clarke. Wesley P. Pearce was class artist and journalist. The address was given by Dr. Evans and the diplomas were presented by Dr. Gray in the absence of the President and Vice-president.

A reception was given by the Faculty to the graduating class in the Women's Building, and at one o'clock dinner was served. After dinner Dr. Gray spoke on the English course, to which Miss Thomas replied, and then Prof. Trowbridge presented Dr. Evans with a beautiful traveling outfit on behalf of the members of the Institute Council. The class picture was presented by Miss Bessie Williford to the Faculty, Dr. Gray giving suitable response.

Of the class, seventeen supported themselves through the two years. Eleven will pursue further studies. Sixteen will enter active Christian work. Five will remain in the Institute. Six are student volunteers. Eleven States and seven foreign countries were represented in the class membership.

RESIGNATION OF DR. EVANS

Dr. William Evans resigned his position as Director of the Bible Course in November, in order to take up Bible conference work with the Rev. S. C. Dickey. A farewell reception was given him in connection with that to the graduates at a dinner on Thursday, December 17. He was presented with a beautiful traveling outfit by the members of the Institute Council, the presentation speech being made by Prof. Trowbridge as follows:

"I come before you today in the role of a story-teller. My story is not woven out of the filmy fabric of fiction. It is one that throbs with life, and is founded upon incidents that touch upon the early history of the Institute and that come down to the present.

"Something over two decades ago there entered the Institute as a student, a young Englishman from Liverpool, whose name strongly suggests that he came from the region of the Cambrian Hills. This student, like many of us when we first came here, was green. He was green with peculiar tint of greenness which says to the world, 'Made in England.' But he had 'stuff' in him. He worked, he dug, he was daunted by nothing. He refused to be conquered by adverse circumstances. He knew what it was to work in the laundry, what it was to scrub, and many an hour has he spent on the floors of the old building across the way, finding in it, as many another has done, not only a means of livelihood, but also a means of grace. He knew what it was to go hungry, and in the days when the dining-room system of the Institute approached that of the modern cafeteria, in that a ticket was punched for a nickel every time a student ate a piece of pie or absorbed a dish of oatmeal, this student would often forego meat and other supposed dietetic necessities because of financial necessity. And he would, in this way, also save money for the purchase of articles upon which he had set his heart—articles often unselfishly given to another. And it is at this point in my story that you will observe a place where a fine paragraph might be introduced regarding the aforesaid romance (applause).

"This student persisted through thick and thin—over ups and downs, and in 1892 graduated with honor, receiving the first diploma ever given by the Institute. Then followed ten years of pastoral work and further school and seminary training at the end of which time he was called back to the Institute as Associate Teacher of the Bible, later becoming Director of the Bible Course. It is thus that we have known him, in the Lecture Hall, in the council chamber, in the prayer room, and in the social circle. And in every situation we have known him to stand true to God, true to the Word, true to the Institute, and true to his own convictions.

(Addressing Dr. Evans)

"Dr. Evans: We are sad to see you go from Institute life and work. The announcement of your resignation came to us as a shock. We do not want to say 'Good-bye'—we would prefer to say 'Au revoir,' for we expect you to come back to see us occasionally. I speak officially for the Council, and I am sure I voice the sentiment of the student body, when I say that wherever you go in the new work to which you are called, the interest and sympathy of all Institute people will follow you.

We, as a Council, want to present you with something that will be a constant, tangible reminder of the friends you leave behind. You are to visit many distant places in your new work, and here is a case filled with articles of convenience for your personal use in your travels. And we want them to speak to you, from day to day, of the fact that, wherever you go, our love, and our prayers are with you."

To this address Dr. Evans appropriately responded in accepting the gift of the Council.

THE WINTER TERM SCHEDULE

The resignation of Dr. Evans will not change the winter schedule in any way except as to teachers. Hereafter "Personal Work" will be correlated with the Practical Work Course and taught by Mr. Ketchum, its Director, who will also render assistance at least during the winter term, in Homiletics, as he occupied that chair in the Bible Teachers Training School, New York. Prof. Fitzwater will temporarily be responsible for Bible Analysis to the pleasure of the students who have sat under him in his other classes, and Dr. Gray will teach Bible Doctrine, Mr. Gosnell relieving him for the time being of Biblical Criticism and Christian Evidences. In the meantime the Institute is in correspondence with well-known teachers in different parts of the country and Great Britain, one or two of whom are likely to be added to the Faculty within a brief period.

THE MOODY MEN AT XENIA SEMINARY

The following pleasant letter was received by the dean last month:

Dear Dr. Gray:

We were made very glad by the announcement that you were to be with us the first of our next semester. We are praying that God will greatly bless the meetings to all of us and use you mightily. The other men of the Seminary are also looking forward to your coming with expectancy. With precious memories of our life at Moody and hoping that God is continuing to bless the Institute, we are,

Very sincerely,

"The Moody Men at Xenia."

REUNION AT ADRIAN, MICH.

At the convention of the Michigan State Sunday-school Association, Adrian, Mich., November 13, the following former students and friends of the Institute met in a characteristic reunion.

With the exception of E. O. Sellers, director of Evening Classes, Mr. E. K. Warren and his son Paul, who were from Chicago, the following were all from the State of Michigan: George H. Alexander, '03; Corseville; C. B. Hawkins, '09, Thompsonville; Oscar R. Stilson, '97, Adrian College; F. W. "But we, brethren, being taken from you for a short time in presence, not in heart, endeavored the more abundantly to see your face with great desire."—1 Thessalonians 2:17.

Through a mistake, the above message was published in our last issue as having been sent in by the reunion in Wisconsin.

George G. Reeves, student, has been holding meetings in and around Crystal, Mich., since September. Mrs. Reeves assisted as soloist and accompanist.

Ernest C. Cowden has temporarily given up his studies at the Institute on account of his health, and is going to take charge of the Presbyterian church at Montpelier, Ida.

W. L. Staub, '90, is pastor of the Westminster church, Duluth, Minn., which recently celebrated its twenty-fifth anniversary by completing improvements to its building at a cost of $2,500.

Norman Davis, '07, who graduated with honors at McMasters University, Toronto, Canada, has sailed for British East Africa, where he expects to take up work as a missionary.

The Methodist Conference at Lafayette, Ind., has given Harry J. Hoover, '12, an appointment, a circuit of three churches considered one of the most difficult fields of the territory.

Thomas G. Hitch, '04, and wife are missionaries of the Tibetan Mission, Payenjung, Kansu Province, China. Their forwarding Secretary is Mr. H. E. Kimpton, U. S. P. O. Box 742, Shanghai, China.

E. B. Carey, '11, formerly pastor of the Congregational church, Miller, Ind., was just nicely settled in his new field at Hunters, Wash., when he was burned out, losing everything except the clothes he was wearing. He says in a letter: "It is very hard, but we are not discouraged. (Phil. 4:13)."

Wm. Matthew Holderby, '05, formerly pastor of the Northern Liberties Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, and the South Side Church of Pittsburgh, has undertaken evangelistic work in the San Joaquin Valley in California. The party are closing work in Coalinga, Calif., Dec. 23 and will be in union services at Taft, Cal., Dec. 27-Jan. 24.

Miss Dora Lee Cain, '06, spent six weeks in Coatesville, Pa., conducting Bible readings. In a letter to Dr. Gray, the Rev. Benjamin C. Needham, of that place, speaks of her work in the following words: "I want to congratulate you for turning out such good students. Miss Dora Cain was here in Coatesville for six weeks conducting Bible readings with grand results. Her sweet loving way draws large crowds of people to hear her. She is also a good personal worker."

Norman H. Camp, '00, was received into the ministry of the Presbyterian church and ordained on the evening of Dec. 20, 1914, in Edgewater Presbyterian Church of Chicago. Rev. A. S. C. Clarke, D.D., Rev. Louis P. Cain, and Rev. Norman B. Barr took part in the service. Mr. Camp has been recently engaged in evangelistic work in Tennessee and South Carolina, and expects to continue Bible teaching and evangelistic work, beginning the new year with an evangelistic meeting in Toronto, Canada.

H. S. Kimura, '99, noted Japanese evangelist, who has conducted hundreds of meetings and led thousands of men and women to Christ, including his father, a wine merchant, and all his immediate family, came to this country to study the work of Rev. W. A. Sunday. The following is his testimony concerning him: "Billy Sunday is one of the most wonderful men of God I have ever seen. He made me weep seven times in one meeting in Denver. I came from Tokio, Japan, just to hear and talk with him."

J. Charlton Steen, a representative of the Institute in Great Britain, this fall gave Bible readings in the afternoons, and gospel addresses in the evenings in Sterling, Scotland, the mission closing October 27. He was a speaker at the weekly meeting of the Men's Own Brotherhood on Sabbath afternoon. He also did some work at Govan (Glasgow) Nov. 1-6. At each of these places Mr. Steen first spoke of The Moody Bible Institute and its work of preparing men and women for Christian service.

The Bible Training Institute of Sodertalje, Sweden, has just entered on its fifth year of service. Joh Rinman, principal, visited the Institute here in Chicago in 1900, for about ten days. In building up his school he used this Institute very largely as his model.

Stockett, Mont., Nov. 26, 1914.

Alexander Muirden, '11, writes from Stockett, Mont: "I have often been on the point of writing to the friends at the dear old Institute, but my wife and I are kept so busy in this large field of labor, that there are many things left undone, so far as writing friends is concerned. Many and many a time we thank God for the training at the Institute, and with the help of God we try to pass it on to those with whom we come in contact. I have been here fifteen months, and the most serious charge that has been made against me to the District Superintendent was made by one of the leading men in town: 'Your preacher is too religious, he is always trying to get people converted.'

"We have a large field here, about 400 square miles. There are two coal-mining camps, Stockett and Sand Coulee, with a population of 3,400 people, chiefly Slavs and Finns. I am the only Protestant minister in this community, having four country points. On the first Sunday of each month, I drive out to the mountains, a round trip of fifty-five miles and preach three times. The other Sundays I travel thirty miles and preach also three times. The work in the country is very encouraging, but in the coal camps we have to lean heavily on the Lord, and He never fails us. The people seem to know nothing except dancing and drinking. We are foreign missionaries in a home mission field.

"We always look forward to the 'Christian Worker's Magazine' coming, both for the spiritual uplift and also the movements of the Institute family. 'God bless the school that D. L. Moody founded.'"

Carrie Lent Few, '14, sailed December 12, for Korea. She will spend the winter at Chai Ryang, studying the language under a native teacher. Next summer it will be necessary for her to take an eight-day journey in a chair, carried by coolies, in order to reach her station, Kang Kai, the most northerly station of the Presbyterian Board, under which she goes out. Her work will be principally of an evangelistic nature among women and girls. Her permanent address will be Kang Kai, Chosen, Japan.

BORN

To Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wright, '93, Sevier-ville, Tenn., Sept. 24, 1914, a daughter, Rosa Eltha.

DIED

Deacon James Porter, aged father of Charlotte A. Porter, '93, (who was at one time assistant superintendent of the Women's department), died at his home in Hatfield, Mass. He had been failing in health for some time, but had been confined to bed only a few days. He was a man of great activity for one of his age and especially prominent in the religious work of his town. The members of the faculty and student body who knew Miss Porter sympathize with her in her deep sorrow.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL LESSONS

"Whither thou goest." Towards every ideal, service, field of endeavor, warfare, or experience. (3), "Where thou lodgest I will lodge." Where His people are in the home, in service, intercourse, social life, here and hereafter, I will abide in Christ. (4) "Thy people shall be my people." One in love, sympathy and purpose in Christ. (5) "Where thou diest I will die." Let me die the death of the righteous. (6) "There will I be buried." In the same hope of the resurrection, of immortality death being swallowed up in victory. (See Gal. 3:20; Eph. 2:6; I Cor. 15:55). Ruth did not ask for complete data from Naomi before she accompanied her to the home-land.

IV. The Sequel. At Bethlehem Ruth had no other thought than to cling to her mother-in-law, even in poverty and a life of lowly service. She did her menial duties faithfully, and displayed more of the real heroism of faith than that shown in the daring exploits recorded in the other history (Judges) of her day. Ruth in a humble hut with Naomi was better off and more satisfied than to have lived in the finest palace in Moab. (See Phil. 1:23). Through all of this love and devotion Ruth was being fitted for a larger sphere of influence in which she was enabled to give to Naomi the happiest life possible to her. Not once is Ruth's beauty suggested, but she had the more attractive attributes of goodness, kindness, and courtesy. Unconsciously she attracted the rich land owner Boaz, who was a true gentleman, and through her marriage to him became, through David, an ancestress of our Lord Jesus. Rahab the harlot, and Ruth the converted idolatress, are each made a part of this ancestry. (See Matt. 1:5, R. V.).

This lesson is a suggestive one for Decision Day in our Sunday-schools. Give all a chance to follow and to choose even as Ruth did.

CIRCULATE TRACTS

There is great good accomplished often by circulating tracts. This is a means of Christian service too little employed these busy days. Yet it is a means of service suited pre-eminently to busy men in busy times, when they feel they have not time to stop often and talk to men about their souls. Many men and women have been saved through tracts handed out by earnest souls with a prayer for the divine blessing upon the printed page. Christian men and women should carry a package of tracts in their pocket constantly, and make a habit of handing them out to people. There are many striking instances of remarkable results from this habit.

Dr. Coke in 1785 gave a tract to a family in Virginia named Cowles. The family numbered fourteen, and that tract was the instrumentality used in the conversion of the family. A man saw the tract, "Repent, or Perish," floating in the Frazer River. He took it out, dried it, read it, and by it was converted to God.

A man refused to come to meeting, but consented to take a tract from the preacher. A few weeks later he stood up in the meeting and confessed that the tract led him to Jesus. A soldier found in his hospital bed the tract "Will you go?" and finally wrote on it, "By the grace of God I will go."

Passing through Switzerland, a tract distributor gave a tract to a man, in a town notorious for gambling. On his return, some days later, the man said: "I thank you for saving my soul and body." He was about to commit suicide on account of losses in gambling.

The dailies recently recorded the experience of a forger in Philadelphia. Sitting in a public square, meditating suicide, he was handed a leaflet with the words on it, "Come now, let us reason together," etc. He read it, put up his razor, went to the police station, and gave himself up.

Instances of this sort could be multiplied, for these little printed missives have been known to prevent crimes, to save lives, to heal the broken-hearted, and to bring the despairing one to Jesus. We never know, nor can we realize the good we are doing in distributing tracts.—"Herald of Holiness."

Nearly twenty of the men students of the Moody Bible Institute took out Colportage books and wall mottoes to sell during the present between-terms vacation.

THE TEST OF A BOOK

A good book, whatever its nature may be, is one that leaves you farther on than when you took it up. This is a good test—that it shall be known by its fruits in our thinking and living—by what it does for us and in us.—Anna Warner, in "C. E. World."

AND SO OTHERS TESTIFY

Carbondale, Kan., Dec. 6, 1914.

I wish to say that I could not do without these Moody Colportage Library books in my work, for I see so many people that are in need of wholesome literature that I feel that it is as good a gospel as I could preach to put good literature in their hands at a small price, and I do it whether they can pay for it or not.

D. B. Bulkley, Evangelist.

A DEVOTED USER OF TRACTS

Rev. Washington Frothingham, of Fonda, N. Y., known in the literary world as "The Hermit of New York," died October 20th, at the age of 92 years. For a half century he was a regular contributor to the "Herald," "Tribune," "Times," "Post," and "Harper's Monthly." Mr. Frothingham was obliged for many years to make long journeys weekly on the New York Central Railroad, and it occurred to him that he might do good by distributing tracts among his fellow passengers. He began the work, and continued it with great blessing to many souls. The tracts opened the way for personal conversation on the claims of the gospel, and scores were converted and many believers strengthened in the things of the kingdom. In his later years he regarded his tract work as the most profitable of his ministry, although he was a regular pastor for nearly sixty years. O, that more of the Master's followers would see this opportunity to scatter the truth! Those with no gift of song or speech can find here their open door for service; they need be no longer idlers in the vineyard. Here is a work for all.

Only a slip of paper

Passed from your hand with prayer,

Telling the world's greatest story,

Warning for heaven to prepare;

Haste then to hand out the message,

Delay not or count not the cost,

But scatter the news of salvation,

Ere souls be eternally lost.

—R. H. Washburne, in "The Evangelical."

OUR COLPORTERS*

How beautiful the feet that bear
"The burden of the Lord";
The burden of His cross and care,
The burden of His Word.

God gives them strength; God holds them up;
God bears the heavier end
Of every cross, and with love's cup
Is near, the faint one's Friend.

Though often weary and bowed down,
Beneath the loads they bear,
God has prepared a glory-crown
For faithful ones to wear.

Toil on! the precious pack ye bring
Is rich with wisdom's gold;
Ye carry gem-truths of the King,
A store of wealth untold.

Thank God, the load of sin is gone,
That once the heart bowed low;
Christ bore that heaviest load alone,
That ye His rest might know.

It is for Him ye bear today,
The treasures of His truth;
Enriching others on life's way,
With life-renewing youth.

Toil on, ye truly pilgrim band,
Through village, city, field;
Sow as ye go with liberal hand,
And great shall be the yield.

*By Mr. William Luff, and used as a hymn at an annual meeting of the Christian Colportage Association of England.—"With Tongue and Pen."

A SUGGESTION AND WHAT IT BROUGHT ABOUT

Odessa, Del.

It may interest you to know what has been done with a few of the Colportage Library books in this locality. Last summer, having some of these books with me, I suggested to a few of my friends that if they would see that the books were kept moving I would furnish some of them without cost. There was some response, but the way a certain young lady has done has given me much delight. She works in a factory in a nearby town, and has formed a kind of circulating library, keeping account of the books she has, and a correct record of those who take them from her, so that she will not give the same book twice to one person. The order I herewith send is to increase that supply so well read. Already one conversion can be shown to have been a part result of this, and hearts have been made more accessible.

C. S. G.

THE WORKERS AND THE WORK

Rev. A. H. Leisz, "tried and true," is working in western Ohio.

Karl B. Smith has sent in some good orders from Cheshire county, N. H.

George R. Allison is doing faithful colportage work in and around Des Moines. Best of all, he is out for souls.

Edward J. Berquist, a rescue mission superintendent, of New Castle, Pa., has started a man in Colportage work. Good!

A. Hilliard will accompany the Nicholson-Hemminger evangelistic party at several Pennsylvania points, and do "book missionary" work in the towns visited.

Miss F. T. Reilly, of Denver, is placing the Colportage Library books in considerable quantities, being aided by the interest aroused by the recent Sunday meetings.

A SURE THING
"BE SURE YOUR SIN WILL FIND YOU OUT."

-NUM. 32:23

This cut shows in exact size one side or "face" of a type of tract which is admirably adapted for gospel work out of doors, and for train or street car use. The message is short, decisive and Scriptural—designed to "catch the eye." Many men have been set to thinking by such a pointed declaration presented tactfully.

OUTLINE STUDY OF THE BIBLE

With Illustrative Charts—By William Evans, D. D.

A proper study of the Bible should consist at least of a bird's-eye view of the whole; a general survey of the two Testaments in their relation one to the other; an intelligent grouping of the contents of each of the Testaments; the careful study of each individual book; and a clear understanding of the great topics or themes of the Book. "Outline Study of the Bible" aids one in accomplishing all this, particularly in a ready comprehension of the leading or principal contents. (18 mo. cloth, 115 pages, 50c net; postage extra 6c)

A Man Who Let His Light Shine

To D. L. MOODY

God sends His prophets still,
And such was he, whose burning word
The hearts of men and women stirred
To do his Father's will.

Untaught in scholar's lore,
Thou call'dst him from the busy mart,
And into his receptive heart
Didst Thine own wisdom pour.

He gave his mind to Thee,
He thought Thy thoughts at Thy command;
Or whence, for Thee, that purpose grand
That traversed land and sea?

He gave his hand to Thee.
And through that hand was gladly poured
From sources, where Thou kept it stored,
Thy wealth, so great and free.

He gave his all to Thee,
From then his soul was fully bent
On what, through love, is always meant For God's true devotee.

—Author Unknown.

D. L. Moody said

"Bilhorn is the only man that writes, plays and sings his own music and makes and plays his own organs."

No one knew better than Mr. Moody the need for spiritual songs. Mr. Bilhorn's great success came through the introduction of songs that reach deep into the hearts of the people such as "Sweet Peace" and "I Will Sing the Wondrous Story."

Voices of Victory

is Mr. Bilhorn's latest selection of the choicest hymns. The use of this song-book for church services, Sunday Schools, Revival Meetings, etc., quickens the hearts and puts new life into the church work.

Children love to sing them and they gladden the hearts of the older folks. Songs arranged for all kinds of meetings. Songs of "War or Peace," "Happiness," "Soul-Winning," "Joy," "Love," "Songs for the Children," "Songs of Heaven," "333," every one a gem.

 The Towner Organ has stood the "acid test" of usage, climate, and time for years. It is safe to get "The Towner."

The D. B. Towner Folding Organ

HE tone of the Towner Organ is simply marvelous. It is not surpassed in any make of reed instrument and is only equaled by the deep, rich, mellow and sonorous tones of the pipe organ.

The reeds are a special scale, made of the finest pipe and bell metal obtainable. They are guaranteed not to rust or corrode, and will stand in tune indefinitely.

The case is made of laminated, or three ply, basswood, which obviates all danger of splitting, warping, swelling or shrinking. It is treated with a waterproof coating inside and out, and covered with beautiful walrus leatherette, also waterproof, and handsomely embossed in suitable designs, according to style selected. The Towner Organ, it may be said with confidence, gives universal satisfaction under the exacting conditions of tropical countries.

[See specifications and prices below.]

The case is very rigid and firm when in use, being supported by automatic spring-stays and resting upon extra heavy rubber feet. The case covered with leatherette is easily cleaned with a piece of cheese cloth dampened in coconut oil, procurable at any drug store. The leatherette covering does not scratch, mar or show the effects of travel in conveyance, as a varnished or polished surface does, and in appearance is more like a large sized camera or "grip."

The edge and corners are protected with nickel and oxidized ornaments. It folds into an exceedingly small compass (see dimensions below), and when unfolded and in position to play, is of suitable and convenient height without forcing the operator to stoop and cramp his chest and lungs, which necessity heretofore has been a principal objection on the part of those who are required to sing, and play a "baby" organ.

SOMETHING NEW! Automatic Combination Case Swell. (See illustration below.) Special attention is called to this valuable improvement, which serves two important purposes: first, by opening same in connection with the knee swell the volume of tone is greatly increased; second, for the more convenient extraction of a reed for any reason. (This device is supplied on 4 octave organ only at present.)

Points of Superiority of the Towner Organ

Easy action. Metal foot guard. Superior swell effect. Pipe tone quality. Riveted pedals. Continuous music desk. Compactness when folded. Waterproof cement glue joints. Laminated, or three-ply, bellows stock. Stands the test of hot and damp climates. Proper and convenient height for playing. Special enlarged scale, pipe and bell metal reeds. Waterproof walrus leatherette case covering, or extra heavy waterproof canvas. Most suitable for missionary work and open-air meetings. Improved waterproof covering and adjustable pedal device. Unsurpassed for orchestral accompaniment and congregational singing. Music holder keeping sheet music or book flat and in position for reading. Does not scratch or mar easily, or show unusual wear in transportation. Lightness for carrying. Double reinforced gum rubber sheeting used in the bellows construction. Patent automatic spring case supports. Patent inverted extra large bellows—30 lbs. spring pressure. Middle board securely braced, overcoming the usual jerky, "short-winded" effect. Case handsomely ornamented with nickel and oxidized trimmings and embossed designs.

PIPE-TONE FOLDING ORGAN

WHEN I WAS A LITTLE BOY of 8 years it was my privilege to hear an Organ, the tones of which so enraptured me that I begged my parents to buy one. The promise was made in good faith but, unfortunately, circumstances were such that my hopes were not realized. These humble circumstances aroused a stronger desire and a determination on my part to be the proud possessor of an ORGAN, and today my fondest hopes have been fully realized.

Jews Asking for Tracts

Jews, as never before, are hungry for the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ; they flock to our meetings by the hundreds, they ask for tracts, then later for a New Testament; they want to study the matter thoroughly. They have a zeal for God, but not according to knowledge.

Won't You Give Them the Knowledge?

Now is the time to reach the Jew. Soon Jesus is coming; even the Jews realize that something tremendous is impending—their minds are open, awed and teachable. BUT HERE IS OUR PROBLEM:—we haven't the tracts to give them! Our supply is completely exhausted. We must have a reprint of 35,000 tracts at once, 5,000 each of the seven kinds we use. They are written by Ex-Rabbi Leopold Cohn, and vary from 12 pages to 52 pages each; all are 5 in. x 8 in. in size. We have the electroplates, we simply need the money for a reprint. The heavier tracts cost $18.00 a thousand, the next ones $12.00 and the small ones $8.00.

Wouldn't you like to pay for one thousand? If you pay for at least two thousand, we will gladly print your name on them. Perhaps you can take care of an entire 5,000. Won't you ask the Master about it, and see what He would have you do for His glory?

But—the need is urgent—so don't delay—write now.

Editorial Notes

"When thou passeth through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee."—Isaiah 43:2.

Sir Alexander Simpson says that when Dr. Andrew Anderson, a very learned man at the head of the medical profession in Glasgow, was on his death-bed, a church elder who was also ill, sent to inquire how it fared with him. "Tell him," said he, borrowing from Hopeful in "The Pilgrim's Progress," "tell him I'm in the very middle of the river, but I feel the bottom and it is good."

It was not this same figure that was in the mind of D. L. Moody on his death-bed, but it was the same hope, when he said, "Earth recedes; heaven opens before me." The first impulse was to try to arouse him from what appeared to be a dream. "No, this is no dream," he replied, "it is beautiful. It is like a trance! If this is death, it is sweet. There is no valley here. God is calling me, and I must go."

This is the month commemorating his birthday, and it is certainly "sweet" and encouraging to our faith to think of such a home-going as God vouchsafed to him, and how He fulfilled the promise of the text.

❖ ❖

Last November "The Congregationalist" issued a D. L. Moody number, making the life and work of that great Evangelist the theme of fifty-six pages of its edition.

D. L. Moody It was commented on far and and the near, but nothing we have seen
Y. M. C. A. interested us more than an editorial in "Association Men," suggesting that the first Sunday in this month (the nearest to his birthday, February 5), be observed by the Associations as Dwight L. Moody Sunday. The editorial went on to speak as follows:

"Throughout the entire world, in almost every city may be found men in all walks of life—from the humblest to the highest—whose lives have been inspired and transformed by the service he rendered. These men could be brought together at the men's meetings and every one of them, growing out of his contact with Mr. Moody would have a message for the young men of today. Our organization owes an unmeasured debt to this man, who said of it: 'I believe in the Young Men's Christian Association with all my heart. It has under God done more in developing me for Christian work than any other agency.' The Association can speak with equal heartiness of Mr. Moody's influence in stirring and shaping its work, in giving to it a spiritual message as well as in securing buildings and furnishing to it capable and consecrated leaders. 'Association Men' is in hearty sympathy with the suggestion to make Sunday, February 7 next, D. L. Moody Day. We believe it can be made one of the most inspiring days of the year in all of our Associations."

We are glad to know that this happy suggestion is being acted upon, and that many of our readers in different parts of the country will be participating in these memorial services. The Moody Bible Institute, which Mr. Moody founded in 1886, has thrown itself heartily into the plan, and offered speakers to different Associations and lantern slides illustrative of his life and work, where they could be made available. We hope the day will be as inspiring as anticipated by "Association Men," and that one result will be that so dear to the heart of D. L. Moody when he was here, the salvation of souls.

Such is the language in which a United States Senator characterizes the teaching of our universities on economics, and so far as our knowledge goes we agree with him. However, we may add that we know good lawyers and influential business men who also agree with him.

But if the Senator were equally interested, what language would he borrow to describe the teaching of the same universities on some other subjects—the Bible, theology and the Christian religion, for example? "Rot" is too soft a term for such foolishness and does not hit hard enough. It is the teaching of similar universities for the past fifty years, more or less, that explains the false thinking lying back of and giving rise to the present European war, and it is likely to continue until it produces the Antichrist.

The Senator was debating the literacy test in the Immigration Bill, and declared what all sensible people believe, viz.: that it will not keep out undesirables from this country. A New England lover of his kind once declared that our universities were turning out "educated demons." He did not mean that all educated men were demons, but only that some demons were highly educated; and this in substance, is what the Senator meant when he affirmed that all the agitators now in this country could meet the literacy test.

But we are not discussing the Immigration Bill, nor are we belittling education, far from it. Our only motive is to put some unsophisticated people on their guard. When men with high-sounding titles and university degrees are found denying the virgin birth of Jesus Christ and picking the Bible to pieces, and classing Christianity with Buddhism and other pagan philosophies, just remember what Senator Sherman says about universities and economics, and continue undismayed.

General Grant said the Civil War was a divine judgment on us for our treatment of Mexico in the preceding war. We have recalled this while thinking of the National Retribution suffering Belgium is now undergoing in the light of her own treatment of the Congo natives not very long ago. Opinions differ as to the particular sins for which some of the other nations in the present conflict are now suffering; but none of them is without guilt. And what shall be said of Germany? If she is the rod of God's anger, and if the staff in her hand is His indignation, let her be careful lest like Israel's enemies of old she should "help forward the affliction." Let her remember that He is the same God who then said: "Wherefore it shall come to pass that when the Lord hath performed His whole work upon Mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria and the glory of his high looks."

And we are trembling for our own nation also, whose legislators in Congress had an opportunity two months ago to make us a sober people so far as that desideratum could be brought about by enactment. But they turned it down, and this in the face of the great object lesson in prohibition which benighted Russia (as some would call her) has set before us. Indeed, as we think of all the Christian nations, what they are and what they might be, there comes into mind God's lament for Israel: "Oh that my people had hearkened unto me and that Israel had walked in my ways! I should soon have subdued their enemies and turned my hand against their adversaries * * * He should have fed them also with the finest of the wheat: and with honey out of the rock should I have satisfied thee." Psalm 81.

It is astonishing what little respect is paid by many who ought to know better, to "the prince of the power of the air." We have just learned of two more pastors who Disrespect to Satan propose to introduce dancing into their parish houses, one of whom excuses it by saying: "It depends a lot whether the barrier between the parish house and the church is a perpendicular or horizontal one. A two-inch partition oftentimes will suffice to shut out the Devil."

How the Devil laughs!

Orthodox Christianity has lost an able and staunch defender in the recent death of the President-Emeritus of the Chicago Lutheran Theological Seminary. Our acquaintance with him began nearly Revere Franklin Weidner twenty years ago when he was a special lecturer on the Bible in the Moody Bible Institute. Later we knew him and greatly valued his work as a collaborator with the late Dr. Harper in his Correspondence Course in Hebrew and the cognate tongues. Five or six years ago it was an honor to be associated with him in bringing out what is known as the 1911 Bible under the auspices of the Oxford University Press. It goes without saying that in all these years we have admired and been helped by the rich output of his pen, and especially his "Theological Encyclopedia." To us he seemed strong-willed and positive in his aims and beliefs and at the same time gentle and childlike in approach. We had a letter from him scarcely more than a month before he died, in which he said he was writing on the doctrine of the Word of God and added this warning note, "I see how these critics are trying to undermine the case for the Scriptures." He was a determined foe whom they had learned to fear and respect.

Though we seldom met Dr. Weidner, yet we miss him and appreciate his loss to the whole church. Our deep sympathy goes out to the great Lutheran body of Christians and especially to the Chicago Lutheran Theological Seminary of which he was for so many years the honored head.

Evangelism in Pennsylvania

By Rev. L. W. Munhall, D. D.

The contents of this article are so interesting and important that we give it the first place in our contributions this month.—Editors.

FROM 1904 to 1912 numerous evangelistic campaigns, of an unusual nature, were conducted in Pennsylvania. But about two years ago evangelism in this state became epidemic and has spread in all directions with unprecedented energy, until now the eastern part of the Commonwealth is throbbing with revival and soul-saving activity, the like of which the country has not seen for nearly sixty years, if ever. Within these two years Mr. Sunday has conducted great campaigns in Wilkes-Barre, Johnstown, Pittsburgh and Scranton. Dr. Stough has been in Berwick, Ashland, Shamokin, Hazleton, Sunbury and Harrisburg. Mr. Nicholson has been at Lykens, Tamaqua, Pottsville, Mt. Carmel and Columbia. Mr. Johnson has been at Spring City, Royers Ford and Leighton. Dr. Anderson at Coatesville, and a number of other evangelists have been similarly employed in other cities and towns. In nearly all these cases great tabernacles have been erected in which the meetings were held, and quite a quarter of a million people have been won to Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord.

Mr. Sunday is spending this month as well as last in Philadelphia in a campaign, the magnitude of which, the Christian church has never seen, judged by the number of churches co-operating, and the organization and preparation. Dr. Stough is under engagement for campaigns in Altoona, Lancaster, Lebanon and Reading; Mr. Nicholson at Milton, Bloomsburg and Chester; and from all parts of eastern Pennsylvania come calls for such work.

This great movement, singularly enough, is almost wholly confined to Pennsylvania,—although neighboring states have caught some of the overflow and are now falling into line.

Certain things are noticeable: First, the generally prevalent spirit of unity among the orthodox denominations, which spells victory for the cause they all love. Second, the great number of unchristian and non-church going people who flock to these meetings. Third, the definite character of conviction of sin and the prompt and sincere responses to the gospel appeal. Not since the great revival of 1856-57 has it been so easy to win people to Jesus Christ for salvation. Fourth, the large number of unsaved men who attend the meetings, and publicly confess Jesus as Saviour and Lord. Fifth, the character of the preaching. All these evangelists believe the Bible is the very Word of God, and have no sympathy whatever with any criticism that challenges its supernatural character, infallibility, trustworthiness and supreme authority. They preach it without apology. They ring true to the doctrines of the historic faith—the doctrines, that because of "A change in the intellectual atmosphere, and the deeper thinking and feeling of the age, have been abandoned, except by a few who have failed to keep themselves intellectually in sympathy with modern scholarship," as wrote one in sympathy with so-called higher criticism and new (?) theology. The honor God is putting upon the testimony of these evangelists is, to my mind His own answer to the infidel views and utterances of the critics. Prof. A. H. Sayce's statement, "Higher criticism saves no souls" is most surely true. Sixth, the ease with which personal Christian work is done. Everywhere in the communities where these meetings are held, the salvation of God is the subject of conversation on every hand; which taken together with the eagerness of revived Christians to do something for the cause makes it very easy to win people who are winnable to the Saviour of men.

Philadelphia will, under God, see glorious things during the next few months. I verily believe, and to my mind, the influence of this work will widen and deepen, until the entire country will be aroused to the transcendent importance of the salvation of men from sin, death and hell.

"Fervent prayer," says an old divine, "like a cannon planted at the gates of heaven, makes them fly open." The common fault with the most of us is our readiness to yield to distractions. Our thoughts go roving hither and thither, and we make little progress toward our desired end. Like quicksilver, our mind will not hold together, but rolls off this way and that. How great an evil this is! It injures us, and what is worse, it insults our God. What should we think of a petitioner, if, while having an audience with a prince, he should be playing with a feather, or catching a fly?—Spurgeon.

Reminiscences of Dwight L. Moody, Humorous and Grave

These were narrated at the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago by those who knew him

(Dwight L. Moody's birthday, February 5, called Founder's Day, is always commemorated with special exercises at the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. Last year the student body, faculty, business staff, and other employees came together in the morning for a praise service, and to listen to brief reminiscences of the great man from the lips of those who knew him. The report was received by us too late for insertion at the time, but is equally appropriate for the present issue.—Editor.)

DR. JAMES M. GRAY, Dean of the Institute, presided, and said: "We will begin our service by singing one of the hymns Mr. Moody liked, 'Move Forward!' There is an interesting incident Dr. Towner can tell you about the writing of this hymn."

The Story of "Move Forward"

Dr. Towner: "Mr. Moody was to hold meetings in Omaha, but to be preceded by one in the Opera House in Council Bluffs, on this side of the river, on the previous evening.

"Our train was late, and when we arrived at the station there was a committee waiting, who told Mr. Moody a great crowd had gathered, that the people were jammed out into the street, and that he must please hurry up.

"When we got there, sure enough, there was a great jam and they would not make way to let anybody in. It seemed impossible for us to get through, but finally a policeman said to the people: 'This is Mr. Moody, and if you want anybody to hear him speak tonight you will have to get out of the way.' So they parted a little, and we went through.

"We came upon the stage from the back, and, of course, the drop curtain was down. When they raised that, and Mr. Moody saw a great space with only a little organ occupying it, he said to somebody, 'Move the organ down, and let the people move forward; let them move forward!'

"The Rev. Mr. Crofts sat in the audience. He never had seen Mr. Moody before, and his exclamation, 'Move forward!' impressed him to write these verses, which were published in the Omaha papers in the morning.

"At the breakfast table I saw them. There was no comment about them at all, but I thought they would make a good song, so after breakfast I wrote the music. I concluded that there ought to be a chorus, and added some words for that purpose.

"I was hardly through, when there came a rap upon the door, and a card was handed in, and whose should it be but Crofts'! As he came forward, I noticed a newspaper sticking out of his overcoat pocket, which he pulled out and said: 'I was so impressed with what Mr. Moody said last night that I wrote this little poem and sent it to the paper, and I was wondering if a song could not be made of it.'

"I went over to the table, picked up my manuscript and handed it to him. I spoke about the chorus, and we looked it over and changed it a little. Then I sang it for Mr. Moody. As Dr. Gray says, it was a great favorite of his and of others, more or less, ever since."

D. L. Moody Preaching

Mr. Moody as a Reader and Expounder of Scripture

The hymn, "Move Forward," was then sung, after which Dr. Gray said: "I first saw and heard Mr. Moody when he and Mr. Sankey conducted the great 'Hippodrome' meetings in New York in 1876. I was then a young student, and with many others joined the large chorus choir, so I had an opportunity to see and hear both of the great men once or twice every day for the period of a month or six weeks. My acquaintance with Mr. Moody did not begin, however, till 1892, when I received an invitation from him through my friend and neighbor, Dr. A. J. Gordon, to speak at the Northfield Conference. From that time he continued to invite me to do so every year, until circumstances led him and Dr. Torrey to ask me to take charge of the Institute, and the pulpit of what was then known as the Chicago Avenue Church, during the summer months, when Dr. Torrey was absent on vacation and in attendance at various Bible conferences. After that date I came to be associated more or less with Mr. Moody in evangelistic meetings in Boston, New York and Chicago, but chiefly in the first named city, where I was located as rector of a church. Sometime I may gather up my reminiscences for your possible entertainment and instruction, but not now.

"While Mr. Moody was an evangelist, yet he was also a Bible expositor of a unique order, who used the Word of God in a way to awaken great interest in it. He would take a theme like "Grace" or "The Blood of Christ" and run it through the Bible, taking a verse here or there, and expounding it in his own way, in the light of its context. He would add an illustration, or a story, and then gather all together in a kind of knot at the end. It was very effective.

"He owed his employment of that method to an evangelist who preceded him, an Englishman, who in his earlier days had a more remarkable experience than Mr. Moody himself. That man was Henry Moorhouse. You will find, in reading 'The Life of D. L. Moody,' by his son, that he admits indebtedness to Henry Moorhouse, so far as the preparation of his Bible readings was concerned.

"Then he had another method. He knew how to read a story of the Old or New Testament and tell it over again in a way to give fresh form and color to it and cause it to remain even more deeply impressed upon his auditors. One of the stories he used to read and comment upon was the healing of Bartimeus, in the tenth chapter of Mark. I want to read it this morning for the sake of his memory, and for the glory of His Saviour and ours."

The Scripture was read by Dr. Gray, after which the hymn, "The Light of the World Is Jesus," was sung.

Mr. Moody's Kindness and Humility

Rev. Howard W. Pope, Superintendent of the Men, then said: "If I were to speak of Mr. Moody I would sum up what I had to say in three or four words. In the first place, he was a very kind man, a sympathetic man, and interested in individuals. He was always putting himself out for other people. That is not a characteristic of people who are famous, who are leaders. As a rule, they want to surround themselves with a lot of helpers, people to minister to them; but Mr. Moody was not that kind of a man. He was willing to help himself, and other people, too.

"I remember once in New York I had to go away in the morning on a six o'clock train. I was working on some press matter that night, and it was necessary to get up early in the morning and write for an hour or so before I went, in order to get this matter down in time to appear in the papers. Mr. Moody said to me the last thing at night, 'Now, be sure and get a good breakfast in the morning, before you go.' I said: 'Mr. Moody, I will not have time to go to the dining room, but I will get a sandwich and a cup of coffee at the station, and that will do me well enough.' 'No,' he said, 'you ought to have a good breakfast.' I left it that way, and went on with my work.

"The next morning I was in the library writing, and pretty soon in came Mr. Moody. He said: 'Breakfast is all ready, Mr. Pope. Come right into the dining room.' I found that he had gotten up not far from five o'clock that morning, dressed himself, and gone down to the dining room and ordered breakfast for me, so that I might have time to eat a good, substantial meal, and still catch the six o'clock train. He was willing to put himself out in that way to accommodate me. That was characteristic of him; and when a man treats you in that way, you will work your fingers down to the bone for him.

"He was a very humble man. I remember thinking, when I went to work with him at Northfield, that a man who had been in the habit of ordering large bodies of men, and where it was impossible to stop and ask the opinion of people, or consult this one or that one, might very naturally fall into the habit of becoming domineering, dictatorial, and possibly disagreeable. But, to my surprise, I found Mr. Moody anything but that. I found him most considerate, very willing to change his plans even after he had given his orders.

H. W. Pope

"I recollect that on one occasion he said to me: 'Now, tomorrow is Saturday. I would like to have you go to Northfield tomorrow morning, and speak to the women Sunday morning in the seminary, and then go over and speak to the men Sunday afternoon. Would you like to do that?' I said: 'Mr. Moody, I am perfectly willing to do that, but had you thought of this, that we were going into Connecticut next week to hold conventions in the large cities of that state? It had occurred to me that I might go to Meriden tomorrow, and also over to New Britain, do a good deal of advertising in those cities, and speak in several churches. However, it is immaterial to me whether I go to Northfield or go up there; but it occurred to me that such a trip would help the meetings very much next week.' He said: 'You are right, you are right. Go and do that. That is the thing to do. I had not thought of that.' A small man would not like to change his orders, but a large man is not ashamed to say: 'I had not thought of that. That is the thing to do.'

"I remember once, at the close of one of his meetings, his saying to me, 'I would like to have you take the after-meeting, Mr. Pope.' I said, 'Very well; but the man at the door'—we were handling a large quantity of colportage books just at that time—is the best man I can get, but he is not what he ought to be, and I thought of going down there to help him myself. However, I am perfectly willing to take the after-meeting, although the work will suffer if I do.' He said: 'Mr. Pope, you go down there. Carry out your plan. I will take care of the after-meeting.' He was willing to change at any time if there seemed to be a sufficient reason.

"He was modest. He never tried to get his name in the papers. He never boomed himself. Large men do not have to boast of themselves; they do not have to advertise themselves, or put their names in the papers every time they get an opportunity. It is men of small caliber who show that spirit, always.

"Then, too, he was a practical man. The first thing in the morning, after he got out of his room, he wanted to see the daily papers. He was a great reader of the daily papers. He wanted to know what was going on in the world. He wanted to have a hand in it. He was not reading the papers to see how many columns there were about D. L. Moody, but he was interested in seeing how the work was going on here and there, and what other people were doing, as well as himself. He was interested in good roads, for instance, and in good schools. That is why he founded the schools at Northfield. Those schools at Northfield are not for training Christian workers. They are for giving poor boys and girls an education. They get a good deal of the Bible thrown in, and they get some training in Christian work; but they are primarily to afford poor boys and girls the opportunity to get what is called a good high-school education. After receiving this training those young men become printers, farmers, merchants, mechanics, and so forth. He was interested in making poor boys intelligent, well conducted, well equipped, useful boys. That is the kind of work Mr. Moody did."

Planning a Big Thing

After another hymn, Mr. A. F. Gaylord, Business Manager, said:

"It was in May, 1893, that Mr. Moody came to Chicago upon a special mission. Said he: 'Let us attempt great things, and trust in God for the result. There is an opportunity for reaching men and women throughout the world, for the cause of Jesus Christ, as never before. I do not know what we can do, but will do our best.'

"It seems that while in London, prior to that time, the London Polytechnic people said to him, 'Mr. Moody, we would like to have a large number of our people go over to America during the World's Fair.' 'All right,' he said, 'bring them over. We will house them in the Institute.' When Mr. Moody returned, he came here and said, 'Gaylord, it is up to you to take care of them.' I said, 'We can not do it unless we put a large number in the same room.' 'All right,' he said, 'put them in the same room. I will tell our students what we want them to do. It is an opportunity to serve Jesus Christ.'

"We received between nine hundred and a thousand men and women in relays of from forty to one hundred and forty-six, putting them in the rooms up stairs in this building, and eleven was the largest number that we had in any one room.

"Across the water it is the custom to leave the boots outside the door to be shined. Mr. Moody was very careful to say to the doorman, 'If Mr. ———, from Paris, puts his shoes outside his door, be sure that they are shined in the morning.' The student partially straightened up and said, 'I do not know as I want to black shoes.' The next morning Mr. Moody waited until the doorman had had plenty of time to black the shoes, and then, seeing that he did not do it, went himself, took the shoes down stairs, blacked them, and brought them back. The spirit of that act was characteristic of D. L. Moody.

"During that World's Fair year campaign he ever put prayer first and foremost. One morning in August he said to Dr. Torrey, 'I have not been anxious about the Institute before, but somehow I am anxious this morning, because we have $7,000 to raise.' That morning definite prayer was made that God would send us, not that money, but some token for good, that might please Him. As was customary, the workers were called together that day to eat luncheon in 'Room' 9' upstairs. While we were at luncheon there came a rap at the door, and the doorman brought in a telegram. Mr. Moody opened it. Always, when Mr. Moody was touched, you could tell it by his eyes. Said Dr. Torrey, 'I hope there is no ill news, Mr. Moody.' Mr. Moody, straightening up and clearing his throat, said: 'I will read the telegram: Northfield Conference now in session. Joins in greetings. Six thousand dollars in cash received; more to follow. (Signed) A. J. Gordon.' It is useless to say that the meal did not go on. Said Mr. Moody, 'Let us stop and pray.' We knelt and in the lives of those of us who were there that day that was the beginning of completely trusting in God for newer, larger and greater things."

Tactful in Conducting Meetings

Mr. Gaylord was followed by Prof. Warren C. Coffin, of the Music Department:

"I will give you a little experience I had in meetings that Mr. Moody held in this city in the great Auditorium, to show the resourcefulness and tact he used to handle large audiences, to get them into the right attitude for receiving his message.

"At the time I have in mind Dr. Towner had provided a large chorus choir, filling the platform, so they had plenty of singing. Everybody was urged to sing.

"Before reaching the city Mr. Moody sent word to Dr. Towner that he wished he would secure the services of a good male quartette of consecrated men, who could sing the gospel.

"Dr. Towner and I conferred about it, and we found among our student body three good voices—a second bass, a third bass, and a good second tenor. When it came to a good first tenor, however, we could not find one.

"Finally Dr. Towner said, 'Why could you not sing first tenor yourself?' 'Well,' I said, 'I have not thought of that. I used to sing first tenor.' He said: 'I think you had better arrange to sing first tenor with them, and you can at the same time coach the quartette and prepare them for any service that Mr. Moody might call upon them for during these meetings. I will leave it to you.'

"So we got together and the men were very anxious to take part, because of their friendship for Mr. Moody and the Institute. We had daily rehearsals for several weeks on just gospel hymn singing, practicing it together as a male quartette.

"In due time Mr. Moody came to hold the meetings. He had not heard us sing at all, and did not know anything about us, so far as our being a male quartette was concerned.

"I well remember the first service. There was a packed house, and the choir was as large as this audience. As you may imagine the quartette was just a little nervous, because there were three men on it who had not had much experience in quartette work. I, who had had some, tried to hold them together the best I could.

"Well, we got through our first attempt, and we wished it had been better. I told them in the afternoon that if there was anything more like that we would simply say that we could not sing any more, and quit. The others said that they would do everything possible to hold together and sing for Mr. Moody again, to let him know that we really could sing.

"In the afternoon Mr. Moody said to us after we closed the service: 'The quartette is good. Be here promptly when the meeting opens, ready to sing again.' That put us upon our mettle, so we went back to rehearse and get ready for the afternoon.

"We went to the meeting and sung as usual, and as there was a large program, and it was going to take some time to get through the rest of the service I supposed that was the end of our singing.

"But I was mistaken. Mr. Moody came to us and said: 'Gentlemen, your singing is very nice. I wish you would go right up to the top gallery, stand against the railing and sing again when I call for it.'

"We were somewhat surprised, but ready for anything that came up, so we went to the top gallery, and crowded down right in front of a line of ladies. They did not like to move for us, for they wanted to see what was going on.

"None of the people down stairs could see us, for we were so far away. We stood there with our books ready. We had planned to sing a hymn that we knew, and everybody knew, for we would not attempt anything that was not familiar.

"We waited some time, and had almost begun to think that Mr. Moody had forgotten all about us, when all of a sudden he said, 'Ladies and gentlemen, we have heard that beautiful male quartette sing here a few moments ago on this platform. They are now in the top gallery, against the railing, waiting to sing again.'

"When we heard that we got ready. Mr. Moody continued: 'The quartette is now ready to sing. Will you please, ladies and gentlemen, bow your heads and listen to the singing?'

"Then we sung that old familiar tune, 'Rock of Ages, Cleft for Me,' and we sung all three verses. As we reached the last verse our singing grew softer and softer, and I was glad that we did not have any more to sing, for we sang ourselves out with that third verse, and we could not have sung another note.

"The audience was listening, sitting as quietly as though carved out of marble, and the tears were falling. When we stopped there was perfect stillness for a moment or two that one seemed loath to break. Then the people were ready for Mr. Moody's message, and he gave them a twenty-minute sermon that gripped their hearts.

"Mr. Moody said he would rather have four good male singers sing the gospel just before he preached than anything else he could ask for, for it soothed and quieted the people and got them in the right attitude for his message. That was one of my experiences with Mr. Moody."

With the Northfield Students

After another hymn, Dr. Gray introduced Miss Rosie, Matron of the Women's Department, who said: "You have been hearing about Mr. Moody in his work in the homeland and abroad. I want to give you a glimpse of Mr. Moody at home at Northfield, where it was my privilege to be a student in the Seminary a good many years ago. I think we see a side of a public man at home that we cannot see in public life.

"While in school there it was a great regret to the students when the time came for Mr. Moody to leave Northfield to go out and pursue his work. You can imagine how eagerly we looked forward to his return, for Northfield without Mr. Moody was a very different place from what it was when he was there. It was a great pleasure to us to welcome him home, and the students at Northfield and at Mount Hermon vied with each other to do him honor and to give him welcome. The students of the Seminary felt that they had an advantage over the students at Mount Hermon, for Mr. Moody's home was on the edge of the Seminary campus, while Mount Hermon was four miles away. Nevertheless, the young men often found opportunity to come over.

I want to tell you how we used to show our welcome to him. When the time of his return was in the evening, each student took her student lamp, for we used lamps in those days, to her window, so that all the buildings were brilliantly lighted up. When the time of his return was in the summer, the students went to the woods and gathered wild flowers, of which there was always a great abundance, and decorated the interior of his home, and made garlands extending from the home out to the drive; and those who were the singers of ing, came over to the Hall and spent two or three hours of the afternoon with us, playing games, and entering into our sports, trying to make us feel as much at home as possible.

"Then, again, at Christmas time, when it was necessary for some to remain during the vacation, Mr. Moody did all he could to make the time pleasant and the surroundings homelike. The evening before Christmas word was brought that we should hang our stockings on the door handles outside of our doors. We did so, thinking perhaps it was nothing but a joke; but in the morning, when we brought in our stockings, we each found a card, containing Scripture appropriate for the occasion, from Mr. Moody, and a silk handkerchief from Mrs.

Northfield Seminary, from West Side of Connecticut River. Mountains in the Distance.

the school gathered in the evening and sang for him.

It was the privilege of those in the early years to know Mr. Moody more intimately, perhaps, and feel that he had a more personal interest in them, than was the case in later years, when the number of students increased. He manifested his interest in us by his consideration in many ways. The Northfield church was a mile away from the Seminary, and because there were some who could not walk that distance, both ways, wagons were provided in the summer time, and sleighs in the winter, to take us from the buildings to the church and back again.

"Let me give you another instance of his thoughtfulness. At Thanksgiving time quite a number had to stay at the school, being too far away from home to return there, and Mr. and Mrs. Moody left their own family gathering. We prized those gifts very highly, I assure you.

"We also had a day that we called 'Mountain Day.' We did not know, and probably no one knew, except the principal and Mr. Moody, when that day was to be, so there was great expectancy. We never knew when it was coming until Mr. Moody stepped into the chapel service in the morning and announced that books could be put away and the day spent in the woods, gathering nuts and autumn leaves. We always had a very happy time, and it will always be remembered by any who were at Northfield.

"I think the time that stands out most clearly in our memories was that spent in the Round Top meetings on Sunday afternoons, when the students came in all directions from the different buildings, carrying camp chairs and gathered on the hill, with Mr. Moody in to find if we could give the content of each chapter, and when we failed to do it he would do it himself, without referring to his Bible. I am sure those of us who were at Northfield will always be glad that we were there in the days when Mr. Moody was there."

Round Top, East Northfield,

With the Mount Hermon Students

Dr. Gray: "We will now listen to another who knew Mr. Moody in his home in the Northfield days, not one of the Northfield girls, but one of the Mount Hermon boys, who used to find opportunity occasionally to visit the Seminary. Mr. Norton, Business Manager of the Colportage Association, will now speak to us."

Mr. William Norton: "My personal acquaintance with D. L. Moody began at the Mount Hermon school, and at Northfield. I entered Mount Hermon in 1891. There were two rather homely expressions of Mr. Moody current in the early days of my stay there which may be of interest to you. They were characteristic, and were brought to the front at the beginning of the school-year. When he was in Northfield in September, and the school year began, he came frequently to Mount Hermon, not only on evangelistic errands, but also to impress upon the students, if they needed it—and some doubtless did—their opportunity and privilege as students of the school, inasmuch as there were more applying to enter than could be taken in at that time, and the school was giving them board and tuition at just half price. Two hundred dollars was the actual cost to the school, but $100 was the cost to the students.

"Mr. Moody, while not himself making up the deficit of $100, became responsible for it very largely, and it was a personal matter, and he made us feel that way about it. He would impress us early in the term with this fact, that only those who meant business, who would measure up to the standards, could remain; all of which kept some of us on the anxious seat. His way of expressing it was this—that 'the school was not going to spend $100 on a 10-cent boy.'

"There was another expression somewhat the center, when he would open to us the Scriptures. I was very much impressed with Mr. Moody's knowledge of the Scriptures. He would take one of the Gospels, begin at the first chapter, and catechise us, trying similar which came forward at the beginning of the term, and which had to do with that fitness for any duty, that readiness or ability to do anything, anywhere, any time, that he wanted to see the young men acquire before they left the school. He put it thus: 'We want to send out young men from Mount Hermon who are able to eat soup with a one-tined fork.'

"I want to read you a letter from Mr. Moody to me, which shows something of the burden that he carried with regard to money raising. I do not think we fully appreciate here what he has done for us in years gone by, and we never shall know, probably. This will throw a little light on it, however. He wrote this from Northfield on May 17, 1899, the year he left us:

"I came home all tired out, but had to go out and stir things up to keep things going. I have been to New Haven, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Boston, Worcester and New London, and came home last night from Waterbury, Connecticut.

"I find I have to raise nearly all the money for the prison fund, and for all my schools, and the load is heavy at times."

Moving Men to Christian Service

Dr. Gray: "Dr. Evans and Dr. Towner will now speak in the order named; then we will have a few minutes of prayer together before we adjourn this happy gathering."

Dr. William Evans, Director of the Bible Course: "Mr. Moody possessed, among other striking traits of character, the ability to move men to enter into Christian service. If you were to name today the leading Christian workers now living, the leading Christian workers of the last quarter century, it would be difficult for you not to connect Mr. Moody's name with them. He had that wonderful power of enlisting men in the service of Jesus Christ.

"I had a personal touch with Mr. Moody along that line. In the year 1890 I had been a Christian for but a few months, when I was asked to attend the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, where Mr. Moody was holding services at the time. On the occasion I have in mind he was preaching on the incident of Peter and the disciples fishing, where Christ said, 'Launch out into the deep and let down your nets for a draught.' His theme was 'The Call for Christian Workers,' and I shall never forget—and it would be difficult to forget—how, toward the close of this sermon, he pointed his finger down at me.

"I had never seen him before to my recollection, yet he pointed his finger down at me and said: 'Young man, I mean you! Has not God ever called you to His service?'"

"Well, I was a very modest, backward young man then. That is the truth. I was here for two years as a student, and received numerous invitations to go to the ladies' department for a meal, but never had the courage to go. However, I was one of the fellows at Mount Hermon who used to go over to the Seminary, and I won, too. You can imagine, then, how I felt. I thought I would sink through the floor.

"When the service was over Mr. Moody came down to me and said, 'Who are you?' I was more scared than ever then. He said: 'God tells me that this message is for you.

Who are you? What is your name? Where do you live?"

"I told him what my name was.

"He said, 'What are you doing?'"

"I answered, 'I am setting type in the "New York World" office.'

"He said, 'Have you a good position?'"

"I replied, 'I have.'

"Then he added: 'You ought to give yourself for God's work. Have you been called?'"

"Here is the remarkable thing: I had been fighting for three or four months that call to Christian service. I knew what it meant, and I had been fighting it.

"I said, 'Yes,' and I told him my story.

"He said, 'You pack up your trunk and go to my school in Chicago.'

"I said, 'I cannot go to school. I have not the money.'

"He replied: 'Money? Did I say anything about money? When God calls a man, He will raise the money. You pack your trunk?'"

"I did, and in three days I was on my way to Chicago and this Bible Institute. He and his friends saw to it that $25 a month was provided for me. I took it the first month, but felt like a pauper. I said: 'Mr. Moody, I do not want it. I will scrub floors, wash dishes, clean windows, or anything, and I will get through by myself,' and I did not take the money after that month.

"I have a vivid recollection of Mr. Moody on another occasion, when I went to Mount Hermon. I was here as a student, had been here for a few months, and I thought, like many other students since have thought, that I ought to have a different education; so I left the school.

"I wrote to him, and he wrote me a letter in reply which I still possess, and said: 'Evans, enter the Mt. Hermon school on September 3rd. Enclosed find $25.'

"So I started for Mt. Hermon. I had not been there very long—I will not tell you how long—before I felt that I had made a mistake, that I should not have left the Bible Institute, and I determined that I would go to Northfield and see Mr. Moody. I did. There is a bridge there, that used to be covered, lying about half way between the two places. Some of you will remember that big bridge.

"I met Mr. Moody in that bridge. I lost my breath, and if any one had shot me through the body they would not have killed me, for my heart was up in my mouth.

"I said, 'Mr. Moody.'

"He said, 'What is it?'"

"Finally I managed to tell him that I felt I had made a mistake.

"Then he waxed warm, righteously indignant, and declared: 'You do not know your own mind for five minutes at a time. God never called a man like you to Christian service. God never called anybody to Christian service who did not know his mind for five minutes at a time. You go back to New York and stay there.'

"I said: 'But I have made a mistake. I would like to go back to the Bible Institute.'

"He replied: 'You cannot go back to the Bible Institute. When God calls a man, God calls him to stay. You have not stayed. You thought you had made a mistake there, and came here; and now you are here, and want to go back. You had better go back to New York and stay there.'

"I said, 'But I can go to the Institute and attend lectures, and live on the outside, can I not?'"

"He replied, 'You had better not go at all.'

"Finally he said, 'Well, I will write Dr. Torrey.'

"He wrote Dr. Torrey, and the latter wrote back, saying: 'Send Evans along. I want him.'

"I came back, and I had learned my lesson that time.

"When I took my diploma I went up to 'Room 9.' Mr. Moody was there, and I said, 'Mr. Moody, do you remember that incident at Northfield?'"

"He replied, 'Yes.'

"'Well,' I said, 'I have finished my course.'

"He held out his hand and said, 'God bless you, Evans.'

"That is all."

Pathos and Fun, Mostly Fun

Dr. D. B. Towner, Director of the Music Course: "I presume nearly every one here has either heard or read that Mr. Moody was an ignorant man. If I do not do anything else this morning, I want to enter a protest against that. It is true that he was not a college graduate; he had not even taken a homiletic course in the Moody Bible Institute. But nevertheless he was a well-informed man. Any one who knew him well, or who was with him much, soon found that out. Whenever you hear a man say, or read in the paper that a man has said, that Mr. Moody was an ignorant man, you may feel certain that if that man could succeed in publishing all he did not know about Mr. Moody, it would make a large volume.

"And yet Mr. Moody did not know everything. One time some friends sent him a setting of eggs. He received the eggs in good condition, but had no hen to 'set' upon the eggs. He took his horse and buggy and started through the mountains to find a 'setting' hen. After covering some distance, and not finding what he sought, he became discouraged and turned around to go home. Finally, he noticed a little house some distance off the road, standing alone, and he drove in there.

"The woman of the house was outside, and he said to her, 'Have you a setting hen?'

"She said: 'Yes, sir, What of it? It has been setting about a week.'

"Well," said Mr. Moody, 'I want to buy a setting hen.'

"The woman replied: 'I don't want to sell her. She has been setting about a week, and she has spoiled all the eggs.'

"I will pay for the eggs," said Mr. Moody, 'and I will pay for the hen.'

"Said the woman: 'Well, I couldn't afford to sell her for just what the eggs are worth. Her time isn't worth anything, and if she keeps on "setting" she will hatch out these chicks.'

"Well," said Mr. Moody, 'I will pay for the chickens, too.'

"Said the woman: 'But, then, I couldn't take just what the chickens would be worth, because they can run around here and pick up a little feed here and there, and by Thanksgiving time they will be great big chickens, and worth a good deal.'

"Mr. Moody said, 'How much do you think they will be worth?'

"She replied, 'They will be worth several dollars.'

"Said Mr. Moody, 'Bring on your hen.'

"He paid her the money, put the hen under the wagon seat, and went home. He made a nice nest, and put the hen on the nest, but she had changed her mind about 'setting.' She did not want to 'set' on those eggs, but he just put her on the nest and turned a tub, or something of that kind, over her.

"The next morning he went out to see how she was getting along. When he raised up the tub he found that she, like Paddy's hen, "set standin."

"Mr. Moody learned then that he could not make a hen 'set' any more than he could make a suffrag-ette.

"Mr. Moody was a great friend to those who needed help, and those who were discouraged, as Mr. Pope has said. He was always giving help and encouragement. He was an optimist through and through, and he has helped many a student here. Many a man owes all he is, really, under God, to Mr. Moody, for what he has done here, at Northfield, at Mount Hermon, and in other places. He was an accurate judge of men. He very seldom made a mistake.

"But during the World's Fair a young man who was a student here lost a wonderful opportunity. Mr. Moody had taken a great fancy to that young man, and he would have done anything for him. He had not told the young man so, of course; but he would have put him through college, helped him, and done anything for him, because he believed he was going to be such a power for God.

"One night Mr. Meyer spoke down at the Central Music Hall, at one of those large meetings that you have heard about. Mr. Moody was so fond of this young man that he had him act as one of the stewards, so to speak, to go around in the meetings and help take up the collection. After Mr. Meyer had spoken this young man walked up to him, took him by the hand and said, 'I congratulate you on the splendid little talk that you gave us.' That was the end! Mr. Moody never took any interest in that young man after that. He lost his opportunity, because he did not have more sense, as a student in the Moody Bible Institute—where we are injecting sense all the time, and extracting it, too—than to go to a man like Mr. Meyer, after a wonderful address such as he gave, and congratulate him on his 'little talk.' That is just simply a warning to all of us, not to be too free to express ourselves.

"I was sick once; or, rather, I had a bad eye. I have it yet, so far as that is concerned. It was at Northfield that this happened, in the midst of the College Conference meetings and Mr. Moody sent me down to the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital in New York to be treated there.

"I was all bandaged up so I could not see, but Mr. Moody was constantly writing to me, encouraging me, telling me that the students were praying for me, and all that; and I had the nurse write him a few lines each day. Among other things she wrote him was that they were fearful I would lose the sight of both eyes; that I would lose the sight of one eye, at least. When he received that message, of course, he at once sat down to comfort me. He wrote me a letter, telling me of all the men he knew, great men, some of them, who only had one eye.

"For instance," he said, 'there is P. S. Henson, that marvelous preacher. He has only one eye, you know; and there are many other successful men who have only one eye.' Finally he said, 'I am going to write to you with one eye closed.' When the nurse read that she stopped. I said, 'Go on,' as I could not see what he had written. The nurse replied, 'I cannot read it.' That was the part he had written with one eye closed. Toward evening that day Mr. Sankey came in to see me, and as I knew that he was very familiar with Mr. Moody's handwriting, I had the nurse bring out this letter for Mr. Sankey to read. He read through the first part of it, about Mr. Henson, and those other men, just as she did, but when he came to that point he stopped and cleared his throat. I said, 'What is it, Sankey?'

"He said, 'Well, I should think he was writing with both eyes closed.'

"You see, he was thinking of me in the hospital, while those great meetings were going on, with hundreds of young men there, and all that work upon him; but in spite of the burden he was carrying he took time to write to me, trying to encourage me, so that if I did lose the sight of my eye I would not be entirely discouraged.

"We have heard something of what Mr. Moody said and did to the boys over at Mount Hermon, from Mr. Norton. I used to ride over the hills there with him a good deal, back and forth, to Mount Hermon and around. He had a little black team of horses he used to drive frequently. Any of you who have ever been there know that there is quite a hill as you come up, just before going over to Mount Hermon, so there is, of course, quite a slope in the road. A good team, with a light buggy, could trot up most of the way; and they would have to, when Mr. Moody drove, whether they wanted to or not.

"At the side of the road was a strawberry patch, and the boys were working there; weeding out the strawberries. At that time the school at Mount Hermon was a boys' school and the name used to be 'The Mount Hermon Boys' School.' There were little boys there as well as young men, and these boys were working in the berry patch. A day or two before that Mr. Moody had had occasion to go over and deliver to them a rather severe lecture. They had been rather obstreperous, and needed attending to, needed a father's counsel and care, so Mr. Moody had to go over and administer that.

"On this particular day, as he drove up over the hill and dashed past the boys with these little black horses, the boys were lying down between the vines.

"Now, when he had been over to administer the lecture to them, he had said, 'Boys, the devil gets after boys just the same as he does after men; and the trouble with you boys is, the devil is after you. You would be different boys if it were not for that.' So as he dashed by one of the boys said to another, 'I wonder if the devil ever gets after Mr. Moody?' The other fellow replied, 'Naw, he drives so fast he can't catch him.'"

Giving Dr. Gray a Buggy Ride

Dr. Gray: "I did not intend to say anything in particular this morning about my experiences with Mr. Moody, but Dr. Towner's reference to that team of black ponies reminds me of an incident.

"One summer, when I was at the Conference, Mr. Moody said, 'Would you not like to take a drive around Northfield and see the place?' I replied that I would. 'Well,' he said, 'I will call for you at the hotel early in the morning.' So early in the morning I was waiting for him. He drove up to the back of the Northfield Hotel in a buggy, with a white horse; perhaps it was old 'Nellie Gray,' I do not know. He knew the kind of man to take out with a team of spanking ponies, and the kind of man to take out with an old white horse.

"So he drove up to the back of the hotel. Some of the friends here will remember the location, and remember the red barn that stood probably seventy-five feet from the hotel, in the rear.

"I jumped into the buggy. 'Now,' he said, 'I want to talk to you about something important,' and then to the horse, 'Get up!' He shook the lines, and the horse started toward the barn. When he neared it he showed a disposition to go in, but Mr. Moody pulled the line on the right and he went around it, for there was a road around it.

"The horse walked slowly around, Mr. Moody talking to me all the time about this important matter. Then he went around it again, Mr. Moody still talking, and again, and again, and again. We took it synthetically.

"Finally, after about thirty minutes or so we drove up to the steps of the hotel, and Mr. Moody called out, 'Whoa!' to the horse, and 'Good bye, God bless you,' to me, and I had seen the place.

A Striking Missionary Address on South America

By Rev. A. Stuart McNairn

An address delivered at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road, London, and stenographically reported for "The Christian Workers Magazine."

"Other sheep I have; which are not of this fold, them also I must bring." John 10:16.

I HAVE read this portion of the Word of God to you using the words of our Lord Jesus Christ to ask this question: Are there being found in South America today some of these other sheep of which He said, "Them also I must bring?" "I must bring," a divine compulsion that lies upon the Lord of glory! He must bring these other sheep, but it is impossible that God can work out His purpose, until His people put themselves unreservedly at His disposal to accomplish His great redemptive purpose through them.

We sometimes ask in these days why South America is in God's gracious providence being forced at last upon the minds of His people. Through all these years while He has been thrusting laborers into other nations of the earth, South America has been neglected, passed by, like the wounded, bleeding man on the road to Jericho. Now God is turning, forcing, compelling His people to look at South America. The people are asking, Why? Surely South America is provided for, is Christian. A Roman Catholic country, where they have had at least a form of religion all these centuries, has it not the elements of a saving faith? The question itself betrays the darkness that lies over the whole problem. Let me remind you that at the great parliament of missions in Edinburgh in 1910, that section of the great mission field was excluded under that same false delusion, that South America was provided for, that it was a Christian country. Let me answer that question.

What the Continent Says for Itself

I want to give the answer of the continent itself, what it says by its actual condition. I want to refresh your memories of the fact that South America is a vast land in size. It is one-eighth of the globe. In that great Republic of Brazil you could stand the entire population of the globe and there would still be room for millions more. The one Republic I want to speak more particularly about as typical of the whole continent, the Republic of Peru, which is larger than France, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Denmark, Belgium, Italy, Spain and Portugal combined. Throw all these into one and it will hardly reveal the size of Peru. Is that evangelized? Tonight the only Protestant society working in Peru is the Evangelical Union of South America with five men. Five men at work in a territory larger than France, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Denmark, Belgium, Italy, Spain and Portugal! If I had a map I could show you a circle twenty-five times as large as England where there is not a single missionary. Brothers and sisters, there is more unexplored territory in South America than in all parts of the globe. You might travel from Panama and, with the exception of some places in the Argentine Republic, you might pass all the time through nations and tribes, that not only have not heard the gospel but myriads of whom never have seen a white man's face. Great stretches of pagan darkness there in the heart of that great continent. Civilized, cultured, educated in a measure, discovered and subdued some four centuries ago by Spain, a people took with them the religion of Europe at that time? But what religion? Roman Catholicism. What type of Roman Catholicism? You think of something you know close by, but go back in your mind to the days of Bloody Mary, of the Spanish Inquisition, of that infernal system that deluged England with blood, that perpetrated the vilest deeds that ever mind of man has descended to, that put up in authority more monsters than ever eyes have rested on. That was the system forced upon these unwilling people in South America. The paganism of the land was destroyed to a certain extent, but while old idols were torn from their shrines new idols were put in their place. This new religion appeared to triumph and the cross was erected on every hill-top, a Christless cross. Actually the triumph lay with paganism, because to the empty, deserted shrine of that lifeless faith crept the old spirit of paganism. What you have today in South America is a paganism, dressed up in the polluted garments of a dead faith, a horrible spectacle.

The Demoniactal Horrors

Words fail to tell of all the demoniactal horrors of that continent called Christian. Take the great procession of the Indians of Peru, which occurs every year on Easter Monday. At sunset a huge image is borne on the shoulders of a hundred Indians, crowds of people attending, priests walking in front, women bearing candles, dressed all in black, and crowds of kneeling, worshipping Indians. But what is this image? A figure of Christ on a black, gigantic crucifix. And do you say, "What a touching picture! How beautiful to see that vast multitude rendering homage to Jesus Christ on the cross!" Let us go to one of these prostrate figures and say, "Tell me, who is this image?" "It is the lord of the earthquakes." "Why is He outstretched on a cross? What do you know about Him?" You would find that not one in all these thousands had the remotest idea of whom that figure represented. They never heard of Jesus Christ. They know nothing of His birth, of His life, of His death for sin. They do not know He is risen from the dead and sits at the right hand of God, a Prince and a Saviour. All they know is that this black image was brought out at the time of the earthquake and the earthquake ceased. Now it is the lord of the earthquake. That is all these Indians know of Jesus Christ.

Another procession one can see again and again in the little villages is a crowd of drunken Indians dressed in fantastic garb, going along the road shouting, singing, reeling to one of the dances that have been handed down from time immemorial. You will find sacred emblems among them. What are they? Pictures of the Virgin Mary, or a crucifix with the figure of our Lord extended on the cross. You ask, "What is this drunken procession, with sacred emblems?" It is a church feast, a procession of the local saints, one of the ordinances of the church. So, whenever their so-called Christianity is in evidence it has degraded them. It has attracted all that is vile and licentious in their filthy lust, so that today you have the degraded, debased spectacle of these Indians sunk in the lowest bestiality, and all with the symbols, the elements, the skeleton, of what was once a Christian faith.

But, after all, these are only Indians. What about the cultured, educated, Spanish people? I think their condition is even sadder. Religion, with the educated South American is a mere by-word, a mere system of fraud, of tricks and delusions, to impose upon the women and the children, and thereby support a fine army of priests and monks. He sees through the farce of the whole thing, and he says, "If that is religion I want nothing to do with it." He has cast the thing from him and is seeking by the light of reason to creep along that road that leads to atheism. The men are atheists, the women are gulled by the priests, and the children are brought up on the one hand under the superstition and the vice of this so-called religion, and on the other the example of abject irreverence, ridicule and contempt cast upon everything that bears the name of religion. It is an awful thing when the youth of a nation grows up with a contempt for God and all that God means. That is the condition today of South America, and in consequence, honesty, truth, morality, are mere names, representing nothing, so that one cannot describe in such a gathering as this the social life of a South American city. This brief survey of the condition of things there speaks for itself and answers the question, "Does South America need the gospel?"

The Putumayo Atrocities

Oh, if one could tell only a tenth part of what is taking place today in the dark heart of South America! You have heard of the Putumayo atrocities, and the unspeakable things that are done there. That is one little corner. On the Putumayo River I have heard only today on the very highest authority, of conditions of things as bad or worse than anything that took place there and elsewhere on that continent, places that were vaunted as being perfectly clean and open to the whole world, that anybody could come in and see what they were doing. All the time it was a mere boast, a brag to cover a state of things worse than at Putumayo River. Oh, these dark places of the earth, these habitations of cruelty, such as you never could conceive of, cruelty that could never enter the mind of any but a demon-possessed man! The whole population of that dark heart of South America is being wiped out by it.

A native of the United States, a man who owns ten thousand square miles of rubber land that is full of fine, intellectual people, said, "They are no use to me, I don't want them. I am going to work my rubber with the Indians from the mountains. You are a missionary, it is up to you to convert them. I will give you all the land you want. Come and do something, if not, we are going to kill them off." That, of course, is going on tonight. I could put my finger on the map and show where these people are being killed off because the church of Christ in the homeland will not take up this great problem of South America. They are being killed off, not in a clean straightforward way, but shot at sight wherever they are seen. And infinitely rather than some things that have taken place, where people have been tortured and flogged and little babies hung up and shot at as targets for rifle shooting. Does it need the gospel? Has South America been evangelized?

The Doors Being Opened

Some say, "Evangelicalism is an inward religion and therefore it is not wanted. South America is quite happy. They have a religion that appeals to them. You are not invited. They want an outward and gaudy ceremonial, and the Protestantism you preach does not appeal to them. They do not want you." Is that true? The fact is, every Republic of South America, with one exception till the other day, has altered its constitution, and opened its doors to Protestant Christianity. They have looked at the United States and the other progressive nations of the earth and said, "What is the cause of these things?" And they recognize that the heathen system that has lain like an incubus on them all the centuries, the system of the Roman Church, is the cause of their trouble. And so they have opened their doors and invited Protestant Christianity to come in and help them, recognizing that Protestantism means purity, truth, holiness, family life, individual life, recognizing on the other hand that Roman Catholicism stands for superstition, vice, darkness, ignorance, and all that they want to get rid of. Peru, the last stronghold of Satan, and of Catholicism, has held out to this point, and in the last week, I could hardly believe my eyes as I took up a paper and read that Peru, 66 votes to 4, has given its vote in favor of religious liberty. Today South America, from beginning to end, is free and open to the gospel, and that great land, the dimensions of which I have given you, is crying, "Come and help us. Take up the education of our children. Come, and try and cleanse the cesspool of our national life. Come and help us." And in that great land, we have only five men! Thank God there are one or two others from America. The American Methodists have two men, but altogether you can count on your two hands the witnesses for Christ in that great Republic of Peru!

Strange Stories of the Power of the Bible.

One other point, South America, is the one cultured land that has no sacred writings. The Chinese, the Buddhists of India, the Hindus, all have a sacred writing, the Koran. Only South America has no sacred Bible. Twenty years ago we could not get a Bible into Peru, because all books were held up by the Customs to be contraband. The head of the Bible society in Lima lay for months in a vile dungeon in the capital for the crime of trying to sell the Scriptures. Another colporteur who pursued his way and sold books was murdered in Bolivia and the priest would not allow his body to be buried inside the village. It was buried outside between the graves of a murderer and a suicide, for the crime of trying to get the Word of God to the people. The Bibles were burned by the priests. Anybody who dared to read the Bible was excommunicated, for that is the greatest curse in the church. You can wipe out sin by kissing the cross, but the crime of reading the Word of God knows no pardon. Today all that is changed. We have perfect liberty to circulate the Scriptures anywhere, and the books come in without money and without price, paying no duty. Today you can tread the streets of Lima, Arequipa, Cuzco, and all its towns circulating the Word. God is using His Word to do the work the people will not do. Five men in Peru! When will we ever reach that land with the gospel? But God is doing it with His own Word.

In strange, unaccountable ways copies of the Scriptures get away into far off places. A colporteur heard of a race where people held some strange doctrines and beliefs. He found there an old lady with a family of ten sons. Years before she had bought a copy of the Scriptures from a colporteur. She never saw a church or heard a preacher or a missionary. She got a copy of the Testament and was led to know Jesus Christ as her Saviour, and she had brought up that family of ten sons to know Jesus Christ. That missionary said he had never heard the Word of God so opened up as he did when that woman opened the Book and brought out of His treasure things new and old.

A copy of the Scriptures was left by a colporteur in a prison in Bolivia; an old negro among them who was in for murder got that, read it and was led to Jesus Christ. He started testifying, with bitter persecution, but the more he was persecuted the more his light shone. He preached Christ in the prison and five other convicts in that prison were led to Christ, and one day when the missionary visited the prison he asked to be baptized. It was arranged, and that old negro was led out and baptized in witness of his faith. Then he thought, "I cannot get out myself, cannot I send the gospel?" He took up his trade of cobbling, mended the prisoners' boots, and sent the profits to our society to send the Scriptures to other people. At last, his conduct was such that he received a pardon, and that negro today is preaching Christ as a colporteur. No missionary helped that man; only the Word of God.

A verger of a church worked with a most fanatical priest, a man dead set against the Scriptures, burning them whenever he could. One day he collected a hundred copies of the Bible, and bade the verger destroy "these filthy, bad books." The old man began to wonder, "What is there in this book the priest is so dead against," and a little of the old Adam, the old curiosity, made him secrete one of them. When the priest was not looking he slipped it in his coat. When he got home he read, and read, and at length was led to Christ. He wrote some time ago saying, "Will you thank God with me that He ever led me to secrete that one copy of the Scriptures, and pray that He will forgive me for having burned so many others?" So I could go on telling you any number of these stories, that the Word of God is leading many into the light though the church of Christ has failed to go in and preach Christ to these people.

The Disappointed Indians

My time has nearly gone. Let me mention another phase. Two Indians, two weary, travel-stained Indians, were found one day sitting on the doorstep of our mission house. They had come nine days' journey over the mountains from their little town, commissioned by the elders of the village to say that this wonderful message, this story of Christ's love, was what they wanted. The people there had banded themselves together and put their names to a document pledging themselves to buy the land and build a chapel, and to follow this way of life if they could only have sent to them a teacher. The missionary read the appeal and talked the thing over with the two Indians, but had to tell them he could not do it. "But, why couldn't he do it?" Hadn't got the man to send. "You haven't one man! We thought England was a Christian country. We understood England was the richest country of the world. You tell us you have not got a man or the money to send us only one teacher." And these two simple men, looking very strange, turned their faces once more to their home in the mountain, to tramp back over the dusty trail and tell the people that we could not send them anyone to tell them of Jesus Christ! They are waiting today, still waiting, and no one has gone.

Think what it means, a little Indian town, willing to embrace Christianity and accept Jesus Christ, if we had only somebody to send! A few paltry pounds, some sixty or eighty pounds, would put a preacher there to feed that little flock, and out of the wealth of Christian England we cannot get it. May God forgive us! There are scores of towns like that. When we think of those five workers tonight, we see these doors that God has opened wide to the wall urging, begging us to go in, and this last victory of all, that the government itself has gone aside and opened the door of opportunity, and tomorrow if we would, we might go to the Plaza and claim the victory on the lonely graves of men who have fought for this. Tonight Peru is free, and yet before that open door we are bound hand and foot. Help us! God gave His Son. Jesus Christ gave His life. We have money which will perish with us. We go into God's presence naked, taking none with us. It might have been used in leading these souls to a knowledge of Jesus Christ. Help us!

An Original Plea for Missionary Workers

Mr. Charles T. Studd represents the Heart of Africa Mission, and from a circular letter of his dated at Nala, we make the following extracts, which contain about as stirring a call for workers as we have read in some time, and which ought to move somebody.— Editors.

THE devil's frontiers might be pushed back with ease now, but a little further delay on the part of the tens of thousands of lusty Britains and other Christians and the opportunity will be lost.

"Will the British Christian young men deliberately pitchfork these unevangelized crowds into the hands of the Roman Catholics or leave them in those of the devil while they themselves are thinking of health and prudence, or wondering if God's promises are true, and if He really can supply bread in the heart of Africa, and can He give flesh also? Let us cease our blatant chatter of holiness and fast from holiness and higher life conventions, at least until we are simple enough and consistent enough to trust the Almighty Living God we profess to believe in and to risk all for the glory of the Saviour whom we say we are indebted to and adore; until we are willing to deal our bread to the hungry instead of eating too much ourselves and manufacturing tasty, made-up dishes and serving them to those who are already suffering from a surfeit.

"Egyptian soldiers had to be dragged in chains from their homes in tears and parted from the arms of their weeping relatives in order to go and fight the dervishes. Must one of us three go home to Britain to try to drag out Christian soldiers from their safe and comfortable houses in England to fight the devil in these parts? Why did Paul tell us to quit ourselves like men?

Why Don't They Come?

"How many times more must I cry in agony, 'Why don't they come?' How many more times must I strip the envelopes from the letters of the fortnightly Europe mail with the burning hope, 'Somebody will surely be coming,' 'Some one will be coming to redeem his promise, to redress the odds and help turn the battle in the gate,' but only to say in amazement to God, 'O Lord, how long? How long shall brave, honest and holy Christian young men refuse to pay their debts?' How often shall I seem to hear the prayer of Stephen, 'Lord lay not this sin to their charge,' or that of our Saviour on the Cross, 'Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.'

"You educated young men who, though unordained, use your time and talents to preach the simple gospel to the educated children of Britain who have all heard of God and Jesus Christ, does it never even strike you that for every one of your audience there which you have done your level best to entice by many artful dodges to give a hearing to your messages of good news, there are thousands of young, grown up and old children, for all are children here, who will come to listen to you here at the very sight of your white face without any need of banners or baby organs, lantern processions, athletic sports or picnics? If those children need not that you be ordained of men, do these who never heard of any such thing, require it?"

Not Theology, but Jesus Christ

"If a man is to be but a brick maker why should he waste his best years in a scientific study of geology? Why confuse your brains by a serious and protracted study of the in-

"Are the risks too great? Will you dare to say that to Jesus presently before the throne of God?"

"Are the overwhelming needs of these poor heathen of little consequence or unworthy of being satisfied at all costs? Then how can you ever hope to persuade your parishioners that their comparatively insignificant needs are of any importance whatever?"

"It is positively sickening to read the religious papers and see the questions that are supposed to be of vital importance at home when one sees the desperate importance of the simple issues out here.

"Let the Archbishops and Bishops and others in high authority among the churches first come and see the dense darkness and need of these heathen in the unevangelized portions of the globe and then depend on it, they will see a lot more clearly how to pull out the motes or beams from their own and

FRIENDS MISSION—AFRICA

The American Friends (Quaker) Mission in Africa is located a little north of Lake Victoria Nyanza among the uncivilized people of the Kavirondo tribe. This is a picture of their Sunday morning service. They came in troops from all directions, shouting and singing rhymes. After running around for some time they gathered under the trees for the meeting, as the mission has no church to accommodate them. While this picture was being taken they were listening to a talking machine render "All Hail the Power of Jesus' Name."

tricacies and contradictions of modern theology in order to be able to tell the story of Christ and those of the Bible in the simplest possible way? These old and big and little and young children need none of your scientific theology, they need but Jesus Christ. And remember that while you, wasting your time and clogging your heart and brains and refusing the call of Christian manliness, these children are dying without God and without hope. Is the journey long and not easy? Then are the days of chivalry and giant endeavor past? It cannot be impossible, for some have already come, and what is a Christian for unless it be to accomplish the impossible by the help of the omnipotent God? Do you doubt that your bread, water and clothing shall be sure? Then why did the Saviour say, 'Seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you?'

their brethren's eyes, as well as a true perception of the value of the things that are really vital to the cause of Christ today.

"Surely here is a splendid field for evangelization, none like it; truly this is the most populous and interesting part of the Congo and probably of all Africa. A fine race of people, friendly and more industrious than those we have hitherto come across, for their plantations were evidently the work of care and thought. Shall these people be left without the knowledge of Jesus Christ? Not if I can help it, not if the H.A.M. can help it. But what do you say, you young British Christian? A virgin field, a fine people, a lovely country, fertile to a degree, a good climate; if we leave this unevangelized what will we say to Jesus presently, what will you say? I mean you young Christian man; what will you say as an excuse for leaving these unevangelized?"

The Spirit Filled Life

By Rev. C. I. Scofield, D. D.

(Reprinted from the "Dallas News")

TEXT, John 4:14: "Whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

Let us think, this morning, of the Holy Spirit and the inner life of the believer. There is an inner life; an inner life so deep, so truly inner, that no one knows it but God and ourselves. It is a life so in which, in its deeper depths, we never speak to our dearest friends. There are defects there, there are victories there—heart-surgings, heartaches that we cannot put into words—we can only go with them before God, and the Spirit, who helpeth our infirmities, can make intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered.

Now, we are to think this morning of the Holy Spirit as indwelling the believer:

The Upspringing Fountain Within *

Oh, what a wonderful symbol it is! How apart from all other instructions, it speaks of the constant renewal of the spiritual life. You know the contrast was with Jacob's well, which was very deep, and out of which water must be laboriously drawn. When our Lord spoke to the woman about this living water, this water which was not down in the bottom of the well, but was upspringing, she asked a question: "Whence hast thou this water? Thou hast nothing to draw with and the well is deep."

Oh, dear friends, what a picture of the average Christian life! Somehow we get on; we manage to get through the day after a fashion, but it is just like that poor woman, laboriously drawing water out of Jacob's well. We draw it up just a little at a time, and some of us with a sense that we have nothing to draw with, and there is a constant effort to be spiritual; and over against that our Lord puts the picture of a fountain that springs up and throws its crystal flood into the clear air and dances and sparkles there in the sunlight, and then flows away to be kissed by the sun back again into the azure blue.

Now the Christian life, the true spiritual life in Christ's conception of it, is to be a life which has within it the source and renewal of its freshness and vigor and power; an upspringing fountain constantly fed from a higher source, coming down that it may ascend again. Here is a little springlet in the valley that gets afraid that it is going to dry up; and the spring up on the mountain says: "No, you shall not dry up, for I am running all the time." Oh, what a contrast with the average life! Here is the plentitude of divine power, the omnipotent Spirit of God, who has not only taken up his abode in us, but wishes to be in the believer a living vital force, constantly renewed.

My friends, is your Christian life like that, or do you have to painfully draw it with a creaking windlass out of Jacob's well till your back aches? Which is it? Here is the contrast. Now, obviously, if the fountain is to spring up, it must have

Its Source Higher Than Itself

The inlet must be kept open and the outlet must be kept open.

There are two sins which Christians commit against the Spirit. We are said to grieve the Spirit, and we are told some of the things which grieve him. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and evil speaking be put from you with all malice." Now have you got a little bitter feeling toward somebody in your heart? "Bitterness! Wrath! Anger!" Oh, you don't care much about that. You say, "The Lord knows I was born with a hot temper; I am made up that way, but it is just a flash and all over in a minute." Yes, my friends, it may be all over with you, but is it all over with the heart you have wounded? Anger! Malice! Envy! Ah, my friends, all these things allowed in us, defended, petted, kept there, are but stones that choke and prevent the upspringing of the fountain.

And then we are told not to quench the Spirit; to let the Spirit have his way. But we do quench the outlet, and we don't let him have his way. Now

Just a Few Propositions

Do not imagine that because you are having a kind of Jacob's well experience that therefore you have not the fountain within you. In other words, don't imagine that if you are a believer of the Lord Jesus Christ, you have not the Spirit within. Every believer of the Lord Jesus Christ is indwelt by the Holy Spirit. You have not to intercede for Him, you have not to seek Him, you have but to take account of the fact that you have Him already. "What?" says Paul in the sixth chapter of 1st Corinthians, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?" And remember, the Apostle is addressing there a people whom he has just told, in the third chapter, that they are carnal—running after human leaders—babes in Christ, and yet we do not doubt that they were Christians, although living for the time being on a low level. To those he says, "What? Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own?"

Now, when that fact is received by faith, without waiting for feeling, you have taken a vital step toward better things. You can not recognize the fact that the Holy Spirit of God dwells in your mortal body without transforming your life.

What the Upspringing Fountain Does

First, the Spirit indwells the believer that he may control the old self life. A mightier power has come in and while the old, evil life of the flesh is there, omnipotence is holding it in the place of death and we may be free from the dominion of it. Not by good resolutions, not by struggling to keep a law, but by divine power within, to which we have yielded our whole being. Ah, it is a deep truth that old John Newton uttered when he said, "I hear a great deal of talk about the Pope, but the Pope who troubles me most is Pope John Newton." Now, the Spirit of God is there to govern, to control, to keep that self life in the place of death and to give us victory as we walk in the Spirit.

And secondly, he is there to make real the things of Christ. "He shall take of the things of Christ" as the promise was, "and show them unto us." Now that does not mean "exhibit" the things of Christ, but to make them real—actual to us.

And thirdly, he is here to make real to you the Fatherhood of God. You realize that God is your father by the Holy Spirit. And when you pray to God you are not merely praying to a Creator, to one who laid the foundations of the earth and who keeps the planets in their courses, but you are praying to your Father in heaven; and just as you go to an earthly father with your needs, wanting help and counsel, just so you may go to your Heavenly Father. So, because the spirit of sonship dwells in you, you realize the Fatherhood of God. Furthermore, the Spirit wants to take up every one of the blessings which you have in Christ and make them real to us. And when he is ungrieved and unquenched, he is doing that. That is the life in the Spirit. And then he takes up the problems, the difficulties that we have to do with our lives and settles them for us according to the will of God; so that the outer life is the unforced expression of an inner life which is pure and clean and high, and full of love and tenderness, looking about with the eyes of love on all humanity, watching for opportunities to put out the helping hand and to lift up the downtrodden and oppressed.

The whole problem lies, not in self-effort, not in painfully drawing water out of Jacob's well—that is going back to the law; to what the Apostle calls the "beggarly elements of the world;" to elementary things—and not going on to the fulness of what God has for us. Which is it to be hereafter? The upspringing fountain or Jacob's well?

Suite 401-2 Moody Bible Institute

UPON my arrival at the Moody Bible Institute recently I was entertained in suite 401-2. I had been entertained in this suite during other visits and therefore noticed the change wrought in the interior of these rooms. New draperies and decorations met my eyes. I sat down to become acquainted with my new environment.

"Over a mantel which enclosed a fireplace, I looked upon an enlarged crayon portrait of D. L. Moody, the founder of the Institute. But now he was gone. The memory of the shock which came to me when I heard 'D. L. Moody is dead,' was renewed within me. I had, myself, in years before, seen him moving about the Institute. I remembered many of his wonderful words and much of his wonderful work. A sadness possessed me and a prayer escaped my lips. D. L. Moody was gone!

"I chanced to look upon an opposite wall, there to see a picture of Dr. A. J. Gordon, many years the pastor of Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston, editor of the 'Watchword,' and unquestionably one of the most faithful saints and fearless preachers of his time. I had known Gordon also, had been present at the Institute many times when he had lectured. The first sermon which I heard him preach in the Moody Church was recalled; a sermon I shall never forget, 'They looked unto Him and were lightened and their faces were not ashamed.' But now Dr. Gordon had gone also! The man to whom Christ came in a dream was now present with the Christ of whom he dreamed and the Christian church had sustained a loss difficult to replace.

"I looked upon the mantelpiece, and there, in a small easel of brass, I saw another familiar face. It was the face of Dr. W. G. Moorehead of Xenia, O. He also was a warm friend of the Moody Bible Institute. Among the expositors of the Word, Dr. Moorehead has taken front rank. I remembered correspondence of recent date in which he made references to his failing ministry and his weakened body. He, with Moody and Gordon, had also gone to be with Christ. My soul was serious, sympathetic and sad. I longed for the Lord. There I sat in meditation. 'Moody is gone—Moorehead is gone—Gordon is gone'—a triumvirate of worthies.

"I chanced to glance at another wall, to behold this time, not a picture, but a beautiful wall motto which was artistically executed and neatly framed. It had upon it but two words, but these two words turned my heart from reverie to rejoicing, and from meditation to exultation. Upon beholding these words of the motto I was so moved with joy that I turned my little steamer trunk, which had preceded me into the room, into an altar, over which I knelt in praise and prayer to God.

"These two words were, 'Thou Remainest.' Moody was gone, Gordon was gone, Moorehead was gone, but God was present—'Thou Remainest.' O, omnipresent, immutable God, 'Thou Remainest' with the Moody Bible Institute. Servants may come and servants may go, but 'Thou Remainest.' I spent yet ten more days at this wonderful Institute, each day looking here and there to see if indeed God had remained present, and indeed, as I went from building to building, from classroom to classroom, I was led again and again to exclaim, 'Thou Remainest.' I have visited this wonderful institution many times, but it seems that never before was I so persuaded of God's presence and power!

"I attended the opening session of the new year. I heard Dr. Gray's address. I tarried for the prayer meeting. I arose declaring, 'Thou Remainest.' I attended the report meeting, saw present more than 500 students as Dr. Pope received their reports, and I left the room declaring, 'Thou Remainest.' I saw at the evening hour, happy students departing in many directions to bear the good tidings to wicked and weary Chicago, and again I was led to cry, 'Thou Remainest.' I saw the gospel wagons—as many as three—laden with workers, move out to the streets where the thousands pass by, and yet again I repeated my praise, 'Thou Remainest.' I saw books, tracts, Gospels, in abundance, and I saw wagons carrying them for distribution by mail and express to the ends of the world, and again I was constrained to say 'Thou Remainest.' I had been told that only recently Dr. James M. Gray had been heard to say, 'We must stand faithfully by the fundamentals of the faith now and forever,' and my rejoicing heart exclaimed, 'Thou Remainest.'

"I was not surprised that while attending Immanuel Baptist Church, of which Dr. Johnston Meyers is pastor, Sunday morning, September 27, I read in the editorials of the church paper the following words: 'Immanuel Church is deeply interested in the work of the Moody Bible Institute. We have several students who are rendering valuable service to our church. There is no better religious school in the world than the Moody Bible Institute.' We said within our hearts, Amen! 'Thou Remainest.'

"How faithful is our God. How unchanged is He. Men fall, men fail, but He is faithful. Men pass from the work, but the work goes on. Moody moves up to God, Torrey goes forth with the Word to the world, Gray is the chosen of God, and the Moody Bible Institute remains, because 'Thou Remainest.'

"I was glad it was in the heart of this institution to receive me as a guest and assign me to suite 401-2, Moody Bible Institute, for I learned a lesson which lingers and will be lasting, for in my humble work, as in their honored work, 'Thou Remainest.' If I had money, I would put it in such institutions as these, where 'Thou Remainest,' rather than where nothing remains, neither the Lord nor His Word."—Rev. W. Leon Tucker, in the "Serial Bible Course."

On the night of January 12, a missionary rally was held in the Moody church in the interest of the Nyasaland mission of Central Africa, by the North American Council of the United States and Canada. Mr. A. F. Gaylord, of the Institute, presided, and reported over $4,000 received during the year and forwarded to the field by the two branches of the Council. Rev. A. W. Roffe of Toronto brought a message of greeting from Canada, while Rev. W. R. Marshall, of Chicago, spoke of the work of the council in the States.

A stereopticon lecture was given by Rev. Norman H. Camp, a member of the council, and an appeal was made by Rev. Paul Rader for those who would support the work by their prayers and gifts, and for those who would go as workers. Some two hundred answered the first appeal and sixty-two the latter.

As the blind can have no true idea of color, or the deaf an idea of musical sounds, so one without spiritual discernment cannot know the deep and precious teachings of the Holy Spirit.—Selected.

Practical and Perplexing Questions

Answered by the Editors

DO CHILDREN NEED REGENERATION?

I believe that children dying in infancy are saved. Does that imply that Christian parents can so nurture and train their children from infancy as to make unnecessary regeneration by the Holy Spirit?

We believe not, on the ground of Christ's teaching in John 3.

THE LAST FIRST, AND THE FIRST LAST

Please explain Luke 13:30.

Primarily this refers to the Jewish nation as distinguished from Gentiles. The Jews were first so far as the Old Testament promises were concerned; but having rejected Jesus as their Messiah, they became last in the sense that during this dispensation they are rejected as a nation, while the gospel is being preached to the Gentiles, who are thus by faith becoming first.

AGAINST EVOLUTION

Please give me the names of some good books in reply to the evolutionists.

"Collapse of Evolution," and "Evolution or Creation," by L. T. Townsend; "The Other Side of Evolution," by Alexander Patterson; "Criticism and the Bible," by Sir Robert Anderson; "The Passing of Evolution," in "Fundamentals No. 7"; "The Decadence of Darwinism," and "Evolution in the Pulpit," in "Fundamentals No. 8"; "Modern Idea of Evolution," by Sir J. W. Dawson; "The Religious Aspect of Evolution," by J. McCosh; "God's Image in Man," by James Orr.

THE EFFECT OF THE ATONEMENT

I taught my Bible class that the atonement of Christ paid the penalty of the sins of the whole world past, present, and future. An elder said if that were true, God would be unjust to exact the penalty again from the sinner, i. e., it would be demanding the penalty twice. His idea sounds reasonable. Am I wrong?

Theoretically you are right in saying that Christ's atonement was sufficient for the sins of the whole world, past, present, and to come. But this does not mean that the whole world is saved or that it will be saved, because while the atonement is sufficient, it is efficient only for those who believe. Your elder is right in saying that it would be unjust in God to exact the penalty in the case of a sinner where it had been already paid by Christ. However, everything depends upon whether the sinner has accepted Christ or not. If he has accepted Him there is no penalty to be exacted in His case, but if he has not accepted Him, the penalty remains upon him because the debt of sin remains.

THE UNIVERSALIST CHURCH

Should we class Universalists among the evangelical churches, and does the acceptance of the teaching of that church make one eligible for Heaven, or is it sufficient for salvation?

The first half of this question is easily answered by saying that the Universalist denomination is not evangelical in the commonly accepted sense of that word. The second half is somewhat vague as the teaching of that church differs with the personnel of its ministry. In other words, it has no creed strictly speaking, and no articles of faith to which all its people are expected to conform. Jesus said, "Except a man be born again he cannot see the kingdom of God (John 3:3)," and the only means of accomplishing the new birth is through acceptance and confession of Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord (Rom. 10:8-10). Some Universalist churches may possibly preach this truth, but we are not aware of their doing so, and therefore warn our correspondent of the danger of such fellowship.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD

What did Christ mean in Matthew 21:43?

When Christ said to the Jews, "The Kingdom of God shall be taken from you and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof," it is noticeable that He did not say, "The kingdom of Heaven." The latter is yet to be set up on the earth and will be given to Israel, when that nation shall have returned to God and to His Son in repentance and faith. "The kingdom of God" is the more comprehensive term and includes the kingdom to be given to Israel in the age to come as well as the gospel privileges of the present age. These gospel privileges are now taken from Israel not in the sense that an individual Jew is not saved when he believes, but in the sense that they do not belong to Israel as a nation as did the promises of the Old Testament. These privileges are now offered to the Gentiles as indicated in Romans 9:30-33.

This same inquirer quotes a certain phrase asking if it is found in the Bible. We need not publish it, but simply reply that it is not found there to the best of our knowledge and belief.

LEANING ON THE PROMISES

Editors: You state in answer to an inquiry that John 16:13 (last clause) was a promise to the apostles that the Holy Spirit would impart to them such foreviews of the future as are scattered through the Epistles and Revelation. This verse and the preceding one, however, have meant a great deal to me in learning to trust God in my personal affairs, and concerning my spiritual growth. Can we not, therefore, in this day, claim the promise, as well as those to whom they were personally addressed?"

We think we understand the sense in which this inquirer puts the question, and are happy to be able to answer, "Yes."

THE SACRIFICES OF THE OLD TESTAMENT

Why did God institute the altar and its sacrifices in the Old Testament, and what relation did they bear to forgiveness of sin?

The correspondent thinks that it was the obedience or the faith of the offerer rather than the merit of the offering that brought forgiveness in the Old Testament days; and he is right if, by the offering is meant only the particular victim laid on the altar. He finds some people, however, who think the people of those days were saved by looking forward to Calvary just as we are saved by looking back thereto. That is hardly the case, however, except in very exceptional instances. God looked forward to Calvary and on the ground of Christ's finished work which he foresaw, He accepted those who came to Him in obedience to the way He had ordained for them. That way was by means of the sacrifices of beasts which typified the sacrifice of His Son.

THE RELATION OF THE HOLY SPIRIT TO THE BELIEVER

A correspondent sends three questions:

1. Why does not the church claim the promise of Act 2:39?

2. Explain Acts 10:46,47, as I have been taught that we must receive the Holy Ghost as we come up out of the water of baptism.

3. Why do not we speak in tongues when we receive the Holy Ghost?

We reply to the first question by saying that the church gets that promise without having to claim it. In other words, every soul truly believing on the Lord Jesus Christ and confessing Him, receives the Holy Ghost to dwell within him (see John 14:15-17; I Cor. 6:19). We reply to the second by saying that our correspondent has been erroneously taught, as the gift of the Holy Spirit is not dependent on water baptism, although the two not uncommonly go together. Our answer to the third is that the Holy Spirit distributes His gifts how and when He pleases. If there were need of our speaking with tongues to glorify God, the gift would be bestowed now as well as in the Apostolic days (See I Cor. 12:4-11).

"LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION"

To the Editors:—"Referring in a recent number to the question, What is the meaning of 'Lead us not into temptation'? Why should our Lord lead us into temptation? the answer given is not satisfactory to me, however it may be to the one who propounded the question. In the first place, it appears to be controverted by other Scripture. That the Lord does not tempt men, we have the testimony of an apostle in James 1:13: 'Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted of evil, neither tempteth he any man. But every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed.'

"In the second place it doesn't seem to me that the Lord's prayer thus read, is properly read. Without the change of a single word, we may read: 'And lead us,—not into temptation, but deliver us from evil,' making 'lead' the emphatic word, and separated by a pause from what follows. The phrase 'not into temptation' is antithetical, a contradistinction of that way wherein we would pray to be led, as one might address a guide, having in mind a path that his experience had already taught him to abhor, 'No, not there; but here, in this other direction.'"—M. W. K.

HE DOES NOT AGREE WITH US

"To the Editors: You take the position that sin, or carnality, is never eradicated from the heart in this life, neither by the first experience—the new birth—nor by a second experience which some so strongly contend is essential to its removal.

"To my mind it is clear that God's people are free from the inbred or inherited sin and should be free from actual sin (1 John 1:9). Furthermore, God's people are designated saints (Eph. 1:1, Phil. 1:1, Col. 1:2, 4, 26, etc.), and a saint is "one who has been sanctified." It is inbred sin that has made the new birth necessary and it is good logic to conclude that it should result in its removal. Our bodies are the temple of the Holy Ghost (1 Cor. 3:16, 17), hence they must of necessity be pure and holy, free from inbred sin or carnality (Rom. 8:6, 7).

"I would agree with your position perfectly if for carnality or sin, you would substitute the term, human weakness, or infirmities of flesh."

J. H. B.

We regret that our correspondent does not agree with us, but we cannot accommodate him by substituting "human weakness" for "sin," as in our judgment the two are equivalent in this case. In a postscript he asks us to further "ventilate" the subject, but we think enough has been said in our columns on this subject for some time to come. We have in mind, however, a more exhaustive article which may appear later.

PERSONAL ORNAMENTS

How do you harmonize the wearing of gold as a mere ornament with such Scriptures as Romans 12:2; 1 Timothy 2:9 and 1 Peter 3:3? Even granting it to be allowable, should it not be discarded as an unnecessary expense, and also on the stronger ground, that it is offensive to many of God's people (Rom. 14:21; 1 Cor. 8:9)?

Replying to the first of these questions, we note that Romans 12:2 admonishes us in general terms not to be conformed to the world, while 1 Timothy 2:9 urges women to adorn themselves modestly, i.e., "not with broided hair, or gold, or pearls or costly array," and 1 Peter 3:3 repeats the words in Timothy almost verbatim. We think all the passages apply to immodest, bold, gaudy extravagant adornment only. This seems to be emphasized in the last two where the adornment is set over against good works in the one case and a meek and quiet spirit in the other. That is to say, Christian women should be more careful to maintain good works and manifest a right spirit than to be adorned in their outward persons.

But should they not be suitably adorned? Our inquirer would not think his wife was commending the gospel if she neglected to do up her hair? And if she did it up, would it be sinful to adopt the most becoming form for her appearance? And does he think the custom of a plain gold wedding ring is wrong? We believe both the Old and New Testaments justify a certain kind and degree of adornment as perfectly compatible with the profession of godliness, but they give no encouragement to, but rather sternly condemn such extravagance in that direction as characterizes too many of our Christian women and some of our Christian men in these days.

As to the second question, it is not always clear what is an unnecessary expense, but no Christian should spend money for adornment which he cannot afford, or where it can be legitimately said that he or she is robbing the Lord's treasury to do it.

The same thing is true in regard to giving offense to God's people. Sometimes God's people take offense in such matters where it is not indicative of a good spirit for them to do so, jealousy or envy prompts them. And in such cases they should not be encouraged to tyrannize over their brethren who are better off in this world's goods. But where offense may be taken legitimately, and where such adornment becomes a real stumbling-block to the weak, it is as sinful on the part of the Christian as any other species of worldliness can be.

THE EPISTLES TO THE SEVEN CHURCHES

Will you please state at some length the reasons for regarding chapters 2 and 3 of Revelation as covering all this present age? That is, on what ground can it be said that these letters give a foreview, in detail, of this age?

Proof that the seven churches are in their order representative of the predominant characteristics of the church in the seven periods of our history, is based entirely on the observation of history. In other words, there is a strong coincidence between these epistles and the after-course of the development of the church down to our own day. "That is not to say that the different periods have distinctly defined termini, but rather like the colors of the rainbow, the characteristics of adjacent periods, distinct in their central portions, blend into one another at each beginning and end."

It will be impossible for us in our limited space, to give this evidence in detail, but the inquirer will find it sufficiently wrought out in Lange's "Commentary on Revelation," by the pen of its American editor, Rev. E. R. Craven, D.D., pages 139-141, especially the last page. He will have access to this volume in the public, or some of the private libraries of his town. In the meantime the footnote on the subject in the "Scofield Reference Bible," may be all that he requires. We quote as follows: "These messages must contain that foreview if it is in the book at all, for no church is mentioned after 3:22. Again, these messages by their very terms go beyond the local assemblies mentioned. Most conclusively of all, these messages do present an exact foreview of the spiritual history of the church, and in this precise order. Ephesus gives the general state at the date of the writing; Smyrna, the period of the great persecutions; Pergamos, the church settled down in the world, 'where Satan's throne is,' after the conversion of Constantine, say, A.D. 316. Thyatira is the papacy, developed out of the Pergamos state; Balaamism (worldliness) and Nicolaitanism (priestly assumption) having conquered. As Jezebel brought idolatry into Israel, so Romanism weds Christian doctrine to pagan ceremonies. Sardis is the Protestant Reformation, whose works were not 'fulfilled.' Philadelphia is whatever bears clear testimony to the Word and the Name in the time of self-satisfied profession represented by Laodicea."

THE LAYMENS COMMENTARY ON THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS

Conducted by James M. Gray

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

Lesson 1

Introductory

The first three Gospels are called the Synoptics, from two Greek words which mean "a view together," the idea being that they set forth the same general view of the story of Jesus Christ, and contain much the same material although variously arranged. They were the earliest Gospels, in circulation probably within twenty-five or thirty years of the ascension, and did the work of an evangelist in carrying the knowledge of Jesus to peoples theretofore ignorant of Him. From among these peoples thus converted to Jesus, Jews, Romans and Greeks, the Christian church was founded, and to this latter body, composed of all three classes, the Gospel of John was addressed.

Thirty years, more or less, had elapsed since the Synoptics, and with the growth and development of the church had come up questions for investigation and settlement that the fourth Gospel was particularly designed to meet. These touched especially on the person and work of Jesus as the Messiah, His nature and the character and significance of His death, so that in answering them John reveals the deepest and profoundest truth found in the Gospels. For the same reason John's Gospel is nearly altogether new as compared with the Synoptics. This is not to say that John invented what he wrote, or that the substance of his Gospel was unknown to the other writers, but only that, in the wisdom of God, the relation of such things as he records was held back until the period when it was particularly needed and could best be understood and appreciated. John was the last survivor of the twelve, dying near the close of the first century, kept on the earth by divine providence, until, like his Master, he, too, had finished the work given him to do.

The proof of the later date of John's Gospel is found in such references as 1:32 and 3:24, which assume a previous knowledge of the facts on the part of his readers. It is found also in the omissions of all the material of the Synoptics down to the passion. There is only one exception to this, the feeding of the 5,000, which was retained in John probably in order to introduce the discourse on the bread of life (chapter 6).

There is a further evidence of the later date of John in that which at the same time affords an illustration of its deeper and profounder character, viz., the prevailing use of words belonging to the later rather than the earlier experiences of Christianity such as: Sinner, Repent or Repentance, Righteous, Justify, Believe, Love, God, as Father, World as Renewed, Humanity, Truth, True, Light, Life and Eternal Life.

Further illustration of its profundity is found in the nature of the miracles it records, which seem to show a higher degree of power, for example, than those in the Synoptics, and testify the more emphatically to the divine origin of Jesus' message, and by inference to the deity of the Messenger. Witness the turning of the water into wine (chapter 2), the healing of the nobleman's son in the same chapter, and that of the impotent man in chapter 5. Also the man born blind (9), and the raising of Lazarus (11).

The nature of the discourses in John's Gospel illustrates the same thing. They are on the profoundest themes which fell from the lips of our Lord.

The New Birth, chapter 3; The Living Water, chapter 4; The Honor of the Son, chapter 5; The Living Bread, chapter 6; The Good Shepherd, chapter 10; The Farewell Discourse, chapters 13-16.

Consider also the doctrines emphasized in John's record. Take those related to the God-head alone. Observe how he speaks of God in the abstract (1:18, 4:24, 5:37). No such teaching about God is found anywhere in the Bible outside of the Epistles of this same evangelist and those of Paul. Observe how he speaks of God as Father (3:16, 5:36, 6:37, 8:18, 10:30, 17:11); of the person of Jesus Christ as related to the Father (1:1, 14, 18, 5:17, 18, 26, 14:9, 10); and as related to man (1:4, 6:46, 8:40-46, etc.); of the Holy Spirit (3:5, 4:14, 7:38, 14:12, 16, 26, 15:26, 16:7). Of course, in these instances it is frequently Christ Himself who is speaking and John simply reporting or quoting Him, but the point is, it was left for John to do this, to report Him in these deeper and profounder utterances which are so important for the church to know.

Questions on the Lesson.

1. Why are the other Gospels called the Synoptics?
2. What was their accomplishment?
3. How much later than they was this Gospel written?
4. What was the particular object of this Gospel?
5. How does it compare in character and contents with the others?
6. What was the date of John's death, speaking generally?

7. Have you examined the proof texts as to the date of this Gospel?

8. What further evidence of a late date can you indicate?

9. Give one or two illustrations of the profundity of this Gospel.

10. Name some of its great discourses.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

Lesson 2

The Deity of Jesus Christ

Chapters 1:2-1:12

This portion of the Gospel is chosen as a lesson because it gives an opportunity at one view to consider the deity of Jesus Christ as declared in the preface 1:1-14, witnessed to by the testimony of the Baptist 1:15-34, and demonstrated in the first visit to Judea after the baptism 1:35-2:12.

I. The Preface, 1:1-14. In the preface observe the earliest illustration of John's presentation of Jesus as the Son of God. Nothing corresponding is found in the Synoptics. John asserts the deity of Jesus, and shows Him to be the Creator of all things and the source of all life (vv. 1-5). He emphasizes the point by comparing Him with John the Baptist (6-9). He is careful, too, to proclaim Jesus as the source of the renewed spiritual life of man, the eternal life which is co-incidental with salvation (10-13). And yet side by side with these testimonies to Jesus' Godhead, he demonstrates His perfect humanity (14).

"Word" is the Greek logos which means, (1) a thought or concept, and, (2) the expression or utterance of that thought. And thus as a designation of Christ it is peculiarly applicable because in Him are embodied all the treasures of the divine wisdom or the collective thought of God (I Cor. 1:24; Eph. 3:2; Col. 2:2, 3); and also because from all eternity, but especially in His incarnation, is He the utterance or expression of the person or "thought" of God (John 1:3-5, 9, 14-18, 14:9-11, Col. 2:9).—"Scofield Bible."

II. The Testimony of John the Baptist, 1:15-34. Every student will be impressed with the originality of this Gospel concerning the testimony of John the Baptist. Nothing corresponding is found in the Synoptics. Observe his testimony to the pre-existence and deity of Jesus Christ (15-18), and to the sacrificial nature of His death (29). These words as well as the preface stamp this Gospel as that which especially reveals "the deep things of God" concerning the person and work of the Messiah. It was questions of this character which arose for settlement in the early church and which John was retained on the earth to answer. Was Jesus God, as well as man? Was His death a sacrifice for human guilt? How clearly the Baptist's witness bears upon these points!

III. The First Visit to Judea, 1:35-2:12.

It is a peculiarity of the fourth Gospel that it dwells upon the ministry of Jesus in Judea while the others mention more especially His ministry in Galilee. In Matthew, after the narrative of the baptism which took place in Judea, there is scarcely any allusion to Jesus visiting Judea until the nineteenth chapter, which was His last visit. A convenient division of the present Gospel will be along the line of these different visits.

This first includes the baptism, overlapping what we described as the testimony of John, and might be said to begin at verse 29 instead of 35. Besides the baptism it includes the call of the first four disciples (35-51), a call preliminary to the more formal call referred to in the other Gospels. In connection with the call of Nathaniel Christ's reference to the prophetic symbolism in Jacob's dream of the ladder points to the millennial age, when visible communication may be carried on between earth and heaven.

This first visit to Judea ended with His return to Capernaum in Galilee, on which journey was wrought the work of creation in the turning of the water into wine at the wedding feast. The nature of this miracle and the bearing of its record upon the peculiar position of John's Gospel has been alluded to.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

Lesson 3

The Second Visit to Judea

Chapters 2:13-4

With reference to what occasion, and hence at what period of the year, did this visit take place (2:13)? With what display of Jesus' authority and power is it associated (14-17)? Comparing this with Matthew 21:12, 13, it would seem that this transaction was repeated at the last Passover. In what manner did He refer at this time to His death and resurrection (18-22)? What great discourse of Jesus is associated with this second visit to Judea (3:1-21)? Where did this discourse occur presumably (2:23)? How does the theme of this discourse demonstrate the profundity of this Gospel, and bear out the theory that it was written for the church? How further does John the Baptist bear testimony to Jesus on this visit (3:25-36)? An analysis of this testimony like that in the first chapter, would make an excellent sermon, or Bible reading. He testifies (1) to Jesus' relationship to His people (verse 29); (2) His growing influence and authority (30); (3) His exaltation (31); (4) His truth (32, 34); (5) His supreme power and grace (35, 36).

What reason is assigned for Jesus departure from Judea at this time (4:1-3)? Whence did He journey, and what route did He take (3, 4)? What exhibition of loving grace was associated with this journey (5-42)? Select some passages in this part of the chapter which harmonize with the particular design of John's Gospel, as already indicated. What about verses 10, 14, 24? Do you find any teaching sounding as deep a note in the Synoptics? How long did Jesus remain in Samaria, and where did He next go (43)? What miracle is connected with this return journey to Galilee, and how does it bear on the general purpose of John's Gospel (46-54)? An allusion to this miracle was made in the introduction to our study of John.

We can not dwell on all the great things in these chapters, but must not pass the teaching in 3:3-8 about regeneration. We see how essential it is because the natural man can not "see" (apprehend) the kingdom of God without it. Read here Ps. 51:5; Jer. 17:9; I Cor. 2:14; Rom. 8:7, 8; Eph. 2:3. As to its nature or source it is a supernatural, creative act of the Holy Spirit, not reforming our old nature, but giving us a new one alongside of the old (John 1:12, 13; 2 Cor. 5:17; Eph. 2:10; 4:24). There is but one condition for our receiving it, viz., faith in the crucified and risen Lord (John 3:14, 15, 16; Gal. 3:24). This fourth Gospel is richly set before us in the so familiar sixteenth verse referred to above. Salvation may be said to be its theme, and we find in it (1) its source, the love of God; (2) its means, the gift of Christ; (3) its means, faith; (4) its need—"should not perish"; (5) its result, eternal life; (6) its extent, "whosoever." That word "perish" must not be misunderstood. It is translated "marred" in Mark 2:22, and "lost" in Matt. 10:6 and other places, but nowhere does it signify cessation of existence.

The great teaching in chapter 4 is suggested in verses 6-14 about the Holy Spirit, whose indwelling in the believer is set before us in the symbol of the living water. Other truths are the nature of God (24); the revelation of the Messiahship (26), the governing motive of Jesus (34), and the miracle of verses 46-53.

Questions on the Lesson

So many questions are asked in the text of the lesson that but few are required here.

1. What is the doctrine in chapter 3:3-8?
2. Tell what you have learned about it in this lesson.
3. How many of the corroborative Scriptures have you examined?
4. Analyze John 3:16.
5. What do we learn about the Holy Spirit in chapter 4?

"BEHOLD I COME"

By F. A. Edwards

Hear the message of the ages,
Ringing down the shores of time,
To beloved John in Patmos,
From the Son of God divine;
"Fear not"—O thou weary pilgrim,
Earth's long night is nearly done;
See! the heavenly hosts are gathering,
Victory waits—"Behold I come."

Hark from out the golden portals,
Voice of angels, countless throng,
From the starry dome descending,
Reach the "Watcher"—tarrying long;
Lion of the tribe of Judah,
Root of David, Morning Star,
Lo! His chariot, cloud empinioned,
Resteth near the pearly bar.

Bride of Christ—arrayed in beauty,
Without wrinkle, without spot,
Church of God, triumphant, glorious,
Loved through aeons—long blood-bought.
List—the cherubim in glory,
List—the seraphim refrain,
List—the Spirit's sweetest story,
Christ your King doth come to reign.

Samuel Called to Be a Prophet

I Samuel 3:1-13, 19, 20

Golden Text.—“Speak, Jehovah; for thy servant heareth.” I Samuel 3:9, R. V.

Samuel was the last Judge and the first of the order of Prophets. His name means “asked of God,” and he was dedicated to God (1:11) as a Nazarite. In fulfilment of his mother’s vow he was brought to the temple when he was a young child (1:24). Josephus says at twelve years of age. Hannah’s song of rejoicing (2:1-10) is the expression of a great soul and a choice piece of literature. Samuel had the advantage of being well-born, but after studying Eli’s household we are not so confident as to the environment in which he was placed.

I. Samuel’s Vision, vv. 1-10. The young child entered heartily into the temple worship and duties as directed by the aged priest, Eli, who was not faithful in giving the people the Word of God. “It was rare” (Margin) and the consequent result was that “there was no frequent vision” (R. V.) The Word is also “precious” (v. 1; Ps. 19:9, 10) yet men frequently set but little store by it. God will judge men for such laxness even as He judged Israel (Amos 8:4-6, 11, 12). Eli and his sons had no vision and a people lacking in a vision perish (Prov. 29:18). Jehovah is about to make known to Israel His will and in so doing He passes over this indulgent father and chooses the teachable and obedient child Samuel (See Matt. 11:25, I Tim. 4:12, Matt. 21:6). Samuel was faithful to his duties, respectful to his elders and did not boast of his accomplishments. He slept in the Holy place of the “sacred tent” near Eli, for the great Temple was not yet built. As such he is a type for the Christian (see Ps. 27:4). One of Samuel’s duties as the special attendant of Eli was to open the house of God every morning, also to tend the sacred lamp which burned from evening to morning (see Ex. 27:20, 21) and as he attended to these duties God revealed Himself to him (v. 4). Samuel had not yet received a direct revelation, hence he “did not yet know Jehovah.” Thinking at once of the priest Samuel ran to receive orders or to render service. Had he disregarded the voice, in all probability he would not have any further calls (see Prov. 1:24, 25, 28.) God wants, for special service, those who make glad response to His first call (see Isa. 6:8, Luke 9:59-62, Acts 9:6). Three times the call comes and three times Samuel makes reply.

There are three periods in the unfolding life that are most susceptible to the leading of the Holy Spirit—nine to twelve, fourteen and fifteen, seventeen and eighteen—especially if the child has had a religious atmosphere and training.

The teacher needs to be ever alert to take advantage of these opportunities to unfold and enforce the claims of Christ and to challenge an immediate decision of the soul. Happy are they who like Samuel hear and recognize, though it be a progressive revelation, the voice of Jehovah and obey it. There is little need at present for the audible voice for we have the Word and the still small voice of the Holy Spirit. The voice Samuel heard became a vision (v. 15). The Bible everywhere assumes that God speaks to men. We do not find Him so much by searching for Him for He is made known (manifested) in the person of His Son (see I John 1:1, 2; John 17:6). Hudson Taylor, founder of the China Inland Mission, received his call at seventeen. Eli in times past must have heard Jehovah speak, else he would not have recognized who it was that was speaking to Samuel (2:27). Samuel’s call was to serve as a prophet. Our commission is to witness and to serve (Mark 16:15). Samuel received Jehovah’s word not at Eli’s side, but in his own resting place. It is well for us to be sure we are truly hearing the voice of God (John 4).

II. Jehovah’s Verdict, vv. 11-13, 19, 20.

The next chapter following this one tells of the defeat of Israel, the capture of the ark and the death of Eli and his sons. These were the things “at which both the ears of everyone that heareth it shall tingle.” The word of Jehovah stands fast and what He speaks that He performs (see Luke 21:32, Numbers 23:19). The word of Jehovah to Samuel about the house of Eli was one calculated to strike terror and silence into the lad’s heart. The iniquity of the fathers is visited upon the children, so also are the iniquities of the children visited upon the fathers who neglect duty to their children. Eli learns from Samuel Jehovah’s message. Eli was a great and good man submissive to God’s will, but he was a weak man, rather than simply piously resigned. He might better have prayed for mercy and strength to deal with his wicked sons. However, it was too late to change their lives. Judgment came because Eli knew the iniquity of his sons and “restrained them not” (2:27-36). His efforts were weak and ineffectual (2:23-25). A foolishly indulgent parent sacrifices not only the welfare of himself and his child, but endangers the family and the State also. Israel's interests are neglected, Jehovah's worship is degraded, the ark is desecrated, all because of Eli's laxness and indulgence.

"And Samuel grew and Jehovah was with him" (vv. 19, 20; see also Luke 2:52). Jesus also grew normally (Luke 1:80). "When God calls He qualifies; when He qualifies, He calls"—Matthew Henry. Samuel was trained in the House of God to be a great Prophet (1) by the dedication of his parents and the prayers of his mother; (2) by the teaching of Eli the priest of God; (3) by the routine of service in the duties assigned him; (4) by the testing of temptation in his contact with the sons of Eli.

The Death of Eli and His Sons

I Samuel 4:1-13, 18

Golden Text.—"Be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deluding your own selves."—James 1:22, R. V.

All Israel, God's people, soon knew that God was speaking through a new prophet.

I. No Help at Ebenezer, vv. 1, 2. Ebenezer was that place where Samuel later set up the stones of commemoration (I Sam. 7:12). Here the aggressive Philistines overcame, put to rout, and made public shame of the Israelites. Israel had sinned and needed correction (see 7:3, Ps. 106:40, 41). When God's people neglect Him they easily become the prey of their enemies. The church of today often stands, defeated and disgraced, because it harbors sin and sinners in its ranks (see Josh. 7:12).

II. Seeking Help, vv. 3-9. If Israel really desired to know the cause of their discomfiture they did not need to go far to seek it. The trouble was that they were not willing to see and own it (see I Cor. 11:31). The reasoning upon the part of these elders seems to be, "Why have we Israelites been smitten by these Philistines who are not God's chosen people?" We hear this reasoning today, but God would have us search our hearts lest the Lord will not hear us. At Shiloh, Eli is caring for the ark, and with the fatalism and superstition that still governs the ungodly, Israel sends for it that it may save them (v. 3). Their trust was in the ark and not in the God of the ark. Carrying the ark about Jericho trusting in Jehovah, was quite different from harboring the sons of Eli, and expecting that God could not let the ark be captured. The people of God are the saving salt, but "if the salt hath lost its savour," if Hophni and Phinehas bear the ark, nothing but defeat and disgrace can be expected, though the enemy may tremble (v. 8). The Philistines were strong enough because of the weakness of Israel to smite them. They recognized the shouts and remembered the mighty deeds of Jehovah, which exploits would have been repeated had Israel truly turned to God. The Philistines began to exhort themselves, and their call (v. 9) was a good one, and was used later by Paul (I Cor. 16:13).

III. The Lost Battle, vv. 10-11. The two reprobate sons of Eli were slain as a punishment for their sins, and in fulfilment of the Word of God, (2:12; 3:13, 14). Their punishment came in connection with the holy service they had defiled. These bad sons of a good father abused their holy office, profaned the sanctuary and brought the true religion into contempt with the people. Eli was partly at fault, but these young men suffered the fate of those "who hate knowledge" and will "not choose the fear of the Lord." Doubtless the Philistines boasted when they took the ark from the people of God, but chapters five and six are the record of their mistake.

IV. The Death of Eli, vv. 12-18. Eli, now ninety-eight years old, was anxiously awaiting news of the battle, "for his heart trembled for the ark of God." This anxiety was quite unnecessary, (v. 13). Eli is a type of those indulgent parents who refuse to use discipline in the care of their children. A lovable character cannot atone for weakness, nor will remonstrance after habits are firmly fixed atone for failure to bring up the young child aright. Eli's words were ineffectual for they carried with them no note of authority. Careless, insincere parents have no sense of the authority of God are a menace to the land.

The ark after various vicissitudes found an abiding place in the house of Abinidab, whose son Eleazer was sanctified to take charge of it. Later it was taken to Jerusalem, and in the meantime Shiloh passed into oblivion. Two bad boys from a godly home, ruined not only themselves, but their father and his family, and their home town as well.

The Golden Text. That we learn to do by doing is a fundamental principle in pedagogy. Mere human words do not change character. Youth does not acquire purity of character by listening to beautiful statements about the virtues. Religion must be practiced in youth if it is to give strength, courage and comfort in old age. It is not a matter of creed and formula, but a life. Parents today seem to be lax in discipline; too often it is the child that brings up the parent. We need to accustom the child to virtue and obedience, to teach him truth and while at the knee to "honor thy father and thy mother."

While some children of good parents go astray, that is not the rule. A true Christian atmosphere and spirit of service in the home, the Sunday-school and the church are the greatest possible safeguards for the young.

Samuel, the Victorious Leader

I Samuel 7:1-17

Golden Text.—“Hitherto hath Jehovah helped me.”—I Samuel 7:12, R. V.

Having prepared a “guilt offering” (6:4-9), the Philistines started the ark back towards Shiloh. As a punishment for their sacrilege and perhaps for their boastful pride, God punishes the man of Beth-Shemesh and finally the ark finds rest in the house of Abinidab (6:10-21; 7:1, 2). For twenty years Israel was under discipline in bondage (v. 2).

I. “And Samuel Spake. . . Saying.” vv. 3-8. It is possible that at times Samuel was a fugitive, but that he was praying, teaching and preaching “the Word of Jehovah” we are assured. At last Israel was “drawn together” (v. 2, R. V. marg.). Undoubtedly Samuel’s pure life and his faithful witnessing had as much to do with this assembling as did the oppression of the Philistines. Samuel told the people plainly that in order to be delivered from the Philistines Israel must “return unto Jehovah with all their heart.” The putting away (judging) of sin and all idols is the first step of any real, genuine repentance towards God (Isa. 55:7). When Israel adopted Ash-taroath and the “strange gods” they possibly did so with no thought of forsaking Jehovah, but rather with the idea of “enriching” their worship. Such a federation of religions is weakening to the cause of Christ, repugnant to God and results inevitably in the shipwreck of faith (see Matt. 6:24; I John 2:15; Jas. 4:4). Samuel might be called “narrow,” but his exhortation to Israel that they return to the love and worship of Jehovah, to the obedience of His laws with whole-souled devotion, was the first, and the most essential requisite to their freedom. Israel’s response (v. 4) meant a revolt against the Philistines, and the giving up of amusements and profits which might accompany such worship. The word “heart” includes the will, affections, motives and powers of the soul. This was a reformation, not a regeneration (8:8), but such is usually the history of an emotional action. One day, however, we shall see one that will last (see Rom. 11:26). Samuel is a type of Christ as a prophet and also as an intercessor (see Heb. 7:25). Gathering the people at Mizpah (a look-out) he caused the people to look to God. Such a gathering was an evidence of that unity of the people of God which must ever precede prevailing prayer (see Ps. 99:6; Heb. 10:25). The meeting began by a prayer by Samuel who was nearest to God. They then poured out water upon the ground (see 2 Sam. 14:14; Ps. 62:8). Israel also “fasted,” an expression of sorrow for sin which was so deep that they could not eat (see Dan. 9:3; Acts 13:2, 3). They made confession of sin (see Ps. 51:4).

II. “And Samuel Offered. . . a Burnt Offering.” vv. 9-12. Twenty years of bondage caused the Israelites, in their extremity, to turn to Samuel to intercede for them. Christians have a better Intercessor (see I John 2:1; Heb. 7:25; Rom. 8:34). Israel no longer places its trust in an outward symbol such as the ark (4:3). The only ground we have upon which to approach a holy God is the shed blood (Heb. 10:19; John 14:6). This is also a type of entire consecration. The lamb of Samuel’s sacrifice is a type of Christ who entered into God’s presence for us by His own blood (Heb. 9:11-12). In the midst of this procedure the Philistines gave battle (v. 10) even as Satan often makes his fiercest assaults upon us in the midst of our holiest exercises. God “thundered with a great voice” (v. 11, marg.), bringing discomfiture and fear upon the enemy (see I John 5:14). The storm which destroyed the Spanish Armada and saved England; the unusual winds and tides which saved Leyden came in connection with the most earnest prayers (see 2 Kings 19:35). In this we see a fulfillment of Hannah’s prophecy (2:10). In our last lesson Israel was defeated (4:10), now they pursue the Philistines as far as Beth-car and Shen, an unknown place west of Mizpah. Between the latter and Mizpah, Samuel erected a memorial pillar and called it “Ebenezer,” (the stone of help), where twenty years previous Israel had suffered defeat and the ark of God was captured. So this stone was a monument of victory, and also of deliverance from twenty years of bondage. Persecution and corruption have not yet prevailed against the true church of God (see Matt. 16:18). This victory was quite complete but its duration was only that of the days while Samuel judged Israel.

The Heart of the Lesson. This lesson is a great revelation of the power and effectiveness of intercessory prayer. “Moses and Aaron among His priests, and Samuel among them that call upon His name” (Ps. 99:6) seems to place Samuel at the head of Israel’s intercessors. Prayer for others is not only a duty but a privilege and joy as well.

This lesson also emphasizes the need of appreciation of God’s mercies. Abraham erected his altars; Jacob and Joshua erected memorial stones to recall signal blessings; Samuel calls the one he erected Ebenezer, for “Hitherto hath Jehovah helped us.” The best way to banish fear is to recall the experiences of the past which are the warrant for hope.

March 7

Saul Anointed KingI Samuel 9:17-10:1

Golden Text.—“Fear God. Honor the king.” I Peter 2:17.

Because of the acts of Samuel the people petitioned for a king (8:5), and are plainly told what to expect in consequence (8:19). God, however, granted their petition and spoke “in the ear” of Samuel, saying, “I will send thee a man,” and tells him of the work which this man is to undertake (9:15, 16).

I. “Samuel saw Saul,” vv. 17-21. Saul was a man to gaze at and to admire (9:2). His fruitless search for his father’s asses led him to the city where Samuel was residing. There he is advised to consult the “man of God” about his difficulty and Samuel appears in a new light. The word “seer” indicates one who sees the things God makes manifest in dreams (See Num. 24:4-16). The modern term clairvoyant is not the successor of the Old Testament “seer.” He is rather the successor of the false prophet (Jer. 17:14), and the dealer with familiar spirits (I Chron. 10:13, 14; Isa. 8:19, 20; 2 Kings 21:1, 2, 6). Saul did not evidently know Samuel (vv. 16-18). There is no necessary conflict in this account and that recorded in the tenth chapter. Samuel’s warning to the people was useless, and lots were then cast that the people might have a visible token that the choice of this obscure youth was from God.

Samuel took Saul with him for the night to take his mind off his father’s asses and to prepare to receive the word from God. What were a few asses to Saul; he “for whom is all that is desirable in Israel” (v. 20, R. V.)? Christians ought not to set their affections on the poor possessions of earth (Col. 3:1, 2; 2 Cor. 4:18). In response to Samuel’s information, Saul deprecates any greatness, being from an obscure family of one of the smallest of the tribes (v. 21). Such humility gave great promise for Saul’s future usefulness. Such was the mental and spiritual attitude of the man whom God chose to be king (15:17). It was later when pride and power had puffed him up that the kingdom was taken away from him (15:23; 16:1; see Luke 14:11; Heb. 13:1).

II. “Samuel took Saul,” vv. 22-24. Saul was then led into the guest chamber and placed in the chief seat. Read our Lord’s parable found in Luke 14:7-11. Samuel then bade the cook to bring the thigh which was a choice portion especially reserved for those thus honored (Ezek. 24:4). Such a portion belonged to the priest (Lev. 7:32). That which did not belong upon the altar Saul was to eat (v. 24). Samuel and Saul may have had the preference and eaten before other guests (v. 13), and Saul is made acquainted with the special honor conferred upon him.

Following the feast, they return to Samuel’s home, where Saul is conducted to a couch upon the flat house-top (See Acts 10:9). Here Samuel had private conversation with Saul (v. 25, R. V.). This nocturnal conversation reminds us of a similar one which gave to the world God’s most precious summary of His love (John 3:1-16). Such rare experiences are of short duration and the summons to be off came to Saul at the “spring of the day.” Our summons is to those duties which lie between us and our promised crown. There are times for us to be up and away (v. 26), but there are also times when we should hear the command “stand thou still awhile, that I may show thee the word of God” (v. 27).

Samuel poured oil upon Saul’s head. Prophets, priests, kings, and cleansed lepers were so anointed, a type of the Holy Spirit (see I Kings 19:15, 16; Lev. 8:12; 14:2; 16-18; Isa. 61:1; I John 2:20, R. V.). This act was also a symbol of entire consecration to God, and pointed forward to the coming Messiah King whom God Himself would anoint (Ps. 45:7).

Saul was anointed to be “a prince” and to save God’s people (9:16; see Acts 5:31).

Saul’s appointed task was to save Israel out of the hands of the Philistines (see Luke 1:69-71). God’s eye sees the oppression of mankind and His ear is always open to the cry of the poor and needy; of innocent children suffering because of the sins of parents; of men defrauded of justice; of Europe because of blood-lust, and the struggle for commercial supremacy. Mankind is today crying for a king (sometimes it is termed “democracy”) and will not have God to rule over them. Various kings rule in the lives of men—ambition, pleasure, power, commercial supremacy, social accomplishments, but in every case man chooses the harder task-master, even as Israel found Saul to be a cruel oppressor. Saul’s humility rapidly gave place to pride and pride to ambition, ambition to oppression, and finally to disobedience. When our King comes the skilfully constructed scheme of man’s government, wherein graft and pride, ambition and lust, find such a prominent place, will be set aside for a kingdom wherein justice and love will be meted out to every man; one wherein high ideals will become realities.

“HE KNOWS”

I never had a sorrow,
But what my dear Lord chose;
So I force the coming tears back,
With the whispered word, “He knows.”

If the sorrows of my case
Seem peculiar to me,
He hath promised needful grace,
“As thy days thy strength shall be.”

The Gospel in the World

The Peking Y. M. C. A. has a membership of 1,300 Chinese young men.

Twenty-six German missionary societies, represented by 2,115 foreign and 8,766 native workers, are working on the foreign fields.

The Kiukiang city authorities are allowing the Confucian and Buddhist temples of that city to be used for Christian Sunday-schools.

The United Free Church of Scotland has 384 missionaries, 166 wives of missionaries, and 4,700 native workers, in fifteen foreign fields.

Japan has 772 cities with more than 5,000 inhabitants. There are missionaries and evangelists in about 200 of them, leaving 572 cities untouched.

The island of Hainan, off China, has a Presbyterian church membership of about a thousand in three stations. The population of the island is 2,500,000.

Seven mission stations in Basutoland and Barotsiland are without supervision as the result of the recall of missionaries to join their regiments in France.

Kentucky has a Baptist membership of 389,000, which comes but a little short of equaling the number of members of all other denominations, including Catholics.

The American Bible Society circulated in Korea 176,880 Scriptures and portions in 1913, which is twice the number sold in 1912 and four times the number sold in 1911.

The thirty colporteurs of the American Bible Society in Mexico visited 911 towns and villages in 1913 and circulated 23,369 volumes, an increase of nearly 4,000 over the preceding year.

The British and Foreign Bible Society has issued, since 1804, about 260,000,000 books. Nearly one-fifth of its issues last year, about 1,880,000 books, were circulated on the continent of Europe. Of these, 600,000 copies were distributed in Germany, Austria and Hungary. This society has circulated the Scriptures in eighty-three different European languages and dialects.

The "Foreign Field" quotes Milne, who worked with Morrison in China one hundred years ago, as saying: "If all prospers, and God's blessing is upon us, we may expect 1,000 members of the church by the end of one hundred years." Today there are more than 200,000 baptized Christians in China, while 3,500 missionaries are on the field.

According to the Year Book, twenty-eight per cent of the Protestant Christians and adherents to Christianity in China are Presbyterians; twenty-three per cent are Methodists; ten per cent are Lutherans; ten per cent are Anglicans; ten per cent are converts of the China Inland Mission; nearly nine per cent are Baptists; early eight per cent are Congregationalists; the remainder belonging to smaller societies.

MOHAMMEDANS AND CHRIST'S RETURN

Rev. F. A. Steven

In a letter recently received from a lady missionary at Jebba, Nigeria, reference is made to the war, as one of the indications that the day of our Lord's return is drawing near, and she adds the surprising news that the Mohammedans in that district are speaking among themselves, and to the foreigners, to the same effect, though without the gladness and hope of the Christian. They have come to believe that this war marks the end time, and that just as soon as it closes Jesus will return.

From China there comes an even more remarkable story of the changing attitude of some at least among the Moslems of that land. Whilst there has been a great effort made to revive the activity of the Islamic propaganda in parts of China, and their missionaries are trying to offset the success of Christian missionaries, by the preaching of the Koran, there has developed a new sect among them which advocates the reading of the Bible. Mrs. O. Burgess writes from Hingan Fu in Shen-si that her husband "gets good crowds in the Preaching Hall and has lately noticed numbers of Moslems listening very well." "One gentlemen told Mr. Burgess that their priest had exhorted the followers of this faith to reach christian books, as Jesus had and still has wonderful power, and is coming again for His people." She adds, "This is quite a new development and we pray that many who read may learn to love and serve our Lord." In this prayer, will the reader join?

The American Board reports that its missionaries in Turkey are keeping up their work as usual, they and their work being fully safeguarded. Fifteen new missionaries, ready to sail for that field, are being held back, not because of conditions on the field, but because of the dangers of travel at present.

The Methodist Episcopal Church (South) has 43 missionaries to Korea, counting those under appointment and those on furlough. The native force consists of seven ordained men and twenty-three licensed preachers. The church membership numbers about 6,000, with something over 1,200 probationers. Contributions for the year amounted to $5,611.

During the last three years the inhabitants of Si Ma Ts'un, a wealthy market town in China, has sent request after request to the missionaries at Fenchow for a preacher of Christianity. Last year one of the missionaries visited the town, and one after another the people came to him, pleading for a missionary. One old man past seventy years of age said he had been waiting fourteen years for the church to come, after having been convinced of the truth of Christianity in 1900 through reading, but never had had the opportunity to learn what the teachings of Christianity really were.

Mrs. Carl Gowman writes from Wutingchow, China: "A thing that has been of much interest to us has been the preparation for this year's weddings. The Miao have come to think that nothing but a Christian wedding will do, so to have an evangelist at each wedding, the missionary sets the dates. There will be at least seventy weddings this year. Last week a man came asking for a date for his brother's wedding. Upon inquiry it was found that his brother was leader of the Christians in his village, had 'lived with his wife,' as he put it, for over ten years and had several children; yet he had never had a marriage ceremony, so he wanted it now."

When Colporteur Kaschin was traveling last year to Irbit Fair (Western Siberia) he met a peasant who asked him for two copies of the New Testament. "With pleasure," answered Kaschin, "as many copies as you like." Handing our colporteur the money, the peasant said: "When I bought a copy of this book from you in 1910 I was a different man from what I am now. The effect of studying the Scriptures was that my life became purer and my neighbors noticed the improvement. Now I am buying these copies for some of my neighbors, who told me, if I ever met a colporteur, to be sure and get New Testaments for them."—"The Bible in the World."

The "Foreign Mail," giving a report of Sherwood Eddy's meetings in Peking recently, says that more than 2,000 inquirers of the student class expressed their desire to study the Bible in classes. The twelve Chinese newspapers of the city published reports of the lectures, and many of them are continuing a series of articles on Christianity. Over one hundred newspapers in China are already co-operating in this Christian campaign.

At the Foreign Missions Conference, held the second week in January at Garden City, N. Y., statistics were given showing that the income of American foreign mission boards for 1914 was $17,168,611, an increase over 1913 of $1,124,980, but $148,755 short of the total for 1912. Contributions from natives on the fields occupied by American missionaries amounted to $4,243,967. The list of American missionaries numbered 9,969. The number baptized during the year was 159,286 as compared with 121,811 for 1913. This report also gave the number of churches as 9,946, colleges, theological seminaries and training schools as 606 and other schools numbering 12,969, with a total attendance for all schools of 547,730.

Mr. H. G. McMaking, a former student of the Moody Bible Institute now working in Chekiang Province, China, writes under date of Nov. 5th concerning the work as follows: "Our conference for Christians lasted three days, about ninety Christians attending. The different Biblical themes were taken by Chinese and foreigners, and many spoke afterwards of the blessing they had received. Some Christians bought literature for distribution among their neighbors, thus manifesting their love, for this year money is scarce on account of partial failure of crops. Many came a distance of forty English miles, and all ate their own rice. This gives evidence of the power of God's word in their lives, for by nature they are probably the most mercenary people in the world. This week we attended an idol worship and fair, there being several thousands of people gathered together. The idol is over forty feet in height and is named Lu-ching. He is worshiped because many years ago he is said to have brought a river into being, thus bringing good crops and prosperity to the people. We preached to many hundreds during the day and sold many Gospels. We also passed through a village in which the people were making a thank-offering to an idol for the recent rains which had fallen. The offering consisted of one thousand basins of food, made up of very many varieties. The people afterward eat the food. This will give you some idea of the heathen darkness prevailing here."

Romans 1:16

1. Because of what it is—"The power of God."

A PRECIOUS PROMISE OF DIVINE DIRECTION

Prov. 3:6

1. The Blessing Promised. "He shall direct thy paths."
 1. The nature of the blessing—divine direction. God's personal intervention, supervision and guidance. The Bible is full of illustrations of God directing the paths of His people as a whole and as individuals.
 2. The need of the blessing. This is the supply of a need.
 - a. In daily "humdrum" experience. We need God in the commonplace as as well as
 - b. In questions of duty. He will answer the question: "What shall I do?"
 - c. In the matter of our eternal destiny. He will answer the question: "Where am I going?" (Ps. 73:24).
- II. The Condition to be Met. "In all thy ways acknowledge Him."
 1. We must acknowledge God as Spectator of our lives (Gen. 16:13; Prov. 5:21).
 2. We must acknowledge God as the Sovereign who may dispose of our lives as He chooses.

He may blot out us or our sins, just as He chooses.

"All souls are mine" (Ezek. 18:4).

"My glory. I will not give to another" (Isa. 48:11).
 3. We must acknowledge God as Saviour who alone can bless our lives (Isa. 45:22; Rom. 10:9, 10).—John S. Hall.

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN?

Seven Elements

1. In Faith, a Believer.
He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned (Mark 16:16).
2. In Knowledge, a Disciple.
Then Jesus said to those Jews which believed on him, if ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed. (John 8:31).
3. In Character, a Saint.
To all that are in Rome, beloved of God, called to be saints; Grace to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ (Rom. 1:7).
4. In Influence, a Light.
Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid (Matt. 5:14).
5. In Conflict, a Soldier.
Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ (2 Tim. 2:3).
6. In Communion, a Friend.
Henceforth I call you not servants; for the servant knoweth not what his lord doeth; but I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you (John 15:15).
7. In Progress, a Pilgrim.
These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and embraced them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth (Heb. 11:13; 1 Pet. 2:11).

—Jas. E. Rogers.

ETERNAL LIFE

(1) The life is called "eternal" because it was from the eternity which is past unto the eternity which is to come—it is the life of God revealed in Jesus Christ who is God (John 1:4; 5:26; 1 John 1:1, 2). (2) This life of God, which was revealed in Christ, is imparted in a new birth by the Holy Spirit acting upon the word of God, to every believer on the Lord Jesus Christ (John 3: 3-15). (3) The life thus imparted is not a new life except in the sense of human possession; it is still "that which was from the beginning." But the recipient is a "new creation" (2 Cor. 5:17; Gal. 6:15), (4) The life of God which is in the believer is an unsevered part of the life which eternally was, and eternally is, in Christ Jesus—one life, in Him and in the believer—Vine and branches; Head and members—(1 Cor. 6; 17; Gal. 2; 20; Col. 1:27; 3: 3, 4; 1 John 5:11, 12, John 15:1-5; 1 Cor. 12: 12-14).—"Scofield Reference Bible."

GOD'S LAST INVITATION

"Whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely."—Rev. 22:17.

Introduction.—This is God's last invitation. With it this great Book of invitations closes.

I. What is the Water of Life?

1. The water of life is the Holy Spirit (John 7:37-39).

2. The Holy Spirit is a divine person who is ready to come into any man's being and take possession of it and rule it and fill it with joy and peace and beauty.

II. Why the Holy Spirit is called the Water of Life.

1. Because He satisfies thirst (John 4:14).

2. Because He not only satisfies but brings life (John 4:14).

The moment you take the Holy Spirit you get everlasting life.

III. How to Get this Water of Life.

"Whosoever will, let him take."

Two words to emphasize then, "will" and "take."—R. A. Torrey.

PAUL'S PRAYER FOR THE PHILIPPIANS

"And this I pray," etc.—Phil. 1:9-12.

There are three things Paul here desires for his converts:

I. The Development of Their Love.

1. That it may abound.

2. That it might be intelligent "in all knowledge."

3. That it might be wise "in all judgment."

4. That it might be discriminating, "that ye may approve things that are excellent."

II. The Growth of Their Holiness. Two particulars are spoken of:

1. Sincerity. Opposed to all shams, devoid of all Phariseism and hypocrisy.

2. Inoffensiveness. No part of the Christian character is more beautiful than its meekness.

III. The Manifestation of Their Fruitfulness. No mere useless life came up to the apostle's ideal. Such brings neither glory to God nor honor to religion. The word suggests:

1. That righteousness is the end of religion.

2. That this righteousness comes by life in Christ.

3. That the consummation of all is the honor of the great King.—"Twentieth Century Pastor."

SUGGESTIONS FOR SERMON PREPARATION

1. We must think ourselves empty.

2. Then we must read ourselves full.

3. Then we must write ourselves clear.

4. We must pray ourselves keen.—"The Work of the Ministry."

AN UNKIND WORD

The moment it had left my lips

I sighed for its recalling,

But bitter tears were then in vain,

Howe'er contritely falling.

I know 'twas but a thoughtless word,

Unmeant though fraught with meaning;

But one, alas, remembers yet,

Though years are intervening.

His only answer was a look,

A silent anguish leaving,

That like an arrow pierced my heart,

And long has been my grieving.

The years have taught him to forgive,

But there is no forgetting;

I know he is not quite the same,

Although the change regretting.

How like an arrow is a word,

At random often speeding,

To find a target never meant

And set some heart a-bleeding.

Oh! pray that heaven may seal the lips

Ere unkind words are spoken,—

For heaven itself can not recall,

When once that seal is broken.

—Arthur Lewis Tubbs.

SOME REASONS WHY PREACHERS FAIL

We do not get close enough to men because we do not get near enough to God.

1. We are drawn away by the gravitation of the world; its manner, thought, feeling, purposes.

2. By the fascination of the glittering; the praise of men, not honor of God.

3. By the stupefying influences of our office.

—J. H. Jowett.

THE GOSPEL

In Miniature

GOD so loved the world, that He gave His Only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him

Should not Perish, but have

Everlasting

Life—John iii:16.

This is a wonderful verse. It has been the means of the salvation of thousands of souls.

HAS IT BEEN THE MEANS OF YOURS?

"THE QUESTION"

Were the whole world good as you—not an atom better—

Were it just as pure and true,
Just as pure and true as you;
Just as strong in faith and works;
Just as free from crafty quirks;
All extortion, all deceit;
Schemes its neighbors to defeat;
Schemes its neighbors to defraud;
Schemes some culprit to applaud—

Would this world be better?

If the whole world followed you—followed to the letter—

Would it be a nobler world,
All deceit and falsehood hurled
From it altogether;
Malice, selfishness, and lust
Banished from beneath the crust
Covering human hearts from view—
Tell me, if it followed you,

Would the world be better?

—"The British Weekly."

SIMPLE BIBLE PREACHINGA Footnote to the Secret of the Pulpit Power of Alexander Maclaren

At the age of thirty-three Dr. Maclaren was called to occupy one of the most influential pulpits in Great Britain. At that time he explained his ambition as a preacher, which was to concentrate his whole strength upon the proclamation of the gospel from the pulpit. "Many people in the congregation," he wrote, "wish simple Bible preaching. Now I feel that I have a great deal more sympathy with this class of people than I had. I have learned, I shall never unlearn, lessons that after all our sole power lies in the true, simple, sincere setting forth of the living Christ, and I abjure for ever more all the rubbish of intellectual preaching. I would rather serve out slops for the people to live upon than lumps of stone cut into the form of loaves."

For over forty years, Maclaren occupied the same pulpit, and in this quotation from one of his early letters lies the secret of the permanency and the breadth of his appeal. His first aim in preaching was to speak to men of Christ in a language which they could understand.

His method of preaching was almost informal. "I depend upon the moment for the word," he said. But for the substance of what he had to say he continually labored and studied. There was no preacher in England during the forty years of Maclaren's ministry in Manchester who was better informed on the latest literary movements. Throughout his life he kept up his habits of scholarship, reading the Bible in Hebrew and Greek, continually seeking for deeper and truer meanings.

Sir William Robertson Nicoll has described his pulpit appearance. "The printed page cannot give you the figure of the speaker, the high bearing, as of a Highland chieftain, the fearlessness and tenderness of a prophet of God. What a speech! The superb finish, the ease and grace that marked it were unforgettable. No living man can come within measurable distance of it and yet all was effortless."

To him preaching was the highest effort on man's part to serve as a vehicle for the expression of the eternal and the divine. Anything less than that was not preaching.—"Monday Morning."

THE PERSISTENT GRIP OF SIN

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan was watching the carcass of a sheep floating down the swift current of the Niagara River above the Falls. There was an eagle which had her nest in a tree not far away. She saw the sheep, and, swooping down upon the carcass, began to tear it with her talons and to devour it. The falls were not far away. She thought that she could feast upon the carcass until the last moment and then fly away.

But there was an element in the situation that she had not reckoned upon. The air was cold and her claws froze fast to the fleece of the sheep. She did not know of this until she had reached the very edge and the roar of the falling water was heard all about her. Then she spread her wings, but she could not withdraw her talons from the fleece, and eagle and carcass went over the fearful precipice and were dashed to pieces on the rocks below.

When Mr. Morgan told his story in a sermon, he cried out with telling emphasis, "At first we cling to sin and then sin clings to us."

This is always true. At first sin seems to be as passive as the carcass of the sheep was to the eagle, but the time comes when it awakes and seizes us and will not let us go.—Exchange.

DAILY BIBLE READING

"I am sorry for the men who do not read the Bible every day; I wonder why they deprive themselves of the strength and of the pleasure. It is one of the most singular books in the world, for every time you open it, some old text that you have read a score of times suddenly beams with a new meaning. There is no other book that I know of, of which this is true; there is no other book that yields its meaning so personally, that seems to fit itself so intimately to the very spirit that is seeking its guidance."—Woodrow Wilson.

Notes and Suggestions

SAILORS TO RECEIVE BIBLES

Every sailor passing through the Panama Canal will receive a Bible, it was stated, by James Wood, president of the American Bible Society. Colonel George W. Goethals, governor of the Panama Canal Zone, has selected a place at Bilboa, on the Pacific side, for the establishment of a Bible distributing station, Mr. Wood said, and when Colonel Goethals returns to Panama in January from Washington Mr. Wood will accompany him.

According to the present plan, half a dozen men with motor launches will distribute the books, which will be printed in many languages.—"The Public Ledger."

CONGRESSIONAL VOTE ON NATIONAL PROHIBITION

The officers of the national legislative committee of the Anti-Saloon League of America have sent out this statement:

"The temperance forces of the country have reason to be deeply gratified by the results of this day. It is the first time in the history of the Republic that the question of national prohibition has gotten upon the floor of either branch of Congress. The fact that the first effort should show a clear majority of eight, exclusive of pairs, with both floor leaders, the chairman of the Rules Committee and the prestige of the President and the Secretary of State invoked against us, in view of the further fact that no member of the present Congress was elected on this issue, is exceedingly gratifying."

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN ON THE SALOON

Mr. Bryan, according to a dispatch from Lincoln, Neb., will say in a coming issue of "The Commoner," reference being made to the recent vote on a national constitutional amendment:

"It only requires a majority to pass laws, and the liquor interests see in the vote on the amendment the beginning of the end of their supremacy. The death knell of the saloon has been sounded, and it is only a question of a few years when the business, now made an outlaw, will be driven from the highways and forced into secret places, where, after a few years more of fugitive life, it will meet its death. From now on the liquor business can consider itself a fugitive from justice, living in constant fear of arrest and punishment."

For the information of our foreign readers we would say that Mr. Bryan is Secretary of State of the United States.

REVIVAL AMONG BRITISH SOLDIERS

Mr. George T. B. Davis writes that a remarkable Bible revival is in progress among the British soldiers quartered on Salisbury Plain and elsewhere in England. Already more than 10,000 of the troops on Salisbury Plain alone have joined the Pocket Testament League, and have agreed to carry a Testament with them and to read a chapter daily, and over 3,000 have declared their acceptance of Christ and enlisted under the banner of the King of Kings.

The movement began some time ago when Charles M. Alexander, the well-known Gospel song leader, accompanied by two soloists, a pianist, and a representative of the Pocket Testament League, spent five days travelling from one Y. M. C. A. marquee to another on the Plain, holding Gospel meetings. From the beginning the meetings were a great success. The soldiers crowded into the marquees, and when the tents were filled, they let down the sides and the men stood outside during the service.

LORD ROBERTS AND THE BIBLE

It is said that the late Lord Roberts of England sent New Testaments to all the British soldiers and sailors with the following message over his signature in each copy: "I ask you to put your trust in God. He will watch over and strengthen you. You will find this little book guidance when you are in health, comfort when you are in sickness, and strength when you are in adversity."—"Watchman and Examiner."

PHILADELPHIA CHURCH MEMBER-SHIP

Philadelphia has a larger Presbyterian and Methodist communicant membership than any other city in the country. There are 54,643 Presbyterians and 49,163 Methodists.—“The Continent.”

LUTHERAN GROWTH IN THE UNITED STATES

The Lutherans are growing rapidly in America. There are today a total of sixty-five synods in this country. They are subdivided into 304 conferences, comprised of a total of 14,794 congregations served by 9,352 pastors. The grand total of confirmed members is 2,352,385. Lutherans have church property valued at $99,019,621. They gave for benevolent purposes during the past year a total of $3,214,644.02 and for local work $13,489,913. Too often we think of the Lutherans as newcomers. It is true that their ranks have been greatly augmented by immigrants. But let us not forget the recent celebration of the 250th anniversary of the beginning of Lutheran work in New York City.

WAS C. A. BRIGGS ANTIQUATED?

The “Christian Observer” in noting the recent death of Rev. C. A. Briggs, D.D., who was some years ago suspended from the ministry of the Presbyterian church because of his liberal views, says: “It had been known for some time that his younger colleagues and the great body of the students in Union Seminary regarded him as antiquated and out of joint with the times, because of his belief in the Virgin Birth of Jesus and his fidelity to other articles of the historic faith.” It also says that “he had been greatly distressed at the conditions in the seminary and the radical views held by teachers and students at the present time.”

BIBLE STUDY AT WEST POINT

A bishop of a church was speaking at West Point not so very long ago, expressing his regret that students in college are so little interested in the Bible. He was somewhat confounded to find at the close of his service a group of cadets who came up to inform him that for ten years there had been from 200 to 300 of the West Point men studying the Bible each week in voluntary group classes at the Academy, using regular courses of Bible study prepared for the purpose. And this is happening at an institution where the students have less than an hour a day to themselves. The cadets are leaders of small groups numbering about ten men each, while the chaplain and one or two of the instructors meet these student teachers beforehand, preparing them for their important leadership.—“Christian Work.”

“SKY PILOT,” FRANCIS E. HIGGINS, DEAD

Rev. Francis E. Higgins died at Sherburne, Can., Jan. 4. His great work was among the lumber-jacks of the great northwest of the United States. For many years he tramped from camp to camp preaching the gospel. He was strong of body, and his strong right arm and fist were sometimes called into action to preserve order in his congregations. He had a big heart and won many a lumber-jack to the better life and to Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour. The editor of “The Presbyterian Banner,” thus speaks of him:

“He was dead in earnest and flamed with fervency, conviction leaped out of him in burning contagious words, a great heart in him throbbed in sympathy with the temptations and weaknesses of the men he knew, and he drew them to himself in wonderful confidence and devotion. He was rough in apparel and ready in speech, but a great fine soul shone through all the outer trappings of his life and shed the radiance and beauty of a Christlike spirit around him.”

A SUGGESTION FOR UNIVERSAL PEACE

High among the peaks of the Andes, between Argentina and Chile, there is a great bronze statue of the Prince of Peace. In the year 1900 those two countries were going to war about the rectification of their frontier, but at Easter a sermon was preached in Buenos Aires on peace. It made an impression in the whole country. It passed beyond the Andes into Chile itself, and there another preacher took up the burden and preached peace, and that sermon again passed all through the country of Chile. Both governments were overwhelmed with petitions from all classes of the population that peace should be made, and that an agreement should be reached between the contending parties and Edward VII undertook to act as arbitrator. The treaty was signed, the frontier was corrected, the armies were reduced, and the great arsenal of Chile was turned into a school of agriculture. That statue was made of the bronze guns of the forts, and the soldiers and the sailors carried it up, 11,000 feet, and planted it there in March, 1904. It was unveiled in the presence of a great concourse, and of set purpose the soldiers of either side camped on the territory of the other, and then, at a given moment, the whole multitude knelt down and prayed for universal peace. On the pedestal of that great bronze statue of the Redeemer are written these words: “Sooner shall these mountains crumble to dust than Argentines and Chileans break the peace, which, at the feet of Christ the Redeemer, they have sworn to maintain.”

J. M. G.

Misunderstood, by H. D. Kennedy.

As opposed to that feeling of utter loneliness which comes at times, to everyone set apart for Christian service, this book is an inspiration. To those who have permitted the "loneliness" rather than their "high calling in Christ Jesus" to master them, it is a clear call to action. On the other hand, there is expressed throughout the book a note of solemn warning against accepting the voice of the people of the age as the voice of God. These thoughts are not expressed in the form "Thou shalt not," but, positively, through the purpose, life and ministry of Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

The title of the book might well be different. It has a sound of the melodramatic, which does not harmonize with the subject matter.

Mind and Spirit. A Study in Psychology, by Thomas Kirby Davis, D. D.

The book contains five chapters 1. A Personal Reminiscence; II, Revelation; III, True Psychology; IV, Second Birth and a New Life; V, Holy Spirit of Promise, with an addenda.

The author shows a mental and spiritual poise which is refreshing to the reader. One lays down the book with the feeling that the author has spoken out of his heart, with a conviction that is born of a life of experience. One, however, cannot fail to be impressed with the feeling that he has not gone far enough. The reader feels that he is essentially a trichotomist, yet so far as terminology is concerned he remains a dichotomist.

This book is to be commended for its reverent spirit, and along with literature of its class, one could freely grant its having a place.

"Current Events," by Arno C. Gaebelein, Editor of "Our Hope," Author of "The Annotated Bible," etc.

Mr. Gaebelein has put earnest Christians under real obligations to him by compiling in book form the intelligent and outspoken editorials on current events which have appeared in "Our Hope" from time to time during the past eight years. They touch on politics, social conditions, modern delusions, religious apostasy, and especially recent archaeological confirmations of the Bible, in such a way as to be most helpful not only to laymen, but pastors and Christian workers of every description. While looking through the volume, the thought arose as to what a blessing it would be to our missionaries on the frontiers and in heathen lands. It is neither large nor expensive; why not send it as a New Year gift far and wide?

Worry and Nervousness, or the Science of Self-Mastery, by William S. Sadler, M. D.

At the outset it is but due to say that a layman is always at a disadvantage in attempting to review a book written by a member of a profession. He is likely on the one hand to fail in appreciation of the real merits of the book, and on the other hand to misunderstand its declarations.

The book contains two parts: Part I is a story of the nervous states; Part II, is a treatment of the nervous states. The book shows on the part of the author wideness of experience and keenness of penetration. While it will doubtless be of help to some, it will also be of injury to others. To this particular danger the author has repeatedly called attention.

The author has most of the way through the volume made a wrong use of "faith," making it to mean little more at least than simply a frame of mind. This he in part corrects toward the end of the book. Many of its readers may, however, fail to note the correction.

Properly read and understood in the light of the author's viewpoint, the book is to be commended.

Mr. Powers was a well-known gospel singer, who first came out into the work with the Chapman-Alexander campaign in New York. He then labored with Dr. Gray off and on for a year or two. Edwin R. Dow and party began a meeting at Chariton, Ia., during the holidays. The interest at the beginning was not deep, but on the second Monday night the M. Fife Brothers began, the first Sunday in January, at Falls City, Nebr. They report a good interest in the whole community, and it is hoped as a result of the evangelistic work in that place the territory will be voted dry. The evangelists closed a campaign before the holidays in Terre Haute, Ind., where about 800 people joined the churches.

C. E. Crawford spent a day in Joliet with Peter McCarty, superintendent of the Morning Star Mission, speaking both afternoon and evening. There was a good attendance and five men came forward at the close of the meeting. Mr. McCarty has had much encouragement during the past year in the work; nearly 500 men have confessed Christ.

Archie E. Laraway writes from Peabody, Kan., that at the end of the first week of the meetings the outlook was very encouraging. The tabernacle was packed the first Sunday night and the cottage prayer meetings also were excellent. Mr. Laraway is working with Mr. Rayburn. At their previous meeting in Dexter, Ia., nearly 200 were added to the two churches of that town.

Good reports reach us of Dr. Henry W. Stough's meetings at Altoona, Pa., where he began Dec. 27. His former meeting at Harrisburg was the greatest campaign he has yet conducted, the tabernacle being the second largest built, seating over 9,000 people, and with a chorus of 1,000. There were over 7,000 professions—about one-tenth of the population of the city—or the same proportion of confessions that "Billy" Sunday had in Des Moines.

"God has richly blessed Dr. Charles Reign Scoville and party in the union tabernacle meeting at Aurora, Mo. Up to the present (January 21) 1,558 people have lined up for Christ. The campaign has spread out to the surrounding towns. We close here January 31 and open at Akron, O., Feb. 7. Dr. Scoville will have twelve workers with him."—Harold R. Coffin.

J. Q. Brown writes as follows: "Just closed a very successful two weeks revival effort at Rippey, Ia. In this short meeting there was manifestation of God's presence and power from the very beginning. The meeting resulted in 86 coming forward to accept Christ. Many of these were prominent men of the town and community. The pastors of the Methodist and Baptist churches did the preaching. I had a fine chorus of enthusiastic young people. Mrs. Brown's large junior chorus added much to the music and was quite an attraction in the meeting. We are just beginning a meeting with the Calvary Baptist Church, Omaha, Neb. Dr. J. A. Maxwell, the pastor, is preaching."

Mahanoy City, Pa., has 16,000 inhabitants, about 9,000 of whom are Catholics—Roman and Greek. There are 168 licensed saloons in the place—one for every 96 of the population. Of course the Evangelical Protestant churches are neither numerous nor strong. Some of them got together and resolved upon a union campaign. Dr. L. W. Munhall was called to conduct it. A tabernacle, large enough to accommodate 2,000, was erected.

The campaign lasted five and a half weeks. Upwards of 600 persons, from all classes of the community, including 21 Catholics, were converted, the church greatly revived and all departments of church work wonderfully stimulated.

H. L. Stephens and H. E. Storrs have had a very good season, beginning at Watervliet and Coloma, Mich., Sept. 13 to Oct. 11, following these meetings up at South Haven, Mich., from Nov. 1 to Dec. 6. At the former place there were 426 converts. There has been a very marked change in the spiritual life of all the churches and community where these evangelists have been working. Five divorce cases were prevented. After closing the meetings at South Haven the business men of Watervliet asked the evangelists to return and give another week of meetings. In this last effort there were fifty-four converts. The evangelists then went to Alexandria, Ind., where they were engaged from Dec. 27 to Jan. 31.

FACULTY ENGAGEMENTS

Dr. Gray gave the inspirational address at the opening of the Evening Classes Tuesday, January 5, his theme being "What is Christian Unity?"

He also took part in the Christian Workers' Conference at Grand Rapids, Mich., under the auspices of Mel Trotter's Rescue Mission. In the class-room he lectured on Bible Doctrine as well as Bible Synthesis.

Mr. Sellers addressed a meeting in Muncie, Ind., Sunday, January 17, under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. of that place.

Mr. Sutcliffe will conduct a Bible Institute at Charleston, W. Va., January 24-30.

Mr. Hammontree was in Oakdale, Ia., in meetings during the latter part of December and the first part of January.

OPENING OF WINTER TERM

The winter term began Thursday January 7, with the prayer hour. The enrolment of students in the Day Classes, as compared with that of the fall term at the same date, was as follows:

	Fall Term	Winter Term
Men	361	375
Women	204	224
Total	565	599

The enrolment of the Evening Classes for both men and women was 126, which was 24 more than last year at the same time.

SPECIAL LECTURES

During January two lectures were given, one at the 11 o'clock hour, and one before the Union Bible Class, by the Rev. D. S. Adam, professor of church history and systematic theology in Ormond College, University of Melbourne, Australia.

The Rev. P. W. Crannell, president of the Baptist Theological Seminary, Kansas City, Kan., lectured at the Institute January 26-30. His subjects were: "Foreign Missions as a Life Investment," "The Bible as Literature," "The Value of the Uniform Lessons," "Fishers of Men," "Winning Assets in Christian Work."

Prof. George L. Robinson, D. D., of McCormick Theological Seminary will be at the Institute for an hour seven Friday mornings beginning February 12. He will lecture the first four Fridays on "Biblical Geography," and the last three on "Biblical Archaeology." He will also take the eleven o'clock hour on February 6, speaking on "The Trial of Jesus Christ."

EXTENSION WORKERS

In January the workers of this department were engaged as follows: Frances C. Allison, with Bob Jones, Noblesville, Ind.; George E. Guille, Bible classes in Warsaw, Ind., Steubenville, O., and Crowley, La.; C. P. Meeker, evangelistic meetings in Marcellus, Mich., and Odesa, Minn.; John C. Page, Hermosa Beach, Cal. Miss Angy Manning Taylor has not yet been able to resume her work.

REUNIONS

The Moody Institute students of St. Louis and vicinity have recently had two reunions, the last being held at the Euclid Avenue Baptist church on New Year's night, at which time the following permanent organization was effected: T. Bertrand Frary, '99, president; Frank Moss, '11, secretary-treasurer; Robert L. Evans, '04, vice-president. There were about fifteen persons present at each of these meetings.

In the account given of the reunion at Adrian, Mich., appeared the name of C. B. Hawkins, '09, Thompsonville, among those present. This should have read, William Parker, '09, Thompsonville.

MARRIED WOMEN'S GUILD

For nearly a year past, the wives of the married students have been coming together weekly in what is known as the Married Women's Guild. A fellowship meeting has been arranged for them and a class for Bible study, followed by other classes in Hygiene, Home Nursing and Household Management, all of which are entirely free.

During the same period classes are held for the children of the married students whose ages run from 5 to 12 years, while those younger are cared for in the nursery of the Moody Church.

The work is under the general direction of Mrs. Gray, who is aided by some of the wives of the trustees and faculty and other ladies of the Institute council. It has proven of much practical value to the women for whom it is particularly intended.

A MOODY STUDENT IN THE BALKANS

Rev. Paul L. Kishkoff, '08, evangelical pastor and editor of "The Christian World," Varna, Bulgaria, writes of his work as follows:

"Just now we are in the midst of a great revival. This city never has seen such things before in all its history. The whole city is stirred up. While I give the invitation after every sermon preached, the altar is crowded with sinners crying for salvation. Glory be to God, many souls are converted. Last Sunday we took into membership twenty-four men and women. Many young men accepted Christ and now are studying for preachers in our missionary school. I have preached sermons to fallen women, and many of them came to the altar. Praise God for all He has done and still is doing. In this revival I have had some good experiences, of which I would like to tell everybody who writes to me.

"Will you permit me to tell you some of our needs. I know there are people who are looking for some chance to help. Three of the newly converted boys are studying for preachers. The church supports one of them. The other two I am providing for, as I promised them that I will try to find some good Christians in America who will donate funds for their school expenses. They are accepted in the school for 120 francs ($24) each per year. So they need for this year $48. If you see any chance to get some help for these boys, I think you will have a part in our revival here. May God move the heart of somebody to donate this fund.

"If you have some old books and pictures out of use, send them to me. They will help us a great deal."

Ethel Closson, Soprano Singer

THE CLOSSON SISTERS

Misses Mary and Ethel Closson, '13, evangelistic singers, are being greatly used of God in conducting evangelistic campaigns. Soon after graduating from the Institute they received a call to assist in meetings in Pennsylvania, following up Mr. Sunday's work in Wilkes Barre.

They organize and train a choir for the meetings, handle all the service but the sermon, which is preached by neighboring pastors or an employed evangelist. They conduct cottage prayer-meetings, afternoon meetings for children, open-air and shop meetings. They have even organized evangelistic parties for special tabernacle campaigns, and conducted the "Ingathering" services which followed them. The secret of their success is largely attributed to the fact that they are not only gifted singers themselves, but are good conductors and organizers as well. Seldom do young evangelists meet with such immediate success as that which has marked the efforts of the Closson sisters. Their future engagements are Dorranceton, Pa., January 17-31, and Chesapeake City, Pa., February 7-28.

Mary E. Logan, '04, has recently completed ten years of service as home missionary in North Carolina under the Presbyterian board. Her headquarters are at Pensacola.

John W. Mahoney, '04, and George F. Orloff, present student, spent two weeks at Lanes, Ill., with Pastor Filkins of the First Christian Church. There were over forty converts.

He will assist in opening up new activities for the students in shops, jails, missions, etc., and in observing their work. He will also accompany groups of students in places of assignment and induct them into the work, co-operating with the director in keeping in touch with the various fields of labor.

J. R. Smith, '90, is pastor of the Olive Branch Congregational Church, St. Louis, Mo., where Percy Spangler, '12, pastor of the Baptist church at Collinsville, Ill., gave an illustrated lecture on "The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, its Work," and a brief sketch on the "Life of D. L. Moody, its Founder."

Harriet Carstens, '11, is assistant in the Union Mission, Charleston, W. Va. The mission has a kindergarten school, a children's nursery with forty children, also a men's and women's department. Twenty-five children were adopted from the mission during the past year. Through its efforts two young men are now studying for the ministry, and another mission has been started in Huntington, W. Va.

Adelaide L. Stone, '92, is doing missionary work at Knob, a little mining camp in the mountains of northern California, 2,700 feet above sea level, and sixty miles from a railroad. She writes: "I have had two terms of service on the foreign field, first in Venezuela, S. A., and second in Puerto Rico, but I have found a deeper depth of wickedness in this camp than I ever knew of in those heathen lands. Yet in the midst of it all there are a few hungry hearts and it is a joy to minister to them.

Percy W. Stephens, '11, pastor of the First Baptist Church, Jacksonville, Ill., writes that recently while Russell's Photo Drama was being shown in Jacksonville, he was led to preach a series of sermons on Christ's second coming and also distribute freely the colportage tract, "Beware." He reports a wonderful victory, his church being crowded, many people attending from a distance; while at the Russell meetings the attendance was almost nil before the course had been completed.

DIED

Arthur J. Barnes, '95, at Pasadena, Cal.

Mrs. Louise E. Barnes, writes of the home-going as follows: "Although confined to the bed two years, and for three years unable to walk, his life grew brighter and brighter until a few days before his departure, when he cried out, 'Is this the beginning of heaven?' He seemed to be so near the other world that he caught glimpses of its glory and held converse with his Lord. 'He is true! Oh, He is true! and he calls me his child,' were the words that came from his glad but feeble lips. Just before he sank into unconsciousness, a look of great joy came into his face and he cried, 'Christ is here!' Oh, it is worth everything to have such a glad home-coming. The Moody Bible Institute helped bring this victory into our lives."

Dr. W. L. Watkinson said some preachers have the gift of prayer; but he said that every preacher should certainly think about his prayers before he enters the pulpit, and then added: "My own practice is, sometimes, to ponder the value and object of the act, sometimes the example of our Lord Himself, and sometimes to study the prayers of men who are accounted masters of the art."

A TESTIMONY AND A PLEA

The Untold Usefulness of a Book

Who can tell what help the healthy book in the home has been? It is a priceless boon to have ready to hand a good book for use in our leisure moments, to stimulate thought and to kindle the fire of noble deeds—above all, the Book of books.

The Influence of the Personal Visit

There are many living in scattered hamlets in our countryside that look forward to the visits of the colporter, and in addition to the book there is the personal word spoken with the one object, of bringing help and spiritual hope to souls, and many are the God-given opportunities which they have embraced of helping the anxious and arousing the careless. The colporter can often reach by conversation those who otherwise would not be touched by ministrations of an ordinary kind. He is one of themselves, he understands their way of thinking, and he can often more really enter into their needs, and by his personal influence accomplish as much or more than the books which he sells.

The Value of the Individual Life

We are so accustomed to speak of the masses, and to think through committees, and act through organizations, that we are in danger of forgetting the importance of the individual soul. The aim of our work is to reach each life by itself. A visit is paid to each house, it is the individual life that is reached. If we realized the value of one soul in the sight of God, we should consider the work of the colporter not wasted, if he only turned one life into the way of salvation. We thank God that many have been greatly helped, but it is done "one by one," and doubtless we shall find in the great day that the harvest of result has been due to the patient and plodding work bestowed upon individual souls. Pray that God's richest blessing may ever rest upon the publications sold, and upon all the personal work that is so earnestly undertaken for His glory.—Rev. S. M. Warner, in "With Tongue and Pen." Condensed.

THE UTILITY OF TRACTS

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."—Eccles. 11:6.

In an American city a godly young woman placed a searching tract upon the dressing-case of her mistress, whose eyes fell upon it while preparing for a fashionable fete. Her attention was arrested, her heart was touched, deep conviction of soul took possession of her, and soon she was led to know Jesus to the pardoning of her sins. Though possessed of great wealth and worldly honors, being a leader in society, she laid them aside, became a humble Christian, and devoted her talents to the Lord, giving part of her time to tract work.

The circulation of tracts as a means of preaching the gospel is older than the art of printing. Wickliffe, the Reformer, was a great writer and distributor of tracts, employing his friends and pupils to multiply copies. Luther was a worker on the same line, but with the help, however, of the printing press, which came to his aid. Two hundred years after, Count Zinzendorf, another devoted German reformer, made extensive use of the printing press in the spreading of gospel tracts, etc. Toward the close of the eighteenth century Hannah More, from her own pen, produced the Repository Tracts which were so extensively used in her day. Still later on, Christians of various nations have been utilizing the facilities afforded by press, paper and ink for preaching the gospel by the printed page.

Harlan Page, that devoted soul-winner, was possessed with a burning desire for the salvation of others, and it is asserted that through his instrumentality over one hundred were brought "out of darkness into light." He was a faithful tract distributor, and was for years identified with the publication of tracts.

A professional diver, while at the bottom of the sea, along the coast, noticed an oyster holding a piece of printed paper between its closed shells. The diver secured the slip, and through the goggles of his headress began to read. It was a gospel tract, and coming to him thus strangely, so impressed his heart that he said: "I can hold out against God's mercy no longer, since it pursues me thus." He became while at the bottom of the sea a penitent and, as he was assured, a forgiven man.

Tracts have advantages peculiar to themselves. Their very silence commands the notice of those to whom a verbal appeal might not be acceptable. They often confront the reader, too, unexpectedly.—A. H. Gottschall.

READ, THEN THINK

A man may as well expect to grow stronger by always eating as wiser by always reading. 'Tis thought and digestion which make books serviceable and give health and vigor to the mind.—Jeremy Collier.

A COUNTRY PASTOR SPEAKS

Regarding the Deplorable Spiritual Conditions Which Prevail in Many Rural Communities

Our situation is similar to that of many another country church. We have a steadily decreasing native American population, and as steadily increasing German and Swedish population. Hence, while our Sunday-school and other work among the young people keeps up, our financial support diminishes. We find it very difficult to get competent helpers in the Sunday-school, Endeavor and other work. Our work languishes and discourages both pastor and people. We cannot hold the evangelistic or gospel services we should like, for lack of the means to pay for extra coal and evangelistic help. With the exception of one or two extra meetings during the "week of prayer" and "holy week," we have held no week-day services for about two years.

I speak of this because to my certain knowledge it is the condition of things in a large number of churches in our country towns. We get very little benefit from the great religious meetings held in the cities under the direction of such men as Drs. Torrey, Chapman and Gypsy Smith, and our religious life is stagnant. The people do not observe the Sabbath, as formerly. They do not go to church. But they ride about, visit, and entertain visitors, especially city visitors, who wish to get out of the city for over Sunday and who rarely bring their religion, if they have any, with them. Baseball and automobiling are rampant on the afternoon of the Lord's day, and the churches are kept alive by a little handful of God's people who just can't see the doors closed. But they are having very small influence upon the manners and morals of the community, scarcely touching the fringes of the surrounding community. There is consequently a population growing up in our rural communities that cannot bring the religious or moral strength to the cities which a former generation of such people brought.

* * *

What a blessing the wise placing of attractive and helpful evangelical literature, in short, "the gospel in print"—could be in such a community as that described above and doubtless duplicated a thousand times in our own country!

TWO MOST HELPFUL AUTHORS

John MacNeil was born October 19, 1854, in Dingwall, Scotland. Six years later the MacNeil family left for Australia. John was an earnest student in the Melbourne University, and showed positive fitness and liking for the work of the ministry. In 1876, he entered New College, Edinburgh, for theological study. Completing his divinity course, he returned to South Australia and took a charge. In 1884, he left for Waverly in Western Australia, and before going to the gold fields in 1894, did considerable mission and evangelistic work in different sections. The first edition of "The Spirit-Filled Life," (the book for which he is well known), was published in August, 1894, and was sold out before Christmas. The author died suddenly on August 21, 1896.

Thomas Champness was an English clergyman and author. A portion of his early manhood was spent as a Wesleyan missionary in West Africa. Returning to England he became a circuit preacher for village churches, and later, a worker among the colliers. In 1885, he founded the "Joyful News Home" at Rochdale. This institution is at once a missionary training school and depot for gospel literature. His delightfully graphic manner of presenting Bible truths and incidents, makes his writings especial favorites among young people. Mr. Champness visited America in 1898. He was the author of "Tales of Adventure from the Old Book," and other evangelical volumes. He died on October 30, 1905.

THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS MAGAZINE
153-163 Institute Place, Chicago.

Entered as Second-Class Matter, Oct. 7, 1910, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under Act of March 3, 1879.

We are pleased to note that a prominent printing firm, The Hammond Press, Buffalo, N. Y., which issues each year a handsomely printed motto, poem, or verse to send to its patrons and friends, this year selected Dr. Gray's editorial from the Christian Workers Magazine, December number, "The Prince of Peace."

There is no question in our mind but what The Christian Workers Magazine is well worth the price of a dollar a year. Yet we have followed the precedent of many publishers and given small premiums for renewals and more expensive premiums in the way of books, to induce new subscriptions, during special campaigns, until very recently. Then we weighed the matter well in our mind and thought of taking our subscribers into our confidence with regard to the matter. First, because the magazine is not self supporting. Every premium, though costing us but a trifle, added to our deficit. We decided that if our subscribers knew the fact they would not complain at not being favored with a premium. Second, because of the general conditions affecting business and the increased expenses because of the war, resulting in decreased gifts to the Lord's work. The above does not apply to Bibles, dictionaries, etc., which are added to the price of the magazine.

In a recent report from our accounting department we find we paid out $21.00 in exchange on bank checks! We are not complaining at receiving bank checks, let them come, but please, if you will, add the exchange.

Another small item of expense has been in notifying subscribers when their subscriptions were out, or ahead of time. We usually have a good response to our letters of this character, but now we are not sending such notices until we have given the subscribers a reasonable time to renew of their own accord. Watch the wrappers on your magazines. The numbers under your name indicate the month and the year respectively when your subscription will be out. We are very thankful to the friends who have renewed the past month without having to be notified. If you are not sure as to when your subscription will be out, just send a dollar for renewal and ask for a receipt notifying you of the time. No receipt sent unless asked for.

Postage stamp books with twelve two-cent stamps are occasionally offered to us to pay a bill of 25 cents. Uncle Sam will not accept the covers of the books in exchange for postage.

Many little items like the foregoing decided our present course—no more special discounts or premiums, all subscriptions accepted only at the full rate; no discounts on long-time subscriptions till further notice, all club rates at full price of single subscriptions, commission given only to authorized agents, others must send full rate. If you want to be an agent send us your name for entry and particulars about the commission. We do not believe any of our friends will be offended by the above. Should any of the delinquents send in anything for the "conscience box" we will apply it to the deficit.

This outline is $14\frac{1}{2} \times 7\frac{1}{4}$. The Book is displayed in its two-fold divisions: Primeval Revelation and Permanent Revelation. Each of these is subdivided into six divisions, with a total of twelve. Price 5c.

THE BOOK OF LEVITICUS.

Size $12 \times 7\frac{1}{4}$. This outline is pronounced exceedingly valuable. It displays the Book of Leviticus in Seven Divisions, three on either side of a Central Division which is a key to the Book. Price 5c.

THE BOOK OF JOB.

Size $14 \times 7\frac{1}{4}$. This is a simple summary of this Primitive Book. It is also an outline of the history of mankind from the fall of man to his redemption. This outline has been widely commented on. Price 5c.

THE BOOK OF ISAIAH.

Size $15 \times 8\frac{1}{2}$. The 66 chapters of Isaiah take form and order in this Divisional display. It is pronounced to be the very best of these Bible Outlines. It is rich in its results, and is a valuable guide to this book of prophecy, which in the canon of scripture is placed at the head. Price 10c.

THE BOOK OF DANIEL.

Size $14 \times 8\frac{1}{2}$. This Diagrammatic Study of Daniel, displaying the Character, Course and Consummation of the times of the Gentiles, serves the student in its simplicity. Many outlines of Daniel, as of the Revelation, are complex and confusing. Price 5c.

THE GOSPEL OF MATTHEW.

Size $15 \times 8\frac{1}{2}$. This outline has many features perhaps no other possesses. It is faithful in its divisions of Matthew's Message of Messiah and His Ministry. The one hundred and twenty quotations from the Old Testament are placed in the relation they bear to each chapter. It acts as a sort of concordance and chain reference to the Old Testament. Price 10c.

ANALYTICAL STUDY OF THE BOOK OF ROMANS.

Size $12\frac{1}{2} \times 7\frac{1}{4}$. This outline has been widely used by Bible teachers and especially in Foreign Mission schools. It is indeed what its name implies—an Analytical Study of the Book of Romans. Price 5c.

THE BOOK OF EPHESIANS.

Size $14\frac{1}{4} \times 7\frac{1}{4}$. This Book of the Christian's Calling, Conduct and Conflict is of particular fascination to the student. This outline was first introduced at the First Baptist Church of New York City, Dr. I. M. Haldeman, Pastor. It was received by Bible students as an outline successfully displaying this wonderful Epistle to advantage. Price 5c.

THE BOOK OF COLOSSIANS.

Size $14\frac{1}{2} \times 7\frac{1}{4}$. The Epistle to the Colossians opens with a Personal Portion and concludes with a Personal Portion. At the center of the outline is the key to the book, which is Divine Revelation versus Human Speculation. At one side is displayed the Person and the Work of the Son of God, on the other the Position and Walk of the Sons of God. Price 5c.

THE BOOK OF HEBREWS.

Size $14\frac{1}{2} \times 7\frac{1}{4}$. Of this outline Dr. Joseph C. Snider, of Brooklyn, says: "The key words to the contents of the Book of Hebrews as displayed on this chart are the finest I have ever seen." Christ is seen as Supra-Prophetic, Supra-Levitical and Supra-Angelical. Price 5c.

D. L. Moody said

"Bilhorn is the only man that writes, plays and sings his own music and makes and plays his own organs."

No one knew better than Mr. Moody the need for spiritual songs. Mr. Bilhorn's great success came through the introduction of songs that reach deep into the hearts of the people such as "Sweet Peace" and "I Will Sing the Wondrous Story."

Voices of Victory

is Mr. Bilhorn's latest selection of the choicest hymns. The use of this song-book for church services, Sunday Schools, Revival Meetings, etc., quickens the hearts and puts new life into the church work.

Children love to sing them and they gladden the hearts of the older folks. Songs arranged for all kinds of meetings. Songs of "War or Peace," "Happiness," "Soul-Winning," "Joy," "Love," "Songs for the Children," "Songs of Heaven," "333," every one a gem.

"The Voice of Thanksgiving"

This New Hymn Book has been adopted by The Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, The Moody Church, Chicago, The Ruggles Street Baptist Church, Boston, and many smaller Societies throughout the country.

THE STANDARD, Chicago, says:

The quality of "The Voice of Thanksgiving" is assured by the editorship of Doctor Towner, of the Moody Bible Institute. It contains a considerable number of hymn tunes by the editor, whose influence is steadily on the side of real dignity in connection with attractive melodies and harmonies. More than half of the book is devoted to the good "standard" hymns; and we are glad to see a goodly number of the real old-fashioned compositions, like "Lenox," the singing of which brings to memory the vigorous religious faith of our grandfathers and helps to keep unbroken the religious traditions embodied in worship. If Doctor Towner will create in his students a real appreciation of this splendid inheritance, he will find many to rise up and call him blessed. This book marks a step in the right direction. Selections of Scripture for responsive readings are found in the back of the book. Presswork and binding are unusually attractive. The book deserves a wide welcome.

Editorial Notes

"But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who was made unto us wisdom and righteousness and sanctification and redemption."—1 Cor. 1:30.

The Rev. Evan H. Hopkins, D.D., editor of "The Life of Faith," London, renders this text thus: "Who was made unto us wisdom

Cut from God, both righteousness, and from the is: God's wisdom, as revealed in Loaf Christ, includes all these. He illustrates it thus: "Suppose I give you a purse, and in the purse are three sovereigns. Wisdom is the purse, and the three sovereigns are righteousness, sanctification, redemption."

The National Education Association, Ann Arbor, Mich., offers a prize of one thousand dollars for the best essay on "The Essential Place of Religion in Education, with an Outline of a Plan for Introducing Religious Teaching into the Public Schools."

Its prospectus says that religion must be defined in a way not to run counter to the creeds of Protestant, Roman Catholic, or Jew. The essential points to be observed are "A Heavenly Father, who holds nature and man alike in the hollow of His hand;" the commandment of Hillel and Jesus of Nazareth, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and thy neighbor as thyself"; and the high ethical teachings and spirit of service and sacrifice indicated in the Sermon on the Mount.

We do not refer to this offer believing that any of our readers will be interested in competing for the prize, but for other reasons. Our readers are not interested in "Religion" as such, but in the gospel of salvation through faith in our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Any religion which will run counter to the creeds of Protestant, Roman Catholic, or Jew can have little of the Bible in it, and while it may be of some use as a system of ethics, and possibly interest a few to go further in their reading and study of the Word of God, yet the wise will question whether its introduction into our public schools would not do more harm than good. Indeed, evangelical Christians might well protest against it as strenuously as Roman Catholic or Jew ever protested against the simple reading of the Bible in the schools. Any teaching about "A Heavenly Father," which ignores man's separation from Him through sin, and fails to show explicitly how that sin is put away through Christ, is deadening to spiritual hope; while the placing of Jesus of Nazareth as a teacher on a par with Hillel, approaches blasphemy as we regard it.

We should like to see the Bible read in our public schools every morning, read without note or comment, just as it used to be when we were a boy. The protests of the Roman Catholics and Jews were not so serious in those days, and we wonder why they should be more serious now. However, we recognize their rights as citizens of this free and independent land, and we respect their conscientious convictions on the subject of religious teaching. We would not force our convictions upon other people, but we would ask whether all might not agree on a selection of Bible readings to be read in the public schools? We believe this has been tried in some communities with acceptance, and that it is decidedly preferable to the teaching of "Religion." This method would exclude the reading of some parts of the Bible that to us are very precious and very vital, but nevertheless the Bible would be read, God's Word would be heard, and as it is in a very real sense a living Word, we could trust it to win its way.

By "religion" just now we mean particularly the gospel of Jesus Christ—the only true religion. There are those who sneer at it, because it takes with what Religion Abraham Lincoln called the "plain

"a Staple people" rather than with the in-Article" tellectual "highbrows" of the aristocracy of culture. There might be something to sneer at if this meant that the plain people were unable to think, but this faculty, thank God, is not tied up to either education or culture. Some of the strongest thinkers have had very little book learning, and some of the weakest have had much.

But there is another argument, drawn from the nature of religion itself. As was pointed out some months ago by the "Living Church," "Experts may be needed to state as a formula this technicality or that; but a religion whose theory is revealed and whose events are historic, which is chiefly concerned with a cradle and a Cross is designed to be dealt with and handled by the common man. If religion were an accomplishment, it would be of no consequence to the illuminati what truck-drivers might think of it, but since it is not an accomplishment, but a staple article, plain people not only must have it, but they actually get it and use it. There are a great many more plain people than any other sort, and consequently the question of where they get religion, and what they do with it, is of greater importance than the reception of religion by any other class."

We believe this to be true, and it makes us glad to think that the common people heard Him gladly, and that He Himself could say, "I thank thee, O Father, Lord of Heaven and earth, that Thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."

✽ ✽

We were unusually interested some time ago in the suggestion of the Dean of the Law School of Northwestern University, that the Law School class-room should "Living" use the instruments and docu-Education ments of actual business. He would place leases, bills-of-lading, bills-of-exchange, wills, deeds, etc., in the hands of students in order that text books and oral instruction regarding these things might mean something, and carry significance and point. The "Chicago Tribune" in remarking on the suggestion said: "It is a commonplace of law offices that brilliant graduates who can discuss profound legal questions with the boss, have to consult humbly and meekly the fresh office boy with reference to the simplest practical step in the law business."

However this may be in the legal profession, we know it is correspondingly true in the calling of the ministry. Frequently have we heard learned and brilliant men of the pulpit say that they did not know how to expound the Bible or to lead a soul to Christ. As the "Tribune" said, the trouble with most education is that it is not living, it is abstract, remote, and unrelated to life and its common prosaic problems.

This was precisely the conviction of D. L. Moody leading him to found the Bible Institute of Chicago now called after his name, and whose output during the last quarter century has fully justified his acumen as an educator, and his spiritual statesmanship. "Give students the documents and take them to the places where the things are done" is the doctrine of the secular editor, and it is the very principle on which the curriculum of the Moody Bible Institute is built up. While the morning hours are put into class-room study, a large part of every afternoon or evening is devoted by the students to putting into practical application what they have thus learned. They go to the shops and mills, to the poor-houses, the hospitals and asylums. They go where the world lives and works and trades and governs itself. They go to the boys' clubs, to the social settlements, to the rescue missions, and on the Lord's day to the churches and Sunday-schools where they themselves do, and see the things done, for which they are being fitted as a life work. This makes it true of them that when they get out into that work they are immediately of use, and whether it is in the slums of a great city, or on the outposts of some mission land, they give a good account of themselves in the work of the coming Kingdom.

The Institute appeals to its friends all over the world to keep its work constantly before the throne of grace that both teachers and taught may be filled with the Holy Spirit, and that those who have the means, and are looking for investments for the Lord, may remember their large and growing needs.

✽ ✽

We have learned with deep regret of the death last month of Dr. H. M. Hamill, of Nashville, Tenn., the alert president of the International Sunday-school Association.

Dr. H. M. We are glad that he attained that Hamill deserved honor before he passed hence, even though he was permitted to enjoy the distinction for but part of a year. He belonged to the old school of Sunday-school workers and Bible teachers, and was one of the few who remained among those who knew and served with D. L. Moody in his work for the young. We shall ever remember with gratitude one or two conferences we were privileged to have with him last summer, prior to his election as president of the International Association. He was ill and weak at the time, but it was inspiring to see the energy with which he laid hold of the serious problems before us, and the characteristic devotion he expressed to the teaching of the Bible as the revelation of God and for the evangelization of the youth of our Sunday-schools. He was a firm and unfaltering believer in the uniform lessons of the International Series, and his death at this time will be seriously felt in the crisis upon us in connection with their continuance in the work of the Sunday-school. He was not slow to appreciate the value and necessity of graded instruction, but believed it should be limited to the contents of the Bible and presented after the manner of the uniform lessons. He was a man of the people who had felt their pulse on that question, and who believed that he represented a large majority of the Sunday-school teachers and workers of the country in taking the stand he did. We recall the tenderness of the prayers he poured forth on that subject in the communion we had with him, and if his hopes were not to be realized we are thankful for his sake that he is not here to suffer the disappointment. We think he was right in the principle for which he stood, and he has left behind him consecrated followers, trained largely by himself, who will not allow them to die. Whatever modern theology may accomplish in changing the character of the teaching of our Sunday-schools, the old guard will stand firm for the Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible, no matter what the cost and the consequences may be. Dr. Hamill has not lived in vain, and his testimony will not die until another generation has caught it up and passed it on to them that are to come.

THE BATTLE STAR

By Florence A. Wilson

Thro' clouds of years, thro' nights of fears,
Thro' pain of woman's love and tears,
Lighting our sky, now near, now far,
There comes a blood-red Battle Star.

On land, on sea, above, below,
The winds of Hell, hate's bugles blow.
Men gasp with awe, "The world's at war!"
Struck mad by gleaming Battle Star."

For weal or woe, we're in its glow;
Must follow on, the truth to know;
If greed of kings in lands afar
Shall sing thy praise, O Battle Star!

'Tis Ho! Ho! Ho! Mount, up and go!
Over the line to meet the foe,
Speeding steed and flying car
Guided by flaming Battle Star.

Congressman R. P. Hobson plans to assemble the poll lists of all the States and to send a copy of his speech delivered in the House of Representatives last December, entitled, "The Scientific Truth About Alcohol," into practically all the homes in America, about 16,000,000 in number. His thought is to mail the speech direct from Washington to each individual, and to mail an individual standard letter to each, to insure attention to the speech.

The personal expense involved, over and above that to the government, will be about $150,000 and he asks contributions from our readers, which we will be pleased to forward him.

Sometime since a subscriber thanked us for leaving out of a certain issue "all unchristian remarks regarding our fellow Christians."

Other issues, he said, had contained "slurs" on "our brethren in the Roman Catholic Church, and those who believe in the so-called higher criticism." We will thank any reader to call our attention to such "slurs" when they appear, for they are never intended, and should receive an apology. But this does not mean that we shall desist from instructing and warning our readers concerning either of the dangerous foes named, or any others that are assailing the Word of God or the gospel of our salvation. We have no enmity against individuals, and mean to treat all with courtesy, but we hate error and propose earnestly to contend against it.

Lift flags on high! Flash signal cry!
Men who are free—now—ere we die!
Down hate and greed nor dare to mar
God's world or work, thou Battle Star.

We meet, we fight, by day, by night,
Midst screaming shell, in fury's light.
Its blazing banners lead this war
That hosts slay hosts for Battle Star.

Thus thro' the years, thro' hopes and fears,
Thro' pain of woman's love and tears,
The hearts of men lust-filled for war,
Have homage paid the Battle Star.

But lo! the dawn! God's world moves on;
Bethlehem's Prince for Him has won.
He wrongs no right, His love is law,
When earth shall lose her Battle Star.

Modern Alternatives for the Gospel

By D. S. Adam, D. D.

Professor of Church History and Systematic Theology in Ormond College of the University of Melbourne, Australia

An address at the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

Text: "Lord to whom shall we go?"—John 6:68.

THE circumstances under which these words were spoken were full of pathos. Just the day before, Jesus had been at the height of His popularity in Galilee, when, after the feeding of the five thousand, the people, roused to enthusiasm, wished to take Him by force and make Him their King. Jesus withdrew Himself from them to the solitude of a mountain, and the next day in the synagogue at Capernaum, on the other side of the lake, He preached to them a searching sermon in which He rebuked them for their carnal-mindedness, and unfolded to them in figurative language the spiritual nature of the Kingdom He had come to establish among men and its blessings. He spoke of Himself as the bread of life, who was to give His flesh for the life of the world, and invited them to eat of this bread that they might live forever.

The enthusiasm of the multitude rapidly cooled as the result of this sermon. They saw He was not the kind of Messiah they were looking for to restore again the Kingdom to Israel and bring them temporal prosperity. They were disappointed in Him, and looked upon Him as an impracticable deceiver, and many who had followed Him with enthusiasm to that time then went back and walked no more with Him. It was in these circumstances that Jesus addressed to the twelve the pathetic question, "Will ye also go away?" And Peter, acting as spokesman of the little band, replied nobly, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."

Three main thoughts are suggested to us by these words, viz.: Man's need of what true religion alone can bring; the unsatisfactoriness of all other fountains but Christ; and the sufficiency of Christ and His gospel to meet our need.

I. The Soul's Need—"To Whom Shall We Go?"

Why go anywhere or to anyone? Why all this anxiety about religion, all this seeking and searching and trouble? Why cannot men be content with their daily work and wages, with sowing and reaping, with buying and selling, with eating and drinking and sleeping and enjoying the pleasures of life? Why all this concern about God and the soul, about sin and salvation, about a spiritual world and a day of judgment?

Some people, indeed, try to banish such thoughts about God and another world from their mind, and to live in this world and for this world alone, giving their attention to the things that are seen and temporal, and seeking to find a satisfactory portion in these. But it is in vain. Try as they may, even the most worldly-minded cannot escape altogether from thoughts and questionings, from feelings of dissatisfaction, from prickings of conscience, from longings after a peace and satisfaction which they do not have. It is not possible for man to attain to a satisfactory portion for his soul in the pursuit and pleasures of this world, however eagerly and successfully these be engaged in.

Earth's pleasures do not satisfy and they do not last. They pall upon us, as do earth's pursuits and the reward they bring. And when death comes and knocks at our door, how vain and empty seem all the possessions and pursuits and pleasures of this world. The successful merchant after long years of struggle and effort and calm absorption in business has amassed perhaps a fair fortune and looks forward to enjoying it, but there comes the voice, "Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee."

One cannot look upon death, or stand by an open grave, without being turned to serious thought and to a realization of the vanity of all earthly things. Where is my friend now, we ask ourselves, as the familiar form is lowered into the cold grave, where is my friend now, with whom I had pleasant intercourse in life, and how will it be with me when I come to this? Our minds demand a knowledge which natural science cannot give us—our hearts demand a satisfaction which the pursuits and pleasures of this world cannot give. Our hearts cry out for the living God. "Thou hast created us for Thyself, O Lord, so that we can find rest only in Thee."

II. The Unsatisfactoriness of Other Fountains but Christ

When this dissatisfaction with the world and sense of need becomes urgent within us, as it does sooner or later, the cry arises, "To whom shall we go?" Let me briefly pass it.

review some of the modern answers to this cry of mind and heart which contradict, or come short, of the distinctively Christian answer.

1. To whom shall we go to help us in our perplexities, to sooth us in our sorrows, to stimulate us in our work? Is it to the atheistic materialist who tells us that God, and the soul, and the spiritual world, are fictions of man's imagination, that blind matter is the sole ultimate reality, that mind is but a function of the brain, and that death ends all for us as individuals? Does this teacher who claims to speak in the name of modern science, satisfy the demand of the mind, or the conscience or the heart? I say emphatically that he does not. He fails to satisfy the inquiring mind in its search after intelligible truth as a place of rest.

We know that mind or spirit, and matter, are intimately related in our experience of life in the body. But to attempt to explain mind, or soul, with its spiritual life of self-conscious thought, and feeling and will as a function of matter, or an effect of which matter in motion is the cause, is to use words that have no intelligible meaning.

You must add the mystery of life to matter before you get even a step onward toward man, and life is an added something which is not already present in dead inorganic matter. And you must add self-consciousness to life before the living creature can belong to the human sphere or have what we call mind or soul, and self-consciousness is an added something which is not already present in the lower forms of living bodies.

Explaining Life by Matter

To attempt to explain life first of all, the self-conscious life as intertwined in the individual human soul, with its thoughts and feelings and volitions, as the product of particles of matter arranged in certain formations, and acting and reacting on one another, is hopelessly unintelligible and unsatisfying. Besides matter itself, from which the start is made as though it were given as the primary reality, is void of explanation. What is it and how came it to be? As known to us of course it exists only as an object of knowledge to a knowing mind and therefore presupposes mind as a precondition of its extreme qualities. So that to explain mind as originating out of the matter we know is to argue in a vicious circle. Whether matter has, or can have, any sort of existence apart from the mind that knows it is a question we cannot solve. Even as an object of our knowledge it is by no means easy to grasp what is meant by matter. Time was when men of science used to speak of indivisible atoms of solid material substance capable of combining into various groups of solid. But now the solid, minute atoms are declared by the latest sciences to be no longer simple or indivisible, but dissolved into groups of infinitely minute "electrons" or units of electric force. And what electric force is remains in the last resort a mystery. So that instead of "matter" furnishing the philosopher with a solid basis of reality from which to start in accounting for the universe, it is now itself a perplexing problem to the scientist which he carries back into the vague region of electrical energy. Perhaps the time will come when electrical energy may be found to be but a form of spiritual life, and the scientist will then learn to look upon the material world as the religious man looks upon it, viz., as part of the language by means of which God the infinite Spirit reveals Himself to the finite spirits that He has made in His image.

And if atheistic materialism with its crude doctrine that the mind or soul is but the function of the material brain and ceases to be when the brain is dissolved in death, fails to satisfy the inquiring mind, much less does it satisfy the heart and conscience of man. Conscience with its imperative sense of moral obligation, its intuitive feeling of the infinite difference between right and wrong, leads most earnest reflectors to the conviction that as men we are subjects of a moral power working in and behind the universe to whom we are answerable for our conduct. And our hearts within us rise in living protest against the idea that our life as individuals ends forever with death, or that the cold grave is the end of all the hopes and aspirations of our spirits.

A Personal Confession

How little the creed of materialism is fitted to satisfy the human heart and its aspirations may be seen from the following confession of one who had been brought up in Christian faith, but abandoned that for the materialistic position under the influence of modern scientific study.

"I am not ashamed to confess," wrote the late Professor J. H. Romanes, "that with the virtual negation of God the universe to me has lost its soul of loveliness; and although from henceforth the precept to work while it is day will doubtless but gain an intensified fire from the terribly intensified meaning of the words that 'the night cometh when no man can work,' yet when at times I think, as think at times I must, of the appalling contrast between the hallowed glory of that creed which once was mine and the lonely mystery of existence as now I find it,—at such times I shall ever feel it impossible to avoid the sharpest pang of which my nature is susceptible." It is pleasant to know that he who wrote these sad, pathetic words, regained his Christian faith after days of eclipse, and lived a humble and believing Christian afterwards.

The Agnostic Position

2. Here is another modernist teacher who professes to be a lover of the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, who as regards religion styles himself an agnostic. To all the deep questions which we feel constrained to put regarding God, and the soul and the future life the agnostic has but one answer, "We don't know, and we can't know."

The shallow, though definite, negative answers of atheistic materialism are seen by these thinkers to be inadequate and inconclusive. But the Christian revelation is also set aside as unscientific and unproven, and the position is taken that we must necessarily remain in absolute ignorance and suspense of judgment regarding those deep questions of the soul, and content ourselves with knowing only what is finite and limited to what belongs to this present life. The ultimate reality if referred to at all, can only be spoken of as "the unknown and unknowable."

This agnosticism is a fairly widespread attitude among men in these days. As a reaction against a confident and dogmatic materialism whose fallacies it has shown up, this agnosticism is not without its value and use. But it is not an attitude which can afford satisfaction either to the mind, or the heart, or conscience of reflecting men. The unanswered questions ever keep forcing themselves in upon us, and the mind refuses to believe that they are and must remain unanswerable.

Unanswered Questions

Such questions as whether there is a living personal God to whom we are answerable, and a future life for us as individuals are not mere speculative puzzles which we can be content to set aside. They are far too important, and have far too serious a bearing on our practical lives for us to be content to leave them unanswered. The mind refuses, and rightly refuses, to admit that such questions which it is capable of asking upon matters of so much practical importance are to remain unanswered.

Nor can the heart or moral nature of man long rest satisfied with this attitude of suspense in regard to questions the answer to which so deeply affects the moral life. It may indeed be true that in this probationary life we may have to rest content with a knowledge of God, the ultimate reality, which is partial and imperfect. "Who can by searching find out God?" "Now we know in part." But it is a very different thing to admit that our knowledge of God is meantime only partial and imperfect, and to contend with Huxley and Spencer and other agnostics, that we can have no true knowledge of God at all, such as to furnish a basis for worship, trust and obedience.

What Deism Says

3. "To whom shall we go?" The agnostics leave us in an agony of suspense, with our deepest questions unanswered, and with no foundation for intelligent worship or trust or hope, but here is still another set of teachers, or theorizers, bidding for popular favor and adherence—the philosophic deists, or rationalists, who offer us what they call a religion within the limit of pure reason with all elements of superstition eliminated. They are largely influenced by the teaching of the Bible but they do not occupy the distinctively Christian position. They bid us believe in a living personal God as creator and sustainer of all, and in a future life as justifiable on grounds of reason, but God is a far-away being, our knowledge of whom can only be vague, indefinite and hesitating. With them the Bible is a record of human experience of value for helping us in the religious life, but not the inspired record of an authoritative revelation from God to men. With them Christ Jesus is a good man who has left an inspiring example for us to follow, but He is not the Son of God, or God manifest in the flesh, nor is His death of vital importance for the redemption of sinful men. With them human sin is a mistake perhaps unavoidable, due merely to ignorance, and easily forgivable by the good God so that the ultimate salvation of all men is assured.

The influence of Christianity, particularly of Christian morals, is seen in the teaching of this school, but the heart of Christianity, viz., faith in Christ Jesus, the Son of God, delivered for our offences and raised again for our justification, is taken away. It is but like the aftershine of Christian faith and hope when the sun that gives true light and warmth has gone down. This feeble attenuated form of Christian faith and hope was widely prevalent in Scotland during the reign of moderation in the eighteenth century, and we see its effect in the writings and life of children of that period such as the poet Burns:

"Thou knowest Thou hast formed me
With passions wild and strong,
And listening to their witching voice
Hast often led me wrong."

"Where with intention I have erred,
No other plea I have
But Thou art God, and goodness still Delightest to forgive."

Burns' religious faith was not strong enough to save and sanctify his own life; and it does not seem to have given him much comfort when the end of life drew nigh, as we may gather from the epitaph he left for his friend Rankin to place over his grave:

"He * * * lies still and dead,
And a green, grassy hillock hides his head.
Alas! Alas! a devilish change indeed."

"To whom shall we go?" Materialism comes to us with a lie in its hand and offers us a stone for bread. Agnosticism is an agony of suspense. A vague philosophic deism is a weak and useless creed that fails to produce strength of conviction, sanctity of life or sustenance in sorrow.

III. The Call to Christ

To whom shall we go for light on the meaning of our life, for strength for life's duties and comfort in life's sorrows? I call you to Christ, the Christ of the Gospel narrative, the Christ of the Christian faith as handed down by the church throughout the ages. He alone hath the words of eternal life. What are our deepest needs as men? Not those of a material kind. Man liveth not by bread alone, and the multiplying of material comforts though worthy enough to aim at can never bring satisfaction to the deep need of our souls. Our deepest needs as men are:

1. The need of a satisfying knowledge of God, the supreme reality, in whom we live and move and have our being.
2. The need of deliverance from sin's guilt and power.
3. The need of support and comfort in sorrow and trial.
4. The need of victory over death.

And these are the needs which Jesus Christ with His gospel meets and satisfies for all who receive Him as their Prophet, Priest and King.

Do we need a satisfying knowledge of God? If so, is it not revealed to us in Jesus Christ, who said to his disciples, "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father"? Is it deliverance from the guilt and power of sin for which we crave? Hath not He been made unto us "wisdom from God and righteousness and sanctification and redemption"? Is it sustenance in sorrow and trial? By His teaching and example Christ leads us to accept the sufferings and trials of life in the same spirit in which He did, as discipline sent by a loving Father's hand—the cup that our Father giveth us to drink. "Ills have no weight and tears no bitterness," when behind the frowning providence there is seen the smiling face. Is it hope and triumph in death? For Him as a man, death had no sting since He said, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit," and for us it has no sting since because He lives we shall live also.

Good reason had Peter and his fellow-disciples to adhere firmly to Jesus as their Saviour and Lord. And good reason have we also amid the problems and perplexities of our modern life, to cling closely to the same Saviour and Lord. When temptations to unbelief, like fierce winds, beat upon us, and we see others carried away by the power of the blast, to this Rock let us cling. When the floods of sorrow and trial threaten to overwhelm our souls, on the Rock let us firmly plant our feet. When the burden of our sins crushes us down and we are in darkness, on this Rock let us take our stand. When the swelling waters of the black river of death roll over us, our Rock will not fail us. Through the gathering mists a strong hand will appear stretched out to help us, and when the din of earth has ceased, we shall hear our Saviour's kindly voice bidding us enter into the joy of our Lord.

THE MONTH OF MARCH

Before March is gone some scores of species of spring flowers will be found in the fields, and a few will have poked their heads up through the mold of the woods. March is an expectant month for the man who tramps the fields. He knows that each day is to turn up something new and worthy. The robin on the 4th perhaps, the phoebe on the 5th, the bluebird on the 6th and the meadow lark on the 7th, to say nothing of the succession of treasures which do not come by the migration route, but spring up over night at the feet.

March is a maligned month, and it probably will continue to be maligned so long as people think that one necessarily must catch cold because the wind blows. The old, old story of the old, old woman still lives. Her feeling is that of most of mankind and womankind. "I have noticed all my life," she said, "that if I managed to struggle through the miserable month of March I always lived through the rest of the year."—Chicago Evening Post.

A MESSAGE FOR PRECENTORS

"O Christian Precentor! Standing between God's people and Him on whom they have believed, in that hour when they, with one accord, essay to worship Him—beware of the responsibility! Learn, oh, learn, in His name and for His glory, learn to read the story well, of hymn and harmony."—Author Unknown.

The Romance of Bible Chronology

By the Rev. Martin Anstey, M. A., B. D., London

(The first of two lectures given in The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, and stenographically reported for the "Christian Workers Magazine.")

I HAVE been asked to give two lectures on Bible chronology, the subject dealt with in my book. Dr. Gray asked me to explain the way the chronology is gotten out of the Scriptures, and the bearing of the accuracy of Biblical numbers upon the trustworthiness of the records. You will see, therefore, that it is a branch of biblical criticism, and I may also say, that I do not know of any more complete vindication of the accuracy and authenticity of the biblical records against the assaults of modern biblical criticism than that which you will find in my book. Figures are supposed to be dry things, but you will not find this book dry. It is really a philosophy of life from the Christian standpoint. It not only shows the accuracy of the Bible as regards figures or numbers, but deals also with questions affecting the modern mind. It deals with evolution and with the antiquity of man as well as Biblical criticism.

The way I went to work was this: I first got my Bible, and underlined in blue pencil every statement of the Old Testament bearing on dates; and then I prepared these tables and allowed a line for every year; and every event as it came I took out of the Bible and put into the table in the year to which it belonged.

My object was not to defend the Bible, but to let it speak for itself and to put before the people in an attractive form what the Bible says. Dr. Parker used to say, "You don't need to defend a lion. Let him out of the cage and he will defend himself." And if we can only get people interested in the Bible and let the Bible have a chance to speak on its own behalf it will defend itself. In this lecture I will deal with the Bible itself and in the next with modern discoveries. I call it "The Romance of Bible Chronology" because of the wonderful revelation of the consistency of the Bible and the absence of contradictions in it.

As Clear as Mathematics

We begin with the creation of Adam, and step by step, by simple addition, and sometimes simple subtraction, we get on year by year until we reach the last link. The last link points forward to the death of Christ, and that must be a prophecy. Every link except the last is history and as clear as any sum in mathematics or Euclid. The last link is the prophecy of Daniel which fixes the period between the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem (in the first year of Cyrus), to the cutting off of the Messiah (the crucifixion in the year A. D. 30) as a period of 483 years. You do not have to go to Josephus to learn how long it was from one point to another—you do not have to go to any other statistician or book of chronology outside of the Bible. It is all there. All I have done is to put together what is embodied in the Scripture itself, and in all this list of thousands of chronological statements there is not one in conflict with any other chronological statement in the Bible.

Another important point is the relation of the Bible chronology to modern discoveries, and I shall endeavor to show that there is not a discovery made of any monument or inscription in Babylon or Persia, or anywhere else, which proves that the Bible is in error in regard to any particular event. I will show you the method by which this is done.

When you are surveying you must have some fixed point from which to begin to measure. We begin with the creation of Adam (Gen. 5), where we are told that Adam was 130 years old when Seth was born.

130—age of Adam at birth of Seth (Gen. 5:3).

105—age of Seth at birth of Enos.

90—age of Enos when Cainan was born.

70—age of Cainan when Mahalaleel was born.

65—age of Mahalaleel when Jared was born.

162—age of Jared when Enoch was born.

65—age of Enoch when Methuselah was born.

187—age of Methuselah when Lamech was born.

182—age of Lamech when Noah was born.

1056

600—age of Noah at the Flood (Gen. 7:6).

1656—date of the Flood, 1,656 years after the creation of Adam.

This is the method the Bible adopts. It takes a line of descent and tells you how old the first man was when one of his sons was born, then how old that son was when one of his sons was born, and by simple addition you get the exact number of years from the creation of Adam until the birth of that particular son. Noah was 600 years old when the flood came; you add that to the date of his birth, 1056, and 1656 is the date of the flood. You see how simple it is.

The Five Chronological Gaps

In addition to simple lists of this kind there are certain difficulties that are called gaps. For instance, how will you get from Noah to Shem? The record does not tell how old Noah was when Shem was born, but there is a way to figure it. There are five of these gaps. We are not told directly how old Terah was when Abraham was born, but we can find out by comparing other Scriptures. There is a difficulty, also, in going from Genesis to Exodus. Genesis ends with the death of Joseph, and in Exodus you begin with the birth of Moses. How long was it between Genesis and Exodus? It does not tell you directly, but there is a way of discovering it and you will find that between the death of Joseph and the birth of Moses was just 64 years. There is also a gap between Joshua and the Judges and one between Eli and Saul.

Let us take the Genesis to Exodus knot and untie it. In Exodus 12:40, 41, we are told that from the call of Abraham to the Exodus was 430 years. That period of 430 years is made up of three parts. The first is from the call of Abraham to the birth of Joseph, and that we are told in Scripture is a period of 286 years. The second is the one we want to find which is from the death of Joseph to the birth of Moses. I cannot put that in because it is nowhere told us directly, but the third period, from the birth of Moses to the Exodus is 80 years. If you know what the whole is, and if you know it is divided into three parts and you know two of them, how would find out the other? By simple addition 286 and 80 is 366, and by subtraction 366 from 430 leaves 64, so from the end of Genesis to the beginning of Exodus, or more accurately from the death of Joseph to the birth of Moses is a period of 64 years. This is one illustration of the way in which these five connections sometimes called "gaps" are established and made good. It is all contained in the Scripture itself although you have to go to some other part of it to bring the points together.

A third point has to do with higher criticism and the historical character of the biblical records. It is a fundamental postulate of Kuenen, one of the leaders of higher criticism, that the supernatural cannot be admitted to be true. His words are, "As soon as we allow the supernatural or immediate revelation to intervene in even a single point, so long our view of the whole continues to be inaccurate. It is the supposition of a natural development alone which accounts for all the phenomena." This he applies not only to the early chapters of Genesis, but even to the words of our Lord himself. He says: "We must either cast aside as worthless our dearly bought scientific method, or else cease forever to acknowledge the authority of the New Testament in the interpretation of the Old." That is to say, this scientific method, as he calls it (which is not a truly scientific method at all), cannot be upheld if we are to allow Jesus Christ and the writers of the New Testament to interpret the Old Testament. It would appear that there must be something wrong with the scientific method of the higher critics. I therefore point out where the fallacy comes in. If the only effect of this study is to rehabilitate the early chapters of Genesis and make them live before you not as myth, legend, allegory or poetry, but as an authentic record of actual historic facts, it will have accomplished its purpose.

Christianity Based on Fact

All science is based upon fact. The first thing a scientific man does to establish a truth is to collect the facts, and then sift and classify them; but he must have facts to begin with. It is the same with religion. It must not be evolved out of the brain of some philosopher who merely speculates.

The New Testament is divided into three parts: First the Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles, which contain historical facts; then the Epistles in the first part of which you get doctrinal truths, or interpretations of the facts. In the Gospels you get the fact that Christ died on Calvary—in the Epistles you get the interpretation of that fact. He died for our sins. The third part of the New Testament arises naturally in the form of duties. These are found in the latter part of the Epistles. If you have a truth—the interpretation of a fact, it follows that something must be done. The laws of duty spring spontaneously out of the truth.

But this applies to the Old Testament as well as the New. In the Old Testament we begin with facts. God does not speak to us through the telephone and say what He wants us to do, but the revelation is embodied in historical facts. God was going to send His Son who would be the Redeemer of mankind, and the prophets tell us what kind of Redeemer He was going to be, what line He was coming from and all about Him. It is all preparatory, and it is all fact, and there is not one discrepancy in any of these records to which I have referred.

Next take the Mosaic authorship of the Pentateuch. There have been six different theories about it, among the higher critics. When the first theory was found incorrect, they adopted a second, and when that was found unsound, they adopted a third and so on to the sixth. As you know, every fresh attack on Christianity shows that all previous attacks have failed because Christianity is still living. Would it be necessary to write another book against it if the previous attacks had been sound and held good? So these theories drop away one after another, and we have to deal with the matter in the particular form in which we have it today.

Jacob Not a Youthful Lover

I ask this question, How old was Jacob when he left home and went to Padan Aram to the house of Laban? Have any of you worked this out? Follow it this way: Genesis 41:46 says that Joseph when he interpreted the dreams of Pharaoh was 30 years old. The dream was of 7 years of plenty and 7 years of famine. At the end of the 7 years of plenty Joseph was 37; then his brothers came down into Egypt to buy corn and the first year they went back. The second year they came down again and afterward sent for their father Jacob, and he went down in the second year of the famine, when Joseph would be 39. But you read in Genesis 47:9 that when Jacob went down into Egypt he was 130 years old. So when Joseph is 39 Jacob is 130. If Joseph was 39 when Jacob was 130, how old was Jacob when Joseph was born?—39 years less, i.e., when Joseph was born Jacob was 91. How old was Jacob when he went to Padan Aram? He served Laban 14 years before Joseph was born, which takes 14 years more off to the time when he left home. Therefore he was 77 when he left home and had that vision at Bethel. Think it over. I dare say you have preached sermons on the young man leaving home and the perils of going up to the great city, and you think Jacob was about 21; but if you read and know your Bible you will be startled at the revelations that will come to you. Jacob was 77 when he left home for Padan Aram.

Here is another difficulty. There are three statements in the Bible respecting the number of men that went down into Egypt: Genesis 46:26 says there were 66; Genesis 46:27 says there were 70, and Acts 7:14 says there were 75. How can it be 66, 70 and 75? It is perfectly clear if you read the account with care. It says, "those who came out of the loins of Jacob that went down with him were 66," then, "all the souls that went down were 70." That is four more. But who were already down there before Jacob went? Joseph and his two sons Manasseh and Ephraim. Then there is Jacob himself. Sixty-six went with him—3 there before, and Jacob himself make 70. But why does Stephen say 75? He says all the kindred of Jacob—not his sons only. His kindred includes five more. Who were these five? Their names are taken from other parts of Scripture, and Stephen, quoting the Septuagint translation, includes them all. So that reconciles this discrepancy of the three numbers by showing that when one number is mentioned it means one class, and when another number is mentioned it means another class, etc. It could not be more than 66 that went down with Jacob that came out of his loins, but it was 75 individuals who went down into Egypt including his kindred.

Professor Kent's Mistake

Regarding this misleading hypothesis of the higher critics you have here in America the distinguished professor, C. Foster Kent, of Yale. In talking about the years of the sojourn in Egypt he gives four figures, and says they are inconsistent with each other. First of all, they go down into Egypt and are there four generations and then come back. He says that must have been a period of 100 or 150 years. These are Dr. Kent's own figures. He says a later editor puts the period as 400 years, and another compiler says 430 years, while the Septuagint says 215 years, which Dr. Kent regards as "manifestly a compromise" between the 100 or 150 and the 400 or 430. Let me show you what these four periods are, for every one of them is absolutely correct. First we have the call of Abraham, then a period of 30 years, or the time that Abraham sojourned in Canaan before he had his seed. We mark off another period of 185 years and this will be the time that his seed sojourned in Canaan. Thirty years Abraham alone sojourned in Canaan, 185 years the seed of Abraham sojourned in Canaan, and from the time that Jacob went down into Egypt with all his family to the Exodus is 215 years. The number 215 is perfectly correct. It is not stated in Scripture, but it is implied there and it is stated in the Septuagint translation. They put two and two together and specified it. Add together these three and what do you get?—430 years.

Thirty years, Abraham sojourned in Canaan; 180 years, Abraham's seed sojourned in Canaan; 215 years, the Children of Israel sojourned and were afflicted in Egypt.

You will see that when 400 years is mentioned it is the 400 years that the seed of Abraham sojourned—not Abraham himself. It says that the seed of Abraham shall be afflicted and be sojourners in Egypt. They sojourned in Canaan and were afflicted in Egypt for 400 years. How did we get our 430? Add them all together and you will see that "Abraham and his seed" would be sojourners and strangers for 430 years. The thing is clear as daylight, and you do not need to say one man said one period and another, another period—one 400 and one 430. You do not need to divide the Bible up, and say wherever there is a contradiction one statement must be by one man and another by another. The thing is clear if you see that wherever there is a different predicate there is a different subject. Where there is a different period named there is always a different event specified.

The higher critics are correcting and amending the Bible, and saying here is an error that has crept in and this is manifestly a mistake, and so on. They go on amending it until there is hardly anything left but the covers that you can rely upon. It reminds me of a veterinary surgeon who had to look after the cattle of a farmer, and when he sent in his bill one of the items was, "To curing your cow until she died." That is the effect of the higher critical conjectural emendations. They amend the Bible until there is no Bible left to amend.

Rules for the Chronology of the Kings of Israel and Judah

The kings of Israel and the kings of Judah are given in parallel columns. A certain king of Israel began to reign in such a year of a certain king of Judah, and reigned so many years. You will see that Rehoboam and Jeroboam both came to the throne at the same time. There is the period from the time that they came to the throne, to another point when Jehu killed the two kings of Israel and Judah at the same time. You add the number of years that they reigned together and you find that in Judah it comes to 95 and in Israel to 98. How do you account for that difference? You have to discover the reason by close attention to the narrative. You will find first, that every year is a complete calendar year, beginning on the Jewish January 1, and ending on the Jewish December 31. They have a different beginning for their year, but it was the calendar year measured from the first day to the last day of the year that they meant. If a king began to reign on July 1 they reckoned in two different ways the number of the years of his reign. In Judah, they would say that the previous part of that year was the last year of his predecessor, and while the remainder of the year was not that of his own accession indeed, yet nevertheless his first year would begin not until January 1 next after his predecessor's death. A king dies July 1—another begins to reign July 1, but the first year of the second of the two begins on January 1. In Judah they always reckon in that way, but in Israel they do not. In Israel if the king died on July 1, they would say the first part of the year was the last year of the king who went out, and the remainder of the year was the first year of his successor. That year would be counted twice. It would be included in the years of the predecessor and again in the years of the successor. That is why you have 95 years in the history of Judah and 98 years in the history of Israel for the same starting point to the same point of arrival.

Amusing Contradictions

There are certain apparent contradictions in Scripture on which an amusing light is thrown by those who have the grace and the insight to see it. Dr. Lightfoot says: "You will find divers such passages as these in the story of the kings: Ahaziah 2 years older than his father (2 Chron. 22:2); Baasha fighting 9 years after he is dead (2 Chron. 16:1), Jotham reigning 4 years after he is buried (2 Kings 15:30), Joram crowned king in the 17th year of Jehoshaphat (2 Kings 1:17; cf. 1 Kings 22:51), and in the 22nd year of Jehoshaphat (2 Kings 8:16) and after Jehoshaphat's death (2 Chron. 21:1). For the resolution of such ambiguities you need only the text, if it be well searched. Admirable it is to see how the Holy Spirit in discords hath shown the sweet music. But few mark this because but few take the right course in reading the Scriptures. Hence, when men see flat contradictions, as they suppose, they are ready to deny their Bibles. A little pains will soon amend this wavering and settle men upon the rock whereon to be built is to be sure."

Let us take this man who died two years older than his father, Ahaziah. In 2 Kings 8:26 we are told that Ahaziah was 22 years old when he began to reign, and in 2 Chronicles 22:2 we are told that he was 42 years old when he began to reign and therefore two years older than his father. Now the golden rule for solving all difficulties of this kind is, first, look to the Hebrew and see if you have the right translation, and secondly, read the context and see if there is any reason for such a statement. The Hebrew does not say that Ahaziah was "42 years old" or "22 years old," but it says that he was "a son of 22 years"—"a son of 42 years,"—and this has a little different shade of meaning. It means that you trace the point of origination, either for his life or for something else, it may be his kingdom or dynasty. There is a point of origin of some kind, 42 years back, possibly that of some of his ancestry. Next notice the character of these people because that has something to do with it. In Judah, we have Jehoram who married Athaliah. Athaliah was the daughter of Ahab and Jezebel. You know the character of Athaliah and Jezebel and Ahab. Ahab's father was Omri, and he was a founder of a new dynasty. He killed off all the posterity of the king that had been before him and founded a new dynasty. After Jehoram we get this man Ahaziah. There is a passage (Matt. 1:8) which says that this man Jehoram begat not his son or grandson but his great-great-grandson, Uzziah. Let us fill in each name here—Jehoram, Ahaziah, Joash, Amaziah, Uzziah. Matthew says that Jehoram begat Uzziah, and these three intervening names are struck out. The New Testament omits these three generations, and that is what makes it fourteen generations from David to the captivity. Ahaziah had a double origin. From his birth to his coming to the throne was a period of 22 years. But the Holy Spirit will not acknowledge him as the son of David, but traces him back to his mother and to Omri, and says he was a son of 42 years because Omri commenced the dynasty which he founded 42 years before the accession of Ahaziah. All the generations of the wicked are to be blotted out, and Matthew has done that. "Let his posterity be cut off, and in the generation following let their name be blotted out. Let the iniquity of his fathers be remembered with the Lord, and let not the sin of his mother be blotted out. Let them be before the Lord continually that he may cut off the memory of them from the earth." (Ps. 109: 13-15). "For I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation." (Exod. 20:5). It is all done in accordance with divine principles and there is a real meaning in the omissions.

The Seventy Years of Daniel

Now we come to the 70 years which begin with the third year of Jehoiakim, Daniel 1:1. Do not take Daniel as any less historical, or any less reliable, than any other book in the Bible. It is all equally valid history and all equally true. "In the third year of Jehoiakim, king of Judah, came Nebuchadnezzar to Jerusalem, and besieged it and carried it away into captivity." The captivity began in the third year of Jehoiakim. Now turn to Jeremiah 25:1-3. This is the most important date in the whole Bible because it connects the dates of Bible history and the dates of secular history. It says that a certain year of a king of Judah, was the first year of a certain king known through the monuments in secular history. "The word of the Lord came to Jeremiah in the fourth year of Jehoiakim that was the first year of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon." So you have the synchronism established. You know that the fourth year of Jehoiakim was the first year of Nebuchadnezzar.

So you can connect secular chronology and scriptural chronology.

Let us turn to Ezra and Nehemiah. In the narrative in Ezra 4:24 you have mention of Darius and the temple building begun again in the second year of Darius. Then turn to 6:14 where it says the temple was finished in the sixth year of Darius in accordance with the decree of Darius and Artaxerxes. I think this should be "Darius, even Artaxerxes." The temple was finished in the sixth year of Darius, even Artaxerxes, who had become an emperor now and was called by a larger title. Then you come to Ezra 7:8, 9, and it says that Ezra came from Babylon in the seventh year of this Artaxerxes. The point is this—every modern writer, orthodox and critical—tells us there is a gap of 56 years between the sixth and seventh chapters of Ezra. I do not believe it. I think Artaxerxes is the same as Darius. In the sixth chapter the temple is finished, in the sixth year of Darius, even Artaxerxes, and in the next, the seventh chapter, Ezra comes to the temple with the vessels, in the seventh year of Artaxerxes. What should Ezra be doing 56 years afterwards bringing the vessels to the temple? It does not seem natural. Now in Nehemiah 1:1 you get the twentieth year. It does not tell of whose reign it is the twentieth year. It does not need to do so because it has already mentioned the king's name in the other part of the book, viz., in Ezra. In the second chapter you have the twentieth year of Artaxerxes, the year in which Nehemiah comes to Jerusalem. If you do not accept this interpretation, and identify this monarch with Artaxerxes and also with the Ahasuerus of Esther, Ezra would be 141 years, and Nehemiah 103 years older than he was when he came to Jerusalem the first time.

Proof of my identification of Darius with Artaxerxes is this: We are given the names in the tenth and twelfth of Nehemiah of the priests and Levites who came up with Zerubbabel, and those who came up with Nehemiah. Now out of these priests and Levites—out of the 30 names given, 20 are still living when Nehemiah comes, which, according to the common chronology, is 91 years after. How could 20 out of 30 men be living 91 years after? I say it is a mistake in the chronology and should be only 34 years later, because the twentieth year of Artaxerxes is the twentieth year of Darius, not the twentieth year of another man who was also called Artaxerxes, and who reigned later.

In the interpretation of prophecy, Bible chronology is of immense importance. It has a very special interest for every student of prophecy. I believe that "the going forth of the commandment to restore and rebuild Jerusalem" refers to the decree of Cyrus when 42,000 people went back. Daniel is standing just on the eve of this event which is going to take place in a couple of years. I do not think it can be interpreted of any of the other decrees. There are four decrees altogether mentioned. The second was that of Darius, the second year, when nobody went back. The next decree, that of the seventh year of Artaxerxes, comes 7 years too soon. The fourth decree was that of the twentieth year of Artaxerxes which comes 5 years too late, but the interpreters of prophecy have tried to make it fit. One man says Artaxerxes was reigning as co-rex with his son a certain number of years, and that alters his date and makes the numbers fit. The most popular explanation is that these years are not ordinary years of 365 days, but years of 360 days. But in my view you never get a plain, straightforward, common-sense statement that will fit in with the accepted chronology in any case. You must not, however, take my view unless you are compelled to take it. You must stick to the view which you have already received, and which is set before you by your teachers, until you are convinced that my view is the true one.

There is no way of measuring the years between the Old and New Testaments except by the book of Daniel. If you go by the Bible you will see that it is perfectly consistent with itself and that this prophecy was fulfilled on the very day on which it was to be accomplished.

Fanny Crosby and Grover Cleveland

By Rev. James M. Gray, D. D.

LAST month Fanny Crosby, "the blind singer," was called home to "see Him face to face," whom she had extolled, and had helped so many others to extol, in all these years.

The press, secular and religious, has said so much about her that little that is new remains to be picked up by a monthly periodical at this date. But there is an interesting chapter in her life, in which she came in contact with Grover Cleveland, which has not been referred to in any of the periodicals which we have seen. It is recorded in "Recollections of Grover Cleveland," by George F. Parker (The Century Company, 1909).

Mr. Cleveland's brother, William, was the principal male teacher in the Institute for the Blind at Ninth Avenue and Thirty-fourth Street, New York, which at that time had about 200 pupils. Returning from the funeral of his father, he arranged with the Institution to give his younger brother, Grover, a place, so that within a few weeks the latter became book-keeper and assistant to the superintendent.

Mr. Cleveland often spoke of this first absence from home, and of his earliest real work after going out into the world, and in 1892, when Mr. Parker was collecting information for a sketch of his life, he referred him to Fanny Crosby, a pupil and teacher in that institution from 1835 to 1858. In order to get her impressions of the young man at that time, Mr. Parker had a long interview with her, the report of which forms an interesting portion of the "Recollections."

When Cleveland came to the institution in 1853 he was in his seventeenth year, and Miss

Crosby describes him as "a marvel of precocity," and with motherly caution she used to say to him, "Take care that you do not study too much and injure yourself." One incident that brings the two together in a characteristic way we quote at length:

Never "Saucy" in Her Life

"The superintendent of the institution had do so no longer; if it is repeated, I will report you to the managers.' The superintendent looked at me with the greatest astonishment, but my reply had just the effect that Mr. Cleveland said it would have. I never had any further trouble with the obnoxious superintendent, nor did he assume such a manner towards me or Mr. Cleveland any more."

After young Cleveland left the institution she never heard from him again until he had become governor of New York. During that period one of her friends gave her "a sort of benefit," as she called it, and sent an invitation to the governor, who immediately wrote back saying, "I remember my old friend, Fanny Crosby, very well," and in further token of his remembrance sent a financial contribution to her "benefit."

One wonders if some of the poems which Mr. Cleveland copied for Fanny Crosby were the gospel songs that have since become so well-known, and so greatly blessed, to thousands upon thousands of the redeemed on earth and in heaven. As a child he had been brought up in a Christian household under the ministration of a father, who was a minister of the gospel and noted for his deep piety, and his older brother William, to whom he was left in charge on the death of his father, also a minister of the gospel. How much these early influences and surroundings must have had to do with the moulding of the character of that man who was one of the most upright and conscientious presidents our country has ever had. Perhaps some day we shall discover that blind Fanny Crosby was blessing the world through the White House in a way of which the world never dreamed.

IN TIME OF TROUBLE

Say—

First—He brought me here; it is by His will I am in this strait place; in that will I rest.

Next—He will here keep me in His love, and give me grace in this trial to act as His child.

Then—He will make the trial a blessing, teaching me the lesson He means me to learn and working in me the grace He intends for me.

Last—In His good time He can bring me out again—how and when, He knows.

Say—I am here:

First—By God's appointment.

Second—In His keeping.

Third—Under His training.

Fourth—For His time.

a dictatorial way when he found himself in authority over anybody. It so happened one day that I went down stairs into the office, where Mr. Cleveland worked, and asked him to copy a poem. He did so, and when he had nearly finished the work, the superintendent came in and said, in a very insolent way: 'Miss Crosby, when you want Mr. Cleveland to copy a piece for you, I will thank you to come and ask me.' Of course I felt very much hurt, and when the superintendent went out, Mr. Cleveland said to me: 'Now, Fanny Crosby, how long do you intend to allow that man to harrow up your feelings like this?' I asked him, 'What can I do to stop it?' and he said, 'By giving as good as he sent.'

"I was nonplussed, and in reply I said, 'Mr. Cleveland, I never was saucy in my life.' To this he replied: 'But it is not impudent to take your own part, and you never will be taught independence and self-reliance any younger. Now, we will try an experiment. Come down tomorrow, and ask me to copy another poem for you. I will do so, and then you come in as usual, and you will see the consequences, but in any event make up your mind never to let any one impose upon you.' According to this agreement I went down and asked Mr. Cleveland to copy a poem for me. As was anticipated, the superintendent came in and made the same remark. Then I turned round and said to him: 'I want you to understand that I am second to no one in this institution except yourself, and I have borne with your insolence so long that I will

Expository Preaching

By H. J. Baldwin,

A Student in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

IN the study of homiletics we find that sermons, or public addresses for delivery in the pulpit, divide themselves into four general classes as to their nature and style: The topical, the textual, the Bible reading, and the expository sermon. It is the last of these that we are to consider, but it is impossible to define or describe any one of them without making a comparison of all.

Briefly, a topical sermon is one, in which the speaker after the selection of a text, takes his theme from it, and then develops that theme as he pleases independent of the text. That is, the text merely furnishes the central thought of the discourse.

The textual sermon is one, in which after a text has been selected, the thought follows the suggestion of the text. Or perhaps, it might be better understood if we should say that all the main divisions of the sermon must come from the text itself.

The Bible reading sermon is a discourse in which the whole teaching of the Bible is sought on a given subject, and all the passages bearing on that subject are compiled and compared.

Now in distinction from these classes, expository preaching means the explanation of a given passage of Scripture. It may cover few or many verses, but in comparison with the text, for a textual sermon, the passage chosen is usually longer. In the textual sermon the main divisions are drawn from the text and then proven or established in any way that the preacher may deem best either from Scripture or otherwise. In expository preaching the preacher must stay by the Word, because as the name by which it is called indicates, it is the exposition or explanation of Scripture.

There are three kinds of expository preaching, but space will not allow more than the mention of them:

1. That which treats all the details.
2. That which sketches certain details and deals with them.
3. That which masses all the details on a central theme.

Expository preaching may include a series of sermons on a given portion of Scripture, in which case the last of the series would be to the other as the conclusion in an exposition consisting of a single discourse.

The Essential of an Expository Sermon

One great essential of an expository sermon must be that of unity in structure. The preacher has all the material of the chapter with which to build, but he must see to it that he has but a single structure when completed. It must be systematic. It must be logical. The mason is given a great pile of stones which are in no shape for a building but he must cut and hew them into the forms that best fit the house he is to build. He must select just the one that will best fit the particular place, and he must see to it that there is but little waste if he is to construct economically. So with the material for the building of a sermon in expository preaching. There is an abundance of it, but it must be so handled and built into the sermon that it will be pleasing to the eye or rather the ear and intellect, and not alone that but the cutting and trimming must be done without waste. Man's aim is to construct for permanency as well as economy and we should use the material God has given us for feeding and building in the same manner.

Broadus speaks of expository preaching as being the "primitive and ancient" method. Would that we might have some of the primitive and ancient results from present day preaching! It would be a long operation to trace expository preaching back and give a history of it, so perhaps the mentioning of some who have followed this style of pulpit discourse will give a sufficient idea of its history. First, there is hardly a great preacher or prophet, whichever term we choose to use, in the Bible, who has not used this method. For example the work of the Scribes was that of reading and explaining the law (the law of Moses) and the prophets. And for a concrete instance we might name Ezra. A close study of the book of Nehemiah will show something of the preaching of Ezra and the great revival that followed. Then Peter, Paul and Stephen stand out in the New Testament. Peter preached from the prophet Joel and following his exposition of the passage and its application over three thousand souls were saved that day. Then Jesus Christ was the greatest of all expositors. Recall if you will, His meeting with the disciples on the walk to Emmaus and how it is written that "Beginning at Moses and the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself." Oh, that we might expound to our people in all the Scripture the things concerning Jesus Christ—that is, that we might see Him and Him only on the printed page!

If it is not irreverent we might name a few modern expositors also. Such as Monod, Bishop Ryle, Joseph Parker, F. W. Robertson, McLaren, F. B. Meyer, G. Campbell Morgan, and others of less note.

Advantages and Disadvantages

There is nothing in this world but has its advantages and its disadvantages, and expository preaching is no exception. We might name just two disadvantages and then pass on to the advantages it possesses. First, it is the most difficult of all the styles of preaching, and requires closer study and application to preach even reasonably well. Secondly, there is a danger that it might incline one toward laziness, because of the fact that some who undertake expository preaching misunderstand it and its purpose, thinking that with a long text they can talk on one verse for a little while, and pass on to another and talk on it for awhile until their allotted time is exhausted. So the lazy minister would be inclined to slight his preparation, depending rather on preaching several sermonettes from the chapter than one sermon possessing unity of thought throughout.

Now as to the advantages of expository preaching, we have so long a list that it is somewhat difficult to know just where to begin and where to stop.

1. It fulfills the very idea of preaching. If we want to learn about agriculture we go out on the farm; if we want to study science we go into the laboratory; if we want to study geology we go out among the rocky places of the land or down into the quarries; the best place to get a comprehensive knowledge of mining is down in the mines where we can learn of the real things of the mining world; so if we want to learn of God and His Word we must get into the Word, and that is just where expository preaching takes us and keeps us.

2. It gives complete and exact knowledge of the teaching of Scripture, or as we might say, it gives the Bible a chance to speak for itself, and the Bible needs no defenders. If allowed to speak for itself it will accomplish that whereunto it has been sent, for His Word will not return unto Him void. In thus giving the Bible a chance to speak for itself all responsibility is taken out of the hands of the speaker and put on God's Word.

3. It gets the Word of God into the mind of the hearer, and gives the Holy Spirit something to work upon, or in other words it gives the Spirit of God material and evidence with which to convict the sinner.

4. It affords the opportunity to treat neglected passages of Scripture, that is, those that might not be well to use in textual or topical preaching.

5. It tends to contribute interest to other sermons. It teaches the people not about the Bible, but it teaches them the Bible, and this of course quite naturally attracts their attention to the beauty of that book and they see things in it they never had seen before. As to the manner in which it contributes to the interest of other sermons let us take a concrete example: Suppose that you had preached a few Sundays ago, using the first chapter of Nehemiah as the basis of your discourse, in which you had dealt with his prayer, the story leading up to it and the elements of that prayer, its result, etc. Now if you are preaching some time later on prayer and its object, just think of the wealth of material you have to draw from that has already been created in the minds of your hearers in connection with this experience of Nehemiah.

As a final word, I believe there is no method of preaching that will give the people the Word as this does, because it is not giving them your words but God's Word all the time, and that is what counts in the final analysis. There may be times when it seems that our efforts have proven futile, but let us remember that it is God's Word that we have been teaching and preaching, and that it shall not return unto Him void. Although we might speak upon other things and move people's emotions and see what to us appear more direct results, yet when the Holy Spirit takes God's own Word, and through us gives it to our people, and then uses it to convince and convict them of sin, there has been a permanent work performed, and not merely the moving of the emotions which may move back again in the same length of time that they moved before. If we want permanent work let us read and explain God's Word to the people who are hungry for it, and thereby give them real soul nourishment.

WHAT HE PREACHED

The eminent divine was called suddenly away to assist in the installation of a new minister in another town, and, being unable to get a supply for his pulpit on such short notice, was forced to leave his Sunday morning service in charge of a young divinity student who was a member of his congregation.

"What kind of a sermon did young Stripling preach?" the divine asked one of the deacons after his return.

"Well, to be candid," the deacon replied, "it was the poorest I ever heard. It showed lack of preparation, weakness of argument, and proved the immaturity of the brain that constructed it. His delivery was excellent, but the sermon was very, very poor."

The same day the divine met the young student and asked how he had managed.

"Got along splendidly, sir," was the reply. "I hadn't time to prepare a sermon of my own, so I preached one of yours that I'd taken down in shorthand."

The Non-College Minister

Editorial in "The Continent"

Attention is being called in many places to the large increase in the number of non-college men enrolled in Presbyterian theological seminaries and to the increase in the number of "extraordinary cases" which are admitted to ordination by the Presbyteries. The Presbyterian church is not rigid even though it is rigorous. The demand for thorough training before entering the ministry implies ordinarily the full college course and the full seminary course. But a man who comes short of that training can be ordained to the ministry by special vote of a presbytery.

A Successful Non-College City Minister

It is proper that provision should be made for thus waiving the standard requirements on occasion. The Lord's call to the ministry does not always include a college education. The pastor of one of the largest churches in Presbyterianism, whose ministry is palpably blessed of God, has never had a college degree. Others are like him, both in efficiency and power, who have never been through college. Moreover, the call of God either comes to some men too late, or is heard by them too late, for the usual training, and they seek to obey even though they must be less well equipped than they or the church could wish. To be sure, some who set out late still persist in going on with complete training; all seminaries know what it is to graduate men much older than the average, who have persisted in the full course after most men are already in the ministry. But these are unusual.

One explanation for the larger number of non-college men preparing for the ministry today is to be found in the recent Men and Religion Forward Movement and similar campaigns which have challenged the attention of men to distinctively Christian work. These movements have told of the hesitation of many choice young men in the colleges to undertake the work of the ministry; sometimes they have made much of a "shortage" in the ministry. It was a message which many men heard for the first time and their hearts were moved. They felt the demand for more workers and gave themselves to the Lord for His work.

The Doorway to Christian Service

In the present organization of church activities, the ministry is the most obvious doorway into Christian service. To it these awakened men have turned with willing feet. Pastors have welcomed their desires, presbyteries have approved their decision, and they have gone forward in the work of preparation at that point which lay nearest to them.

* * * * *

Let it be said very earnestly that among these non-college men is some of the best material for the ministry that the church can find. Let it also be said, however, that in a better organization of the church's work some of them would doubtless find large and useful places as lay helpers, pastor's assistants, Sunday-school workers, trained in some lay school with such duty in view. Meanwhile, however, each has received that primary approval of a presbytery which looks toward ordination and is pursuing his preparation under the guidance of that body.

* * * * *

"Put yourself in our place," writes a presbyterial chairman, "with fifty churches, many of them feeble, and only half enough men; if a man appeared who was willing to undertake the plain parish, whose heart God has touched and who has manifest powers of leadership, you would welcome him." In view of these practical conditions, it seems the part of reason to give such approved candidates at least so much training as can be given them from a curriculum fundamentally prepared for men of a different intellectual habit. And results justify this policy. It is a familiar fact concerning these non-college ministers that a large proportion are blessed with great gatherings when they set out to preach the gospel.

Practical Training vs. Seminary Work

All the real trouble in the matter comes in from another angle. There are occasionally men palpably unfit for the work of the ministry, to whom presbyteries are afraid to say an adverse word. They encourage them to go forward, expecting that in the course of training they will grow fitted for the great work to which they look. Then, instead of preparing the way for the largest possible measure of training, these presbyteries send them directly to the seminaries. Here is where needed care must be applied. We would not see the door shut on men whom the Lord has called, but we share the feeling that greater care is needed on the part of presbyteries and their committees both in accepting men as candidates for training and in ordaining them without training.

And in the long run God and not the church will determine. Where His Spirit rests the church cannot hinder the worker or the work. Nor can the church make a strong man by its unaided ordination nor by all the schooling on earth. You cannot leave God out.

A Striking Incident in Personal Work

By Evangelist H. D. Kennedy

DURING the World's Fair in Chicago, I took the train one beautiful morning and went out to Evanston to visit the Seminary. I reached the town about ten o'clock, and after walking a block from the station, I passed two men, standing on the street corner, and asked them where the Seminary was. One of them said, "It is up this street," and then he left the other and walked on with me. He did not seem to be in a hurry, so I slowed up to keep pace with him, and he began to talk out loud to himself. The novelty of it attracted me, and what he said clearly showed the cast of his mind and a troubled condition of his soul.

"Theology! Theology!" he said. "What is theology? A lot of people are breaking their necks over theology, and what is it?" Then he looked up, and said, "I see the sun. Is the sun God, is nature God, or is there another God?"

Now up to this time I had not spoken, except to ask where the Seminary was. He stopped abruptly, and looking at me, said in a very off-hand way, "Well, stranger, I rather like you." "Do you?" I said, "I am glad of that. I would not want to have a quarrel with you." He said, "I took you for a theological student and I supposed you would contradict me." "Oh, no!" I said, "I would not do that. I never contradict men like you." "Why not?" he said. "Because," I replied, "It may be you know a lot more than I do and I might get beaten, besides arguing with a man in your condition will never do him any good." He said, "Are you a theological student?" I said, "I am a Christian." I did not know that I could be with him very long, so I wanted to get to the point at once.

"A Christian!" he said. "What is a Christian?" I said, "Do you want to know?" "Yes," he said, "I would like to hear what you have to say about it." "All right," I said. "There was a time in my life when I was not a Christian, but now I know I am one, and if it will be of any benefit to you, for me to tell you the way to become one, I will be glad to do so." So I said, "My friend, I take you to be a man seeking truth, but you realize that thus far you are entirely in the dark concerning God and His revelations to man. I also believe you cannot be fooled with a sham." "You have struck it right," he said, "I am thirty-five years old, I am a graduate of Oxford, I have been in every country in Europe and in every State in this Union. I have also been in all kinds of churches, yet, I have never found any one who could tell me whether there is a God or not." "Well," I said, "that is surely strange in the light of this century." Then I added, "Are you open to conviction? Do you really want to know?" "Yes," he replied, "I am, and if you can tell me the real thing I am willing to listen."

As I looked into his face I saw he meant it. His countenance was frank and open, but a look of doubt and despair seemed to take all the brightness out of his expression, and I felt that God and the devil were at that moment bidding for his soul. He was not in an argumentative mood as men of that cast usually are, so I breathed a silent prayer to God and went on.

The Thing That Seemed Real

I felt that it was unwise to use my Bible with him, for he would have asked, "Where did you get that book?" There would be nothing gained by telling him the Bible was God's Word, he would have said, "Who is God?" So I saw the only thing to do, was to start with the one thing that seemed real to him and the thing in which he was already interested, so I looked up as he had done and said, "That sun is like myself; it was created by God." He said, "Who made God?" I looked at him, and said quietly and kindly, "Look here my friend, I am not anxious to talk to you at all. The fact that we have met today means nothing to me; it is not my opportunity, it is yours. I am not in the dark, you are. I have gotten people like you out of the dark before, and I believe I can help you; but, you must let me have a starting point, and my starting point is God. You may call Him the 'First Cause' if you will, I call Him God." "All right," he said, "go on."

So I continued. "I believe God created everything. The fact of God, is the only explanation reasonable to me, of the existence of this universe. Nothing just happens, even the palm of my hand has a definite pattern and plan in it." "Yes," he said, "it would seem that way." "Well then," I said, "let us first settle on God as the Creator and assume that He made the universe and everything in it."

"By what process was it done?" he asked. I said, "I believe He made the heavens and the earth first, then vegetable and animal life, and finally man, made in His own likeness." "How did God make man?" he asked, "by evolution?" I said, "I don't know, I was not there. He may have done it that way, though I do not believe He did. If other people wish to claim their ancestry that way I have no objection, but for my part I make no such claim. Still if it were by the process of evolution that God made man that does not alter the fact, that at one time in this world's history, there lived a man and a woman called Adam and Eve. That is as much a matter of history as that Caesar or Napoleon lived."

God's Right in Man

"All right," he said, "but what was God's purpose in making this man and woman?" "To bring glory to Himself," I answered. "In what way?" he asked. "By being obedient to Him," I said. "If you write a book you can get it copyrighted and control it. If you invent a machine you can get it patented and control it, and you more than any one else should be capable of knowing just why the book was written or the machine invented." "Yes," he said, "that is reasonable." "Then," I said, "since God was the Maker of man He surely had the right to control him and it was not unreasonable of Him to demand obedience; for only through man's obedience could God get glory out of His creation. But being made in the likeness of God, Adam and Eve were capable of making a choice; they chose to disobey Him. Therefore they were thrown out of harmony with Him and would have remained out of harmony forever, if He of His own free grace had not done something to restore them to His favor."

"But," he said, "if God loved Adam and Eve, why did He not forgive them without any third person coming into it?" "Well," I said, "Suppose I insulted you and then asked you to forgive me, you could do it; but, suppose I stole your watch and were arrested and sent to prison, would your forgiveness take me out of prison?" "No," he said, "the law would have you." "True," I said, "then the law had Adam and Eve. God could have forgiven them but they would still be guilty, besides God had said, if they sinned they would die, they sinned, therefore were under sentence of death. For God to require no reckoning at the hand of the sinner would prove His law of no value, and His right as moral Sovereign over men would be brought to naught. Sin had to be dealt with, for 'the wages of sin is death.' There was no use in Adam and Eve saying to each other, 'You die for me.' Each would have had to answer 'I have my own sin to die for.' It was necessary, therefore, for some one to die who had no sin of his own, in order for them to be forgiven and go free." I also told him that before God drove them out of the garden of Eden He promised them a Saviour, when He said,

"The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head," in other words, that some sinless one was to come and live, that He might die for the sins of others, and thus make it possible for man's relationship with God to be restored.

The Value of Christ's Death

I then told him about God sending His Son into the world, and that Christ so lived that He proved to the universe that what God asked Adam to do, could be done, and could be done by a man, for at the close of His life He said to the world, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" He said to His disciples, "I do always the things that please my Father," and to His Father He said, "I have finished the work thou gavest me to do." Then after Christ had thus by His life of obedience vindicated God, and had no sin of His own, He voluntarily offered Himself a sacrifice for the sins of all others.

"But," said my friend, "how could Christ's death have such value if He were a man? Would not His death, even if He were sinless, only atone for the sins of one sinner?" "Yes," I answered, "that would be true if He were only a man, but, though He was as truly man as we are men, He was also the only begotten Son of God, and God was in Him reconciling the world to Himself, so that through Christ's death on the Cross, God did more for man, than He could have done through all other men put together. And Christ's righteousness in that act, more than overbalanced all the unrighteousness of all other men. He was a man that He might die, but He was God, that His death might have infinite value and thus count for more than if all other men were to die. Death has a claim upon all other men because of sin, but it had no claim on Christ for He had not sinned. Death did not choose Him; He chose death, and because He did, He destroyed its power and bore away the sin of the world, making it possible for God to be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus."

I also told him that Christ said when He was on earth, "I have power to lay my life down and I have power to take it again," and that by His resurrection He proved the claim He made, also that God bore witness to the fact, in that He raised Jesus up and exalted Him to a place at His own right hand to be a prince and a Saviour. This proved that what Christ had done satisfied God, not that Christ was more loving than God, but that the eternal contract between the Father and the Son had been carried out and the work of man's redemption had been so completed, that any sinner who would accept Christ as his Saviour might stand uncondemned before God, as though he had never sinned at all.

"It Looks Sense"

I turned and looked at my friend and the tears were running down his face. He said, "Where did you get all that?" I said, "In the Bible." He said, "I never heard it before, what do you want me to do?" I said, "If you want to be a Christian as I am, believe what I have told you and accept Christ as your Saviour, for God has said, 'As many as received him (Jesus) to them gave he the right to become children of God, even to them that believe in his name.'" He said, "It looks sense." "Yes," I said, "it is the only thing that is sense for a man in your condition. Let us bow our heads here and pray." We did so, and right there on the street he accepted the Saviour and the light of God dawned in his soul. And Oh! what a change came over his face!

We spent the day together, talking on this great theme, and at six o'clock I took the train back to Chicago. He came with me a few blocks, bidding me good-by on three corners. At last we parted and he went on his way rejoicing. I never saw him before or since; I forgot to ask him his name and he did not ask me mine; but I left him in the keeping of the Saviour he had found and expect to meet him in glory.

N. B. It is now over twenty years since the above incident took place. I have never printed it before; but as God has used it many times in leading people of this class out of the dark, when I have related it in public addresses and in dealing with individuals, I have been led to publish it, trusting it may be the means of helping many others.

The Testimony of a Shut-In Over four years ago God gave me a burning desire to become one of His intercessors; and the burden of my prayer was, that each day, I might claim an "inheritance" of heathen souls that would not be saved if I failed to pray; and such was the soul-agony that death seemed preferable to an unanswered prayer. At the time, I was suffering from a severe accident and was trusting for divine healing.

At last I was shown by the Holy Spirit where two ways met; one was the path of intercession, shut in from public life, and the other, through God's healing power, that of active service.

The Spirit said to me, "Choose which path you will take."

I said, "Dear Father, I will follow thee as an intercessor."

I am still confined to my wheel chair, but I have never regretted the choice then made. God has so ordered my life that I can give the best hours to prayer, which the Spirit indites, and to service with my pen, which the Spirit controls. God-sent assurances reach me now and then, that both prayers and pen are blessed of God. Daily I claim my "inheritance," and at various times the dear Father gives me a faint vision of what it means to be able to do so. Only the great love that caused Him to give His Son to save a lost world, could have induced Him to give to one so unworthy, such a priceless gift.

God still gives me many hours in Gethsemane that I may have fellowship with Him in His sufferings. But when He gives me the assurance of victory I cast my burden on the great Burden-bearer, and then day, by day, claim the blessing I won in Gethsemane for the person or the object, for which I prayed.

The Holy Spirit still gives me burdens and victories, until now there is a long list where there is no dividing line between asking and receiving. There are many prayers through which final victory is given, and yet the Spirit tells us that God's time has not yet come to answer.

Intercessory prayer claims God's help, guidance and power for the work of the day, for either an individual or an organization of workers as the case may be. The prayer of faith is so unchanging that every day it will rise before God so full of the Spirit's intercession that "it will bring things to pass," not by man's power, but by God working through man.

THE PRAYER OF A SHUT-IN

By Mrs. W. S. Goodell

I come to Thee, my dearest Lord,
In simple trust without a fear,
But that the One who bids me come,
Will lend to me a listening ear.

I come because I need Thy aid;
I am too weak to walk alone,
So to the strong I look for help
To bear my burdens as Thine own.—

For Thou hast bid me cast on Thee
My sorrows, and each anxious care,
And Thou with all a Father's love
Wilt for Thy child the burden bear.

I would draw near and nearer still;
O, draw me by Thy precious blood,
And 'neath its shelter let me now
Reconsecrate myself to God.

Practical and Perplexing Questions

Answered by the Editors

DANIEL AND REVELATION

Question: Does the 70th week in the book of Daniel or the time when God again begins to deal with Israel, commence at the 7th chapter in the book of Revelation or before?

Answer: In our judgment it begins at chapter 6, or in other words synchronizes with the opening of the seals.

ANSWERS TO PRAYER

Question: May we not take 1 John 5:14, 15 (placing the emphasis on the "know") and, in the assurance of a definite answer to a definite prayer, claim that the gracious Spirit has shown us things to come?

Answer: The language of this correspondent is somewhat obscure, but we think we may answer, "Yes."

THE CHURCH IN THE OLD TESTAMENT

Question: If the Church is not mentioned in the Old Testament, what is meant in Solomon's Song when the beloved, or love, is so often spoken of?

Answer: This may refer to Israel, or to the church, in a typical or symbolic sense, but is not a mention of the church literally.

AN EXEGETICAL QUESTION

Question: Can we find in Romans 8:25 a direct bearing upon the two following verses? If so, may we appropriate verse 25 in connection with John 16:13, 1 John 5:14-15?

Answer: We do not think verse 25 has a direct bearing on the two verses following, but rather belongs to the preceding verses 18-24. Verses 26 and 27 on the other hand, carry us back to the work of the Holy Spirit in the believer, the reference to which was broken off by a parenthesis at verse 16. For this reason, the application of verse 25 to the passages in the Gospel and Epistle of John is not sound exegetically.

CHRIST REIGNING ON EARTH

Question: Would it be humiliating for Christ (as some say), to reign a thousand years on our sinful earth, now that He is glorified?

Answer: No more humiliating than for Him to leave His throne of glory, and be born of a virgin, and live, and suffer and die for fallen man. However, while He will reign over the earth during the millennium, we do not understand that He, as the personal glorified God-man, will reign upon the earth. He will be with His church in the air (1 Thess. 4:16-18), but as we understand the Scriptures, He will rule the earth in that period through the nation of Israel as His vicegerent.

THE PLACE OF BAPTISM

Question: Does not Mark 16:16 show that baptism is essential to salvation?

Answer: Hardly. If it did, it would contradict other Scriptures which teach definitely that salvation is by faith only (Acts 16:31). Indeed, this very passage itself teaches so, since its second clause says "he that believeth not shall be damned." It does not say, "he that believeth not and is not baptized shall be damned," but simply "he that believeth not." This omission is very important when we remember that the Holy Spirit is the author of it. Baptism, indeed, is important as an ordinance appointed by our Lord, and when rightly used His blessing rests upon it. But it is rightly used when, after one has believed on Christ and has been thus saved, he seals that faith by the public confession of His Saviour in the rite of baptism (Rom. 10:9, 10).

JUDGING OTHERS

Question: Please explain Luke 6:37-42 inclusive.

Answer: Verse 37 refers to censorious judgments on others, and especially judgments, not of actions, but motives which we can not always determine. Such unkind judgments will be returned upon us in the great day of our own judgment, and indeed are often returned upon us in this life because people feel compelled, in self-defence, when treated in that way, to treat their assailants similarly.

Verse 38 gives the other side of the truth showing that in the long run, no one will be the loser by exercising forbearance and love in these matters.

Verse 39 seems to be separate from the foregoing, and is a warning against following unsound religious teachers, while verse 40 continues the subject, showing the likelihood that the disciple will follow his teacher. The scholar will become as perfect as his teacher, but not more so, i. e., he will copy his errors and reproduce his faults.

Verses 41 and 42 teach that they who improve the sins of others should strive to be blameless themselves. A "mote" is a small object, a "beam" a great one; sometimes people guilty of great faults are eager to condemn others with smaller ones, which is inconsistent and unreasonable.

EATING THE FLESH AND DRINKING THE BLOOD OF JESUS CHRIST

Question: Please explain to me what Jesus really meant in Matthew 26:26-28 when He said, "This is my body," and "This is my blood of the New Testament"; also what He meant in John 6:53, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink His blood ye have no life in you."

Answer: The words "This is my body" and "This is my blood" suggest no idea but the obvious one that our Saviour is calling the bread His body or the wine His blood in the same sense that He calls Himself a door, a vine, a root, a star, or is described by other figures of speech in Holy Scripture. The bread was an emblem of His flesh, and the wine an emblem of His blood, as broken and shed for the sins of men.

In John 6:53 we have the same truth conveyed as in verse 51 of that chapter, though in more emphatic terms. That truth is that Christ Himself, in virtue of His sacrificial death, is the spiritual and eternal life of men, and that unless men by faith voluntarily appropriate to themselves His death in its sacrificial virtue so as to become the life and nourishment of their inner man, they have no spiritual and eternal life at all. It is not as if His death were the only thing of value, but it is that it gives all else in Christ's person and work their whole value to us sinners. In verse 51 He had already intimated that His death was to be something very different from a natural death, and therefore it must have been plain to candid hearers that in verse 53 He meant something above the gross idea which the bare terms express.

Again, when He added that they had no life in them unless they thus ate and drank, it was impossible for them to think that He referred to the temporal life they were then living. Evidently that was not dependent on their eating and drinking His flesh and His blood in such a gross sense.

The above is taken mainly from the "Critical and Experimental Commentary," by Jamieson, Faussett and Brown, but it expresses our views as clearly as possible under the circumstances.

FEARING THE DEVIL

Question: Is it wise for a sanctified man to say openly, "I am not afraid of the Devil, not afraid of anything he can do"?

Answer: Much depends upon the motive back of the remark. Let us suppose the case of a truly "sanctified" man who has been regenerated through faith, and baptized by the Holy Spirit into the body of Christ. That man is eternally saved; but suppose some spiritual enemy, inspired by Satan himself, were to challenge his salvation, might he not be justified in replying that he had no fear even of Satan himself? Does not Romans 8:28-39 give him that right?

On the other hand, Satan has great power, even though it be limited, in the case of a sanctified man. The instance of Job is in point. Though he came out of all his difficulties triumphantly, yet in the face of what he passed through, would it have been wise for him to say, "I am not afraid of the Devil, not afraid of anything he can do"?

HELL EXTENDING HER BORDERS

Question: If the borders of hell are being extended all the time who is doing it, God or Satan? If it is a place did God or Satan create it?

Answer: "Hell" is a word standing for the unseen state, and as such God must have created it, but when it is said that hell is extending her borders all the time, we suppose the expression is used in a poetic sense. The idea is that more and more souls are going to hell because of their own sin and their rejection of the Saviour. In this sense the Bible says "hell and destruction are never full" (Prov. 27:20), and again, "Hell hath enlarged herself and opened her mouth without measure" (Isa. 5:14). Some day hell will deliver up the dead which are in it, but only that they may be cast into the lake of fire (Rev. 20:13, 14). How glad we should be for a Saviour who by delivering us from sin, delivers us also from hell, which is the consequence of sin! Blessed are all they that put their trust in Him.

GRACE VERSUS WRATH

Question: In 2 Peter 2:12 is a passage that perplexes me. The apostle speaking of the false prophets says, "These as natural brute beasts made to be taken and destroyed," while in 3:9 he says, God is "not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance." Can you help me to reconcile these two statements?

Answer: The correspondent misunderstands 2 Peter 2:12. The inspired writer compares the false prophets to "natural brute beasts," or "creatures without reason" as the Revised Version puts it. But he then goes on to describe the beasts and not the prophets saying that the former were "made to be taken and destroyed," or as the margin reads, "to take and to destroy." Then he returns to the false prophets and says that they "shall utterly perish in their own corruption," but of course it was always understood that if they "come to repentance" they should not so perish.

ONCE SAVED, ALWAYS SAVED

Question: Do the Scriptures teach that once saved always saved? If so, please explain John 15:6. Will one who is saved ever back-slide or go into wilful sin? If so, would he be lost should he die in that condition?

Answer: We believe the Scriptures teach that a soul truly saved will not be lost; if it were otherwise where were the object in saving him? Such a soul may backslide wilfully as David and Peter did, and were he to die before he had a chance to repent and confess his sin, we do not think he would be lost, but he would be a loser in the rewards of grace and in his place in glory. John 15:6 is not inconsistent with this teaching, for to abide in Christ does not mean an absolutely sinless life, for then no soul abides in Him. It means, however, that we shall have no known sin unjudged and unconfessed before Him. This is strong meat and not intended for babes, but it is the truth as we understand it. The great thing is to be sure that we are saved, which means that we have definitely received and confessed Christ, and that we are striving day by day by His grace to follow Him.

CRUCIFIED WITH CHRIST

Question: The people who teach complete eradication of the carnal nature take Romans 6:6. While I am not ready to accept that theory, I should like to know your views on that verse.

Answer: "Our old man" there means our fallen and corrupt nature received from our first parents. It was "crucified" with Christ in the sense that in God's mind every believer on Christ was fully identified with Him on Calvary. That is, His death, conceived of as a penalty for the guilt of sin, was the believer's death. We were crucified with Him as members of the body of which He is the Head (Eph. 1:22, 23). "The body of sin" means our physical body viewed as sin's stronghold or vehicle (Bishop Moule), and it is crucified with Christ in order that it might be "destroyed" or put down, "that henceforth we should not serve sin," "no longer be in bondage to sin" (R. V.).

The idea is that the man who realizes his position in Christ is in possession of the power to overcome sin. It does not mean that sin is eradicated in him, and that he no longer has need to keep his body in subjection (1 Cor. 9:27), or to watch and pray lest he enter into temptation (Matt. 26:41), but that henceforth when he says to a temptation "No," it "carries with it the power of the inward presence of the risen Lord."

SAUL AND ANANIAS

Question: To the Editors: My attention was especially called to the question and answer in a recent number of "The Christian Workers Magazine" concerning the instructions of Ananias to Saul in Acts 22:16: "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins."

The common confusion of the question which Saul asked in the ninth of Acts as he lay on the ground, with the question of the jailer in the sixteenth chapter is one great, if not the chief, cause of the difficulty and erroneous belief in regard to the directions given him by Ananias. Saul's question was not "What shall I do to be saved," but simply, "What shall I do Lord?" and is one altogether different in its significance. Already he had acknowledged Jesus as Lord, and "no man can call Jesus Lord but by the Holy Ghost." He was not now seeking how to be saved, for he was saved, but what was he now to do as an obedient believer in the once rejected Messiah? And further, the statement of Ananias was not "and thereby wash away thy sins," for this would have been in direct contradiction to the plain teaching of the Word throughout, but simply "and wash away thy sins, calling," etc. Now we are clearly taught in the first chapter of First John that it is He that cleanses away our (we Christians) sins when we confess, and also in the same chapter that it is "the blood of Jesus Christ" that does it.

This same mistake is as commonly made with reference to the day of Pentecost in which the same question is involved. The repentant Jews are (in the common opinion) made to ask the same question as the jailer, when in fact the account is unmistakably clear that this is not the case, but that the question is the same as Saul's "What shall we do?" There the question stops, and we have no reason whatever for adding "to be saved" and thus come under the condemnation of those who add to the Scripture. To do so is to charge the Spirit with cutting out what ought to be there, which God forbid that we do. The question was not for the way of salvation, but what should they do who, like Saul wished to show their acceptance of the crucified One. And the answer of Peter in no wise deals with the way of salvation, but only the course that they, as believers were to pursue. To confuse the "gift of the Holy Ghost" with the new birth is certainly not admissible in this day. The expressions are not synonymous, and the whole account of the two incidents is so clearly free from the common confusion, that the bringing in of ordinances as well as other works into the way of salvation, is surely without excuse.

The assertion made by some teachers that they go to the book of Acts for their way of salvation is founded upon this common error and admission that, it is the question of salvation that is raised in both these incidents, and if we can clarify the atmosphere of this serious error, we will take away the vantage ground from such errorists, earnest and devoted as they are, and enable us to consistently refute their position.

THE LAYMENS COMMENTARY ON THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS

Conducted by James M. Gray

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

Lesson 4

The Third Visit to Judea

Chapters 5 and 6

I. This visit like the second was occasioned by the Passover, and a year later (6). What miracle was wrought on this occasion (2:9)? With what effect on the unbelieving Jews (10-16)? How does Jesus justify such labor on the Sabbath day (17)? On what two-fold ground did His enemies seek to kill Him (18)? The latter of these grounds, because He said "God was His Father," is deeply important. The Revised Version translates it "he also called God his own Father." The Jews understood Him to declare God to be His Father in a sense in which He was not the Father of other men. This is why they said He made "himself equal with God." The importance of this is seen in that it contains a direct claim on Jesus' part to be equal with God, i. e., a claim of absolute deity.

The Jews so regarded His words, and Jesus took no pains to correct that impression, on the contrary, His words that follow are an argument to prove that He was God. Almost all the verses down to verse 31 prove this, but especially verse 23. This discourse concludes with a kind of supplementary one on the four witnesses (32-47). We have here cited by Jesus Himself, the witness of John the Baptist (32-35), the witness of His own marvelous work (36), the witness of the Father (37, 38), and the witness of the Holy Scriptures (39), but how vain so far as moving the wills of His unbelieving countrymen was concerned (40)!

II. Leaving Judea again, where do we next find Jesus (6:1-3)? What miracle is associated therewith (5-13)? This is the only miracle found in the other Gospels which is also recorded by John, and for the reason doubtless of leading up to the discourse on the Living Bread. What effect had this miracle on those who saw it (14)? What did they propose to do with Jesus in consequence of their opinion (15)? What did the knowledge of their purpose lead Jesus to do? What bearing has His action on the incident in chapter 18:10, 11, and His words before Pilate in the same chapter, verse 36? To what place did Jesus depart? What miracle took place during the night (16-21)? Where next do we find Jesus (22-24)? It is at this point the discourse is given to which reference has been made, and which is one of those which gives the Gospel its distinctively spiritual character. At what place was this discourse given (59)? How does it seem to have been received by the people generally (41, 52)? How by the disciples (60, 66)? What foreshadowing of His death does he reveal (66-71)? Why did He confine His ministry to Galilee just now (7:1)?

III. The importance of these two chapters grows on one as establishing the deity of Christ and the vital character of the work for man which He came into the world to do. As illustrating the latter, consider especially verses 37-40 in the discourse on the Living Bread; (1) the Father gives His chosen ones to the Son; (2) the Son receives all such; (3) the reason for His so doing is His devotion to His Father's will; (4) the will is that He lose none of those the Father gives Him; (5) the means by which this choice of the Father becomes operative in any individual case is faith, "believing on" the Son.

Another way to treat this whole chapter is to divide it into four parts designated by the attitude of the multitude towards our Lord: (1) discussion (four dialogs, 25-40); (2) dissatisfaction, (41-51); (3) dissension (42-59); defection (60-66). The foregoing is quoted from an unknown source.

Questions on the Lesson

1. What occasioned this visit to Judea?
2. State the circumstances under which Jesus claimed equality with God.
3. What four witnesses does He produce to substantiate His claim?
4. What distinction is accorded the miracle of the loaves and fishes?
5. Analyze chapter 6:37-40.
6. Analyze the chapter as a whole.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

Lesson 5

At the Feast of Tabernacles

Chapters 7-10:21

The story of the fourth and last visit to Judea is too long and important to gather into one lesson, and will be broken up into three or four, the first of which bears the above title.

I. How did the brethren of Jesus regard Him at this time (7:2-5)? What hesitancy did He exhibit in going up to this feast (6-9)? This feast took place in the fall, corresponding to our October. This chapter and the next are identified as those of the controversies in the Temple. They represent periods of sustained contention with enemies such as are described nowhere else in the Gospels. The crisis indicated in the Synoptics is now rapidly approaching. Examine in this connection verses 12, 13, 20, 26, 27, 30, 32, 43, of chapter 7. What effect had Jesus' answers to His opponents upon the officials (45, 46)? What authoritative person speaks on His behalf at this critical moment (50-52)?

II. Where did Jesus pass the night after this exhausting day (8:1)? Where is He found the next morning (2)? With what work of courage and grace does the day begin (3-11)? Who came off victor in that contest of light and darkness, Jesus or His adversaries (6)? The controversy begins again by Jesus' bold declaration of Himself as "the light of the world," a declaration which, if unsupported by the truth, makes Him an impostor, but otherwise establishes His right to be all that this Gospel claims for Him—that He is God. Observe the features of the controversy all through this chapter, but especially at verses 13, 19, 25, 37, 48, 52, 59. Observe, too, the repeated declarations of Jesus bearing upon the dignity of His person, as in verses 16, 18, 19, 23, 28, 36, 42, 46, 51, 56, 58. It is comforting that His testimony was not fruitless in discipleship (30).

III. As Jesus passed from this murderous crowd, what miracle is wrought (chap. 9)? What explanation does Jesus afford as to why this man was born blind (3)? How does this work of power and mercy affect the enemies of Jesus, does it soften or harden their opposition (16, 28, 29)? What did they finally do to the man (34)? What does "cast him out" probably mean? Compare verse 22, last clause. How does Jesus make a further claim of deity in addressing this man (35-37)? It is to be observed in this connection that the discourse on the Good Shepherd, in chapter 10, grew out of the casting out of this man from the synagogue because of his confession of Jesus. The Scribes and Pharisees are the "hirelings" Jesus has in mind, who showed themselves to be such in their treatment of this man. Notice how this discourse also falls into harmony with the distinctive purpose of John's Gospel to present the highest aspect of Christ's person and work, for example, compare His utterances in verses 10, 11, 15, 17, 18. His work is clearly that of a substitute Saviour, and yet none other than God could speak of Himself thus. What opposite results were produced by this discourse (19-21)?

IV. Reference was made above to chapters 7 and 8 as those of the controversies in the Temple. Pardington characterizes the first controversy as being in regard to the character of Christ's teaching and the condition for testing it (15-20); the second as touching the character of the Sabbath day (21-24); the third, on the divine character of Christ Himself (25-31); the fourth, on His approaching disappearance, its nature and object (32-36). Another outline is the following: Controversy one, on the source of His knowledge (14-24); controversy two, on the origin of His being (25-31); controversy three, on the mysteriousness of His sayings (32-36). In the same way chapter 8 might be regarded as a controversial discourse on: (1) the nature of His mission (12-20); (2) its need (21-30); (3) its result (31-36); (4) possibly its motive (37-58).

Speaking specifically of chapter 10 and the discourse on the Good Shepherd, it may be stated that the shepherd work of our Lord has three aspects: (1) as the Good Shepherd He gives His life for the sheep; (2) as the Great Shepherd He intercedes for them as one alive from the dead, and hence is caring for and perfecting them (Heb. 13:20); (3) as the Chief Shepherd He is coming again in glory to reward the faithful under shepherds (1 Pet. 5:4).

Questions on the Lesson

1. When do the feasts of the Passover and the Tabernacles relatively occur?
2. How would you characterize chapters 7 and 8?
3. How is Jesus proven to be God in this chapter?
4. Analyze chapter 8.
5. Name the three aspects of Christ's work as Shepherd.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

Lesson 6

At the Feast of the Dedication and the Home in Bethany

Chapters 10:22-11

I. The Feast of the Dedication took place midway between that of Tabernacles and the Passover, or some time corresponding to our December or January. It is mentioned nowhere else in the Bible and it is not positively known just what it commemorates. Where Jesus had been in the meantime is not revealed except that it is not stated, that He returned to Galilee. We dwell on this period to call attention to the same features as in the previous one, viz., the putting forth of the boldest claims on Jesus' part, followed by conflict with His opponents. For the claims consult verses 28-30, and the conflict, 31-39. What was the sequel of this appearance so far as Jesus was concerned (40, 41)? Notice that in the face of all the criticism and opposition the disciples continually increased (42).

We should not leave this without a further word on verse 30, which literally translated is, "I and my Father are one thing," (Bishop Ryle). Christ does not say "one" in the masculine, but in the neuter gender. That is, He and His Father are not one person, but one in nature, power, will. It silences those who say there is but one person in the God-head and those also who say that the Son is inferior to the Father.

Our Lord's defence of this language against the charge of blasphemy (33-36) is an argument from a lesser to a greater. In Psalm 82, the inspired writer is speaking of the position and duties of princes and rulers, whose elevation above other men and consequent responsibility was so great that, compared with them they might be called "gods." If then, no fault is found with them who receive this honor by grace, how can He deserve blame who possesses this honor by nature? "Sanctified" (34) means "set apart," and the verse teaches the eternal generation of Christ. The Jews did not understand Christ to claim to be "God" in the sense of the 82nd Psalm or they would not have stoned Him; but God in the sense of deity, and hence Christ's acceptance of that claim, as in chapter 5, is an assertion of that fact on His part.

II. We now come to chapter 11 where we find Jesus in Bethany. Here occurs the raising of Lazarus. In the Synoptics we read of the raising of Jairus' daughter and the son of the widow of Nain. In the first case death had just ensued, and in the second but a single day had intervened. Here, however, Lazarus had been four days dead. Of course, with God it is no harder to restore life in the one case than in either of the others, and yet all must be impressed with the gradation of difficulty illustrated in the three, and that the most difficult, humanly speaking, should be recorded only in John's Gospel. This, like so many other features, shows the distinctive purpose of this Gospel to set forth Jesus in the highest aspect of all, that of the Son of God—the Son of God giving life to the world. What a wonderful declaration in verse 25!

Speaking of this miracle in general terms, Bishop Ryle makes three good points: (1) it was clearly intended to supply the Jews with one more incontrovertible proof that Jesus was the Messiah (cf. again their question in 10:24); (2) it was meant to prepare their minds for our Lord's own resurrection—they could not say when the tomb of Jesus was found empty, that His resurrection was an impossibility; (3) it is the most thoroughly credible of all our Lord's miracles, and supported by the most incontrovertible proof.

Questions on the Lesson

1. When did the Feast of Dedication take place?
2. Explain 10:30.
3. Explain 10:33-36.
4. With what circumstance are we impressed in comparing the raising of Lazarus with the other two restorations to life?
5. Quote from memory 11:25, 26.
6. What three good points on this miracle are made by Bishop Ryle?

Saul Gains His Kingdom

1 Samuel, Chapter 11

Golden Text.—“He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty; and he that ruleth his spirit than he that taketh a city.” Proverbs 16:32.

In order to repay Israel's victory under Jephthah, Nahash, the Ammonite, demanded the right eye of those besieged in Jabesh in Gilead, knowing that the left eye would be hid by their shields and they would thus be incapable of warfare. For Israel to make any covenant with the Ammonites was contrary to God's commands (Exod. 23:32; Deut. 23:3).

I. The Cry of Jabesh, vv. 1-3. This event probably occurred about a month after the previous lesson. It was a proud, haughty demand made of these Israelites. Exhausted and hopeless they had offered to become servants in order to live. So today we frequently find men willing to compromise with the world and the Devil who only hold them in derision and contempt (v. 2). Compromising Christians are always blind leaders of the blind (Matt. 15:14; 6:22). The demand of Nahash would also bring reproach upon Israel, yet this same king afterwards showed kindness to David (2 Sam. 10:2). History records that Emperor Basil II actually sent an army of 14,850 sightless men back to the king of Bulgaria who died of grief and horror at the sight.

II. The Conquest of Ammon, vv. 4-11. Nahash granted the request for a seven days respite. Here was Saul's opportunity, wrongs to be righted and people to be saved. Saul had held his peace since being anointed by Samuel, employing his time in every-day toil and duties (v. 5), for the messengers did not find Saul at home idle. The tidings of this insult were told to the people who lifted up their voices and wept (v. 4). The news of this threatened calamity reached Saul's ears and his conduct effectually put to silence those “worthless fellows” who despised him and had brought no presents at his anointing (10:27). Instead of tears Saul is moved to deeds. Like Cincinnatus and Israel Putnam he left the plow to take up the sword. Saul did not, in his own strength, undertake to relieve Jabesh for “The Spirit of God came upon him” (v. 6). (See also Judges 3:10; 11:29; 13:25; Luke 24:49; Acts 10:38). This moved Saul to anger not alone at such an evidence of cruelty, but rather at the contempt Nahash had for God and His people. Saul associated himself with Samuel, the man of God, and summoned the nation of Israel to his side. He not only challenged the people, but threatened to execute their oxen in like manner if they failed to obey (v. 7).

The Holy Spirit gave Saul clear assurance of a call from God and he responded with unquestioned faith (See Rom. 8:31). The people responded with alacrity, for the fear of God came upon them also. We have the good news of a better deliverance from a more subtle foe to proclaim in our present age. They all resorted to Bezek, west of the Jordan. The messengers returned bearing a message having two meanings (v. 10), and that helped to keep Nahash ignorant of Saul's actions on the other side of the river. Dividing his army into companies, Saul attacked the enemy “in the morning watch,” and completely overwhelmed and put them to rout. As the Ammonites had refused to show any mercy, they in turn were judged unworthy of mercy (v. 11). (See James 2:13; Matt. 7:2).

III. The Crowning of Saul, vv. 12-15. Saul's victory so impressed the people that they demanded to know of Samuel who had refused Saul as king, desiring to put them to death. Saul showed his wisdom by not permitting such a course of action. Many today refuse God's divinely appointed king who will yet be glad to acknowledge Him (Luke 19:27; Phil. 2:10). In the next place Saul did not claim credit for the victory for, said he, “the Lord hath wrought deliverance in Israel” (v. 13, R. V.). All real victories come from God (Ps. 44:4-8; I Cor. 15:10). Saul manifested the true kingly spirit and reaped the reward of his humility, forbearance, courage and activity, in the loyalty of the people. Samuel gladly shared in the success of Saul and led the people to Gilgal for the crowning ceremony. This was the place where Israel had first encamped under the leadership of Joshua, and where the twelve stones from the river had been set up as a testimony to God's presence and deliverance. Surely this was a proper place for Saul to receive his crown and be ratified as king, for all real victories are by God's help, and should be duly acknowledged. In chapter 10 we had the story of Saul's election at Mizpeh, here we have the consummation of that election, which is most properly accompanied by religious services, sacrifices and peace offerings before the Lord.

Saul had physical and other personal characteristics, which gave promise that he would be a great and useful king.

Jonathan and His Armourbearer

1 Samuel 14:1-13

Golden Text.—“Let us put on the armour of light.”—Romans 13:12.

Samuel's review of his life of integrity, his charge to the Israelites, God's testimony of displeasure over their persistent desire to have a king, and Samuel's words of comfort and assurance, as found in chapter 12, form an interesting connection with last Sunday's lesson. In chapter 13 we have the record of Israel again in distress, and of Saul's folly in assuming the priestly office (vv. 13, 14).

I. Saul's Distress, vv. 1-4. That Saul's disobedience, just indicated, had incurred God's displeasure, we know. It evidently had its effect upon the people also, for his army had dwindled during the intervening fifteen or eighteen years, from 330,000 (11:8) to a feeble 600 (v. 2). They were further handicapped by a lack of weapons (13:19-23). Deserted by Jehovah, by Samuel, Jehovah's priest, and by nearly all of his enthusiastic subjects (11:12) Saul was “in the uttermost part of Gibeah” hiding under a pomegranate tree (See vv. 11, 22; 13:6). This may refer to his being at Rimmon. (See Judg. 20:43-47). In this retirement Saul keeps Ahiah (v. 3) as priest, thus keeping up the outward form of worship. This priest is not referred to as Jehovah's. He was a grandson of Phinehas, one of Eli's wicked sons, and as such was not to be a successor in the High Priest's office (2:30-36). Outward form cannot take the place of living faith. To consult the Urim and Thummim worn by the priest, and later to call up familiar spirits, shows Saul's lack of spiritual apprehension. The references made to his conduct (chaps. 12, 13), are an indication of his character and emphasize the words found in Psalms 119:11, 105. Like the young man in the Gospel whom our Lord loved, Saul lacked “one thing,” viz., a supreme love for God and loyalty to His Kingdom.

II. Jonathan's Victory, vv. 4-13. But God had one leader to whom He could speak, Jonathan, who is one of the finest and most attractive characters in the whole Bible. This episode is one of the most brilliant in the history of the Israelitish nation. It was a brave deed, and an evidence of that triumphant faith shown so clearly in Jonathan's dealings with David. There seems to be a suggestion that Jonathan had lost confidence in his father. Verses 4 and 5 vividly picture the location wherein Jonathan undertook this feat. Jonathan clearly counted upon his fleshly covenant sign as ground upon which to expect help and victory over his enemies who lacked such a sign (v. 6). The army of the Philistines had been divided into three sections (13:17), and this gave Jonathan his opportunity. The garison at Michmash was on the opposite side of the ravine from Geba, Saul's headquarters. Hidden by the cliffs, it was quite easy to approach the Philistines.

It is an interesting conversation recorded as following that journey. Jonathan—“It may be that the Lord will work for us; for there is no restraint to the Lord to save by many or by few” (v. 6). Armourbearer—“Do all that is in thine heart: * * * behold, I am with thee.” Jonathan—“We will pass * * * over and will discover ourselves.”

The test, as recorded in verses 9 and 10, was a real one, and a revelation of Jonathan's shrewdness. Not to be invited up by the Philistines would suggest a desire they may have had to cover up any weaknesses. To be asked to “come” suggests their self-confidence, carelessness and lack of suspicion. Their contempt is indicated and emphasized in the words, “The Hebrews come forth out of the holes where they had hid themselves” (v. 11). Their pride is shown by the invitation extended, “Come * * * and we will show you a thing” (v. 12). At the first blow Jonathan and his companion struck terror into the hearts of the camp, and this was intensified by an earthquake, for God fought on his side. From across the valley the watchers of Saul's army saw the consternation, and together those who had hidden themselves (v. 22) joined in making the victory complete. We of this age have the protection and support of One who enables the weakest to win victories. (1 Cor. 1:26-29; Zech. 4:6; Matt. 19:26).

Today's Message. Two young men of faith saved a nation sunk in despair and disgrace. They inspired confidence in God and in His promises. “Youth for battles, old age for counsel,” but there are times that demand action more than conference and consideration. Courage is only of value, however, when based upon preparation, devotion to God, the interests of others, and a clear vision. It is not a mere flash in life's pathway. Courage is contagious; Jonathan's feat set on fire the soul of a nation. Read again the roll of honor in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews.

The highest courage is not physical but moral. This courage is open to all, but it is grounded upon God's sure revelation in His Word, and in the person of His Son, our Lord. “And his armourbearer after him”; Jonathan did not go alone. On the other hand, it is not probable that this young lad would have dreamed of going up those rocks had not Jonathan led the way. Because one went before him he was able to scale the fortress. God alone knows the heights to which we may attain, but does not ask us to go alone, nor expect us to do the impossible.

Review

Reading Lesson, Nehemiah 9:26-31

Golden Text.—"Righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."—Proverbs 14:34.

According to Prof. Beecher the period we have been studying during the past quarter is 332 years, from the death of Joshua, 1434 B. C. to the reign of Saul, which began 1102 B. C.

We may roughly divide this period into the republic of God and that of the kingdom of man. In the first section we studied the period of the Judges, four of them, Barak, Gideon, Samson and Samuel; one prophetess, Deborah; also the priests, Eli and his sons, Samuel, Ahiah, and Ruth, who was an ancestress of our Great High Priest. In the second section we considered Saul the king, and a prince, Jonathan, Saul's son. While the lessons may thus be roughly divided, yet we feel that a general review of the characters and the principal lessons to be learned from each will perhaps be the most profitable form of review.

There are four things to be said about each character and his relation to the events occurring in Israel: (1) The people had departed from God. (2) God permitted unbearable oppression. (3) There was repentance on the part of the people and an appeal to God for help. (4) God raised up a Judge who "saved" the people, and through this judge wonderful acts were performed showing His power and the favor which rested upon Israel. The adult classes can profitably discuss such questions as: Why did the people so easily forsake God? Why and how did their repentance so quickly lead to their deliverance? How did God help the people to return unto Him? What were the methods and the principles used in God's punishment of the people's sins? Was the form of government in vogue a failure?

Coming to the second section many questions suggest themselves: What advantages and opportunities did Saul have? How did his failure begin? What was the essential difference between the kingdom of Saul and the republic of God under the Judges? What are the outstanding characteristics of Jonathan's life and character? What great message for today do these characters and these two forms of government have?

Dr. Torrey suggests a review bringing out the doctrinal features. The teachings about Jehovah and the Holy Spirit; types and manifestations of the Lord Jesus; sin and the particular sins mentioned, and the Word of God. To follow any part of these suggestions will demand that much work shall be assigned in advance, and that great care shall be exercised in making any one of these lines a connected and interesting whole. Too much should not be attempted, lest the scholars become confused.

If some one can be secured who is successful in using the blackboard an interesting review can be presented to scholars of the younger classes by making a drawing presenting a "Hall of Fame," with a panel each for Deborah, Gideon, Ruth, Samuel and Jonathan. Another drawing can be a "Rogues Gallery," and have in it a panel each for Samson, Eli, Eli's sons, and Saul. Then tell, as simply as possible, the salient points in the history of each, and show how God approved or disapproved of their lives; which were used, and which set aside. Any school can have before it on a chart or a blackboard the following:

Lesson—Chief Persons—Chief Facts.

1. Joshua, Israelites, Judges—A great patience.
2. Deborah, Barak, Sisera—A great deliverance.
3. Gideon, Angel of Jehovah—A great call.
4. Gideon, The Three Hundred—A great test.
5. Manoah, Samson—A great failure.
6. Naomi, Ruth, Orpha—A great resolve.
7. Eli, Samuel, Jehovah—A great vision.
8. Philistines, Israelites, Eli—A great capture.
9. Samuel—A great victory.
10. Samuel, Saul—A great honor.
11. Nahash, Saul—A great rescue.
12. Jonathan, Armor-bearer—A great hero.

—From Tarbell's "Teacher's Guide."

With the aid of this chart it will be easy to draw a running word picture of the lessons of this quarter or to conduct an oral review.

It would also be a fruitful expenditure of time to question the school upon the structure of the Old Testament; its four divisions, and the books of each division. Locate the lessons of this quarter in these divisions and show their relation to the history and development of Israel. If written work is asked for be careful not to assign too much, and as far as possible assign different tasks to individuals of a given class, or to the separate classes of the various grades.

The making of review Sunday fascinatingly interesting, and instructive as well, will depend upon the amount of careful preparation and planning exercised by the teachers or the superintendent. There is no lack of subject matter here, for this is a period in the history of Israel that teems with life and activity.

April 4

Saul Rejected by the Lord

1 Samuel 15:10-23

Golden Text.—"Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice."—1 Samuel 15:22.

Jonathan's victory (chap. 14) brought with it a sinning on the part of the hungry, harassed Israelites in that they ate of the spoils, "with the blood" (14:31, 32; Lev. 3:17; 7:26). In the emergency Saul erected "the first altar that he built unto the Lord" (14:35), a rather dilatory act on the part of a God-anointed king. Saul had commanded the people "to roll a great stone," i. e., to cut the throats of the animals of which they had eaten, that they might bleed, and thus be an evidence that the animals had died before being eaten. This the people did, fearing Saul, but having no scruples in transgressing God's commands. These same people rescued Jonathan from the foolish vow of Saul, for it was his faith and valor that had chiefly brought about the victory.

I. God's Sorrow, vv. 10-12. Samuel had first revealed God's purpose in making Saul king, and likewise first declared God's purpose to dispose of Saul (v. 10), his actions (vv. 1-9) having stamped him as being no longer worthy of God's confidence. The word "repenteth" (v. 11) denotes a change of feeling, due to Saul's actions, and not to any change in the character, purpose or desires of God. God was sorry (in a good sense) that Saul had proved himself unworthy. A half-way obedience of God's command only heightened his guilt. "Whatever moral difficulties seem to lie, for a later age, in Saul's commission against Amalek, there were none such for him" (Vaughn). Man's repentance involves a change of mind and purpose. In Saul's case God repented, changed the instrument of His execution, because of the change of circumstances and relation. Saul had given Samuel cause for anger (v. 11, R. V.), but he did the wise thing in taking it to God in prayer. Arising early the next morning Samuel hastened to acquaint Saul with Jehovah's message.

II. Samuel's Rebuke, vv. 13-19. It must have been a striking scene when the aged Nazarene prophet faced the proud but recreant king. A guilty conscience is often covered by a great show of piety (v. 13), but such acts cannot stifle the conviction of the heart nor deceive the righteous Judge. Sin proclaims itself, even as Samuel's sharp question brought conviction from the lips of Saul (v. 14). (See Prov. 28:13). Saul thought to deceive Samuel by falsehood (v. 15). The only safe course is to confess our sins (Ps. 32:15; 1 John 1:9). There is an interesting suggestion in the way Saul uses the pronouns "they" and "we" in verse 15, as if not willing to bear the guilt himself. Verse 9 clearly indicates why Saul and the people had spared the best of the cattle. But this direct disobedience to God incurred His righteous wrath (vv. 22, 23). Samuel did not tell Saul what he thought of him, but simply and directly delivered God's words (v. 16). Recalling Saul's beginnings as king of Israel, emphasizing God's mercy and grace, Samuel recounts God's command regarding the Amalekites. He effectually swept aside Saul's sophistry by his direct question (v. 19), which demanded an unequivocal answer.

III. Saul's Self-rejection, vv. 20-23. God set Saul aside, because he had rejected the right and chosen the wrong. Face to face with his sin Saul could not dodge the issue. Samuel's "wherefore" (v. 19) must have aroused Saul's guilty conscience. It is a question which should reach every tempted soul. Samuel characterized Saul's sin as being due to stubbornness, rebellion, disobedience and a rejection of God (v. 19). Again Saul seeks to evade his responsibility (vv. 20, 21). Then Samuel speaks plainly (v. 22), comparing his sin of disobedience with witchcraft, stubbornness, iniquity and idolatry, and says: "Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king" (v. 23).

Saul made confession of his guilt (v. 24), but spoiled this by saying that he had greater fear of the people than he had of God. His sorrow was that of the man who was caught in an act of transgression, and not because of the sinfulness of his deed. God had forsaken Saul, and now Samuel parts company with him (vv. 25, 26). Saul's rending of Samuel's garment (vv. 27, 28) is used as a parable of the forthcoming rent kingdom. Samuel takes occasion to suggest that God, "the Strength of Israel," had won the recent victory and that God was not guilty of lying, nor had He changed. Saul makes one more plea, in which he acknowledged his departure from God by the words, "that I may worship the Lord thy God." There was a continuance of the outward form of worship before the elders and the people, but both God and Samuel separated themselves from Saul; the cruel, bloody Agag is executed, and Samuel retires to Ramah to mourn over this fallen, prodigal king.

This is Easter Sunday; our reproach has been "rolled away," not at Gilgal, but on Calvary. The unchanging God hates sin, and has condemned it on the Cross, that the guilty sinner may live. The persistence of sin, the unchangeableness of God, and His unyielding hatred of sin, are met by the culmination of Easter, for, "By the obedience of one shall many be made righteous" (Rom. 5:19).

The root of Saul's trouble was his attitude towards the word of God. Every man's destiny hinges upon what he does with the living, incarnate Word.

The resurrection of Jesus is the seal of His authority, the evidence of His power, and our eternal salvation depends upon what we do with Him.

The Gospel in the World

Edward A. Marshall, Editor

The Canadian church is represented on the foreign field by 770 men and women.

Each medical missionary in China treats an average of nearly 4,000 patients a year.

The evangelical church in China has almost reached the half-million mark in its membership.

Some of the Christian converts in Palestine have had to pay $175 to the Turkish government in order to be excused from military service.

The entire contributions of all Canadians, in the entire history of Canada, for world missions do not exceed Canada's first war budget, which was $50,000,000.

The missionaries at the various summer resorts in China have contributed, since the beginning of the war, more than $2,000 to assist the German missions in China.

The Protestant Episcopal Church now has a membership of 1,015,000, an increase of more than 28,000 in the past year. The membership of its Sunday-school numbers 455,251.

The entire population of the United States is not as large as the number of children in China under ten years of age. Only about 65,000 of these children are in the Sunday-school.

The Waldensian church is having a renewal of its medieval tests of faith in having a large amount of its annual missionary contributions from Great Britain and Europe cut off by the war.

There is said to be 49,167 more Protestant churches in the United States than there are Protestant ministers. In 1911 the Presbyterian church (North), had 2,167 vacant pulpits out of a total of 10,051, and the Congregational church had 1,000 out of 6,000.

The present European war will cause some startling transformations in Africa. Whole sections of the continent will probably change ownership; some missions will change boards and perhaps languages; commerce will come from new sources; all necessitating a readjustment, to the bewilderment of the natives.

The Emperor of Japan has shown his sympathy toward missions by giving $25,000 to the hospital work in Tokio.

The American Sunday School Union has estimated that there are in the United States about 23,000,000 Protestant children and young people, under twenty years of age, who are not connected with the Sunday-school, while approximately 13,000,000 are members.

The British and Foreign Bible Society states that up to the end of November more than 300,000 Testaments and Gospels had been supplied, through that society's agency at Berlin, to soldiers and prisoners of war in Germany and Austria. The cost was partly defrayed by means of special gifts from German Christians.

While the loss to missions by the war will be almost inestimable, yet there will come some valuable gains. Missionaries and natives alike will be impressed that it requires a regenerating gospel to produce a safe civilization; a deepening of spiritual life and faith among many will inevitably result; also a cementing of Christian friendships among some races of missionaries where there has been a feeling of estrangement and distrust.

A report of the evangelistic campaign held last fall in Fukien Province, China, gives the number of inquirers concerning Christianity in some of the cities as follows: Foochow, 2,041; Amoy, 1,490; Hinghwa (and Antau), 847; Hokchiang, 438; Inghok, 400; Yenping, 319; Kucheng, 260; Changchow, 427; making a total for the eight centers of 6,222. Another encouraging note in the report was the interest manifested by the government officials and the leading gentry in some of the cities.

In the United States there is one ordained minister to every 594 people; in Africa there is one to every 82,152 people; in Korea there is one to every 123,711 people; in Japan there is one to every 172,538; in India there is one to every 321,448 people; in China there is one to every 476,462 people. There are 1,557 principal cities in China unoccupied by missionaries. The vastness of the call seems to be beyond our powers of comprehension. Certainly it is beyond any adequate response on our part as yet.—"Missionary Review of the World."

The largest mission of the Wesleyan Methodist church is in the Transvaal, occupying a territory of nearly one hundred and fifty square miles. It has two European ministers, ten African ministers, and nearly seven hundred local preachers. Its preaching places number 220, only 60 of which could be called churches, most of the other buildings being of a very primitive nature. An old stable is used at one place, while their meeting place in Johannesburg is so inadequate that sometimes nearly four hundred people remain on the outside unable to gain admission.

The German branch of the China Inland Mission has a blind girls' school at Changsha, China, with thirty-six pupils. The fee for each student is four dollars, Mexican money, per month, for board and tuition. A letter published by the Presbyterian Board states that "this German mission has received no funds from home since the beginning of the war. By using their new property funds for current expenses, and by making a cut of twenty per cent on their already meager salaries, they will be able to keep the school running for four more months, hoping that the war will end by that time, or that help will be provided in some way."

During the year 1913-1914 the American Bible Society circulated Bibles and portions among nine tribes of American Indians. The only tribe for whom the complete Bible has been published by this society is the Dakotas, which received last year 457 Bibles, 409 Testaments and 22 portions. To the Choctaws were distributed 861 Testaments and 521 portions.

The American Bible Society says of Chili, South America: "The development of missionary work in this country has been most encouraging. Mission work is established in almost every town. It is estimated that there are 50,000 Protestants in the Republic."

The American Missionary Association has, in the southern states, seven schools of college and university rank, and fifty-nine schools of lower grades. They have also five schools among the Indians, sixteen among the Chinese and Japanese on the Pacific coast, one in Alaska and one in Porto Rico. Thirteen oriental churches and branch churches have been organized in California and one Japanese church in Seattle, Wash. Out of this work has come the Chinese Missionary Society, composed of those who have been converted in Chinese missions; organized in 1886, commenced work in China in 1890, and has already contributed over $15,000 to missions in China.

Rev. F. B. Bridgman, a well-known missionary of the American Board, describes the evangelizing work done by men converted in Johannesburg, who have gone back to their homes in the Transvaal and still further into the interior. At one place this, "an indigenous African Men and Religion Movement," was begun by a man named Fezi, who on returning home after his conversion in Johannesburg nine years ago, first brought his own brother to Christ. Four years ago several baptisms took place in the community, and these people have now built six chapels over a belt eighty miles long. The church membership is 140, and there is not a single mission station in the district, which has a population of at least fifty thousand.—"Missionary Review of the World."

After five months of the great European War, the Presbyterian Board reports:

1. That not one of its missionaries, so far as known, has suffered any bodily harm.
2. That no considerable amount of property has been destroyed.
3. That not one of the 1,226 missionaries has asked to come home on account of the war.
4. That the only complaint coming from the mission field has been the failure of the Board to send out the new missionaries, and to return the furloughed missionaries.
5. That so far as can be judged from the letters received, the missionaries and the native Christians look upon the war not merely as a great emergency, but a great opportunity for setting forth as never before the "truth as it is in Jesus."

The Evangelical Missionary Society of Paris, which has a mission in Madagascar, four missions in Africa and two in Oceanica, is in extreme financial straits as a result of the war. Its supporters in France, where the Protestants do not number more than 600,000, are most of them seriously embarrassed for means, while those in Alsace, who were liberal contributors, are entirely cut off from communication with them. English friends have decided to try to raise an "Emergency Fund" to help support the two South African missions situated in British territory, Basutoland and Barotsiland. The Paris society is asking help from America to support the French Congo Mission, which was founded in 1870 by the American Board of Presbyterian Missions but since given over to the Evangelical Missionary Society of Paris. The support of this field costs $30,000 a year. Contributions can be sent to Mr. Russell Carter of the Presbyterian Board, 156 Fifth Ave., New York City, by specifying that it is for the Paris society.

TWELVE VIEWS OF THE CROSS

Luke 23:48

The soldiers saw in Christ a criminal, with cruelty.

The women saw in Christ a benefactor, with sorrow.

His mother saw in Christ a son, with anguish.

The disciples saw in Christ blighted hopes, with perplexity.

The first thief saw in Christ a malefactor, with hardness.

The second thief saw in Christ a King, with penitence.

The centurion saw in Christ divinity, with conviction.

The priest saw in Christ an impostor, with mockery.

Angels saw in Christ love, with wonder.

Devils saw in Christ the seed of woman; with dismay.

Jehovah saw in Christ obedience with affection.

The passers-by saw in Christ nothing; with indifference.

I

"Master, is it I?"—Matt. 26:25.

Judas' question—question of all the Twelve. Christ made them feel their separate individuality, identity, responsibility. In all human relation, to each man he himself is the significant fact.

I. I and matter.

1. The body.
2. The material universe.

II. I and my sin. It is mine; I sin.

1. Not heredity.
2. Not disordered nerve, etc.

III. I and God.

1. Not lost in Him as in pantheism.
2. Not lost from Him as in atheism.
3. But forever maintaining self in relations to Him.

IV. I and the world to come.

1. The rewards or retributions are mine.
2. I shall only carry myself there—nothing more.
3. What sort of self then ought I to be building?

THE SAVIOR'S HUMILITY

Phil. 2:7, 8

"Christ Jesus . . . emptied himself.

He humbled himself . . . even unto death."

How utterly the Crucified lost sight of self! He emptied Himself of all that heaven held to come to earth, and then emptied Himself of all the earth had left Him, for the sake of Love's divine mission. Who was ever so poor as He! He had nothing but a stable to be born in, nothing but a manger to be laid in. He had not so much as a place where to rest His head; even His cross was not His own, and His grave belonged to another. It is pathetically written that, to the traitor He left His purse; to the soldiers, His robe; to the beloved disciples, His mother; to the dying thief, His promise of paradise; to the penitent Peter, His pardon; to His Father, His last breath and departing spirit, and to His followers, His peace. Naked He came into this world; while here He got nothing, though He gave everything; and naked He went the way to the tomb. Do you wish to follow him? Count the cost; for along that way, self must be left behind, to walk with Him.—A. T. Pierson.

THE BLOOD OF CHRIST SUFFICIENT

My little boy, since taken to heaven, once asked me, "Papa, how is it that one person, Christ, could atone for the sin of millions of men?" We were in a garden at the time. I replied, "Suppose that there was on the ground there a handful of worms; don't you think that you would be more valuable than those worms?" "Yes," he said. "Suppose that that wheelbarrow was full of worms; would you not be more valuable than all of them?" "Yes." "Suppose all the millions of worms in the earth were gathered together; would you not still be more valuable than they, no matter how many?" "Yes; I am sure I would." "Then is there not a far greater difference in the scale of being between Christ and man than between man and the worm? We are creatures; God is the Creator. Had many other worlds sinned as well as ours, the blood of Christ would be more than sufficient to atone for them all."

THE POWER THAT RAISED JESUS

"The eyes of your understanding being enlightened."—Eph. 1:18-20.

The resurrection of Christ as the standard of power. Three essential elements enter into man's full salvation:

1. The regeneration of the soul, "Ye must be born again."
2. The upward tendency of the new life.
3. The ascension of the new life—new thoughts, new principles, new aspirations.
4. The efficient cause of it all, the Holy Spirit.

Application—Let the risen Lord touch your life.

—John F. Carson.

TODAY AND TOMORROW

"Live as if Christ had died yesterday, rose again this morning, and was coming back tomorrow."—Dr. Maclaren.

Oh, let me live as if Christ died

But yestertide—

And I had seen and touched His pierced side!
I would rejoice as one who knows

How soon He rose,

To tread beneath His feet our unseen foes.
And I would work as if heaven bright

Were now in sight:

What if tomorrow bring that great delight?

—E. E. Trusted, in "The Christian."

REMNANT

In the history of Israel a "remnant" may be discerned, a spiritual Israel within the national Israel. In Elijah's time 7,000 had not bowed the knee to Baal (1 Kings 19:18). In Isaiah's time it was the "very small remnant" for whose sake God still forbore to destroy the nation (Isa. 1:9). During the captivities the remnant appears in Jews like Ezekiel, Daniel, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, Esther and Mordecai. At the end of the 70 years of Babylonian captivity it was the remnant which returned under Ezra and Nehemiah. At the advent of our Lord, John the Baptist, Simeon, Anna, and "them that looked for redemption in Jerusalem" (Luke 2:38), were the remnant. During the church-age the remnant is composed of believing Jews (Rom. 11:4, 5). But the chief interest in the remnant is prophetic. During the great tribulation a remnant out of all Israel will turn to Jesus as Messiah, and will become His witnesses after the removal of the church (Rev. 7:3-8). Some of these will undergo martyrdom (Rev. 6:9-11), some will be spared to enter the millennial kingdom (Zech. 12:6-13:9). Many of the Psalms express, prophetically, the joys and sorrows of the tribulation remnant.—"The Scofield Reference Bible."

THE TEMPTATION OF JESUS

Its source; its nature; its extent

E. E. Pohle

I. Temptation has two sources: (1) the Adamic nature, from within (James 1:14; Mark 7:20-23), and (2) Satan, from without (Mark 7:15; Matt. 4:1-11).

Our temptations come from both sources; Christ's came only from without. As to the first, Jesus could not only not sin, but He could not be tempted, for "God cannot be tempted with evil" (James 1:13), the context here showing that the evil referred to is the evil from within, or the Adamic nature.

II. As to His nature, therefore, Christ was absolutely impeccable. That He was tempted is evident, both from a study of His life and also from the inspired statement in Hebrews 4:15. But note the nature of the temptation: "Tempted in all points like as we—sin apart" or, apart from sin; in other words, apart from the Adamic nature. This passage, then, deals with the nature of Christ's temptation, not the outcome as the erroneous translation, "yet without sin," would imply.

The questions then come. Since He was not tempted from within, but only from without, (1) What was the nature of those temptations? and (2) Could He understand or sympathize with us in our temptations? Let us consider the temptation in the wilderness, where the strength of Satan's batteries were hurled against Him:

1. Satan, in the wilderness, tempted Him to use His power to satisfy His own physical needs by turning stones into bread. He had the power to do this, but He would not, for that would have been a misuse of power which had been given Him to advance the kingdom of God upon earth. Besides, He came to show man how to live in daily dependence upon the Father, and this would have been an act of independence.

2. Satan tempted Him to cast Himself down from the pinnacle of the temple and so make a display of His supernatural power as a proof to His enemies that He was the Son of God. He might have done this, but He would not, for that would have been presuming upon God's power with a concession to pride, and He came to show men the high and exalted use of that power—not for personal aggrandizement, but for God's glory.

3. Satan tempted Him to take the promised kingdoms of the world by a short cut instead of by the painful way of the Cross. He could have received these world-kingdoms then, but He would not, for that would have frustrated the Father's plan for the redemption of the world. "For the joy that was set before Him He endured the Cross, despising the shame."

That this three-fold temptation or testing was from Satan, outside of Himself, and was not in relation to sin growing out of the Adamic nature, is evident.

III. With a little meditation it can readily be seen that in the temptation in the wilderness was involved every form of temptation to which man is heir, but we must not forget that besides Satan's temptings, we, as fallen human beings, have the Adamic nature to battle with. It was not necessary that He should know the temptation coming from our fallen nature in order to sympathize with us—He did not sympathize with our sin—He came to die for it, a voluntary sacrifice. And just as the lamb, under the old dispensation, had to be tested for a number of days to prove that it was without blemish, before it could be offered in sacrifice, so Christ was tested in order to prove to Satan and man that He was truly the Son of God.

The realm of temptation covered by the temptation in the wilderness might be classified as follows:

1. Unlawful gratification of the physical desires.
2. Spiritual pride.
3. Selfish ambition, evading the necessary sacrifice in the pathway planned by God.

In all these, Christ was truly tempted—He gained a real victory, and is therefore "able to succor them that are tempted." He was, indeed, truly human, but His humanity, conceived as it was by the Holy Ghost and therefore impeccable, was, as it were, so insulated by His divine nature that when the darts of sin were hurled against Him they bounded back to their source. He felt their sting, but they found no lodgment in His holy Being. And having known the awful pressure of temptation, and knowing "our frame," our weakness, our frailty, He can truly sympathize with us to the fullest extent, and in triumphant joy offer a remedy for our sin in the blood of His Cross.

To those desiring to reach the hearts of the people in sermons, a study of the results which Rev. George W. King (St. Louis, Mo.) found from a vote in his congregation (Markham Memorial), as to the sermons of the year which helped them most, is interesting. The following, delivered at various times, were those receiving most frequent mention in the ballot: "The Open Road" (1 Sam. 27:10); "A Lesson in Prayer" (Eph. 3:4); "The Pure in Heart" (Matt. 5:8); "A Royal House" (Heb. 3:6); "The Light of the Morning" (2 Sam. 23:4); "The Handwriting of God" (John 8:6; 1:3); "The Mother" (John 19:26); "Wasted Sundays" (James 1:25); "International Peace" (Eccl. 3:8); "My Yoke" (Matt. 11:29).—"Herald and Presbyter."

THE BIBLE HOUSE, LOS ANGELES

This institution, of which Ralph DeWitt Smith is secretary-treasurer, makes an earnest appeal for funds for the wider circulation of the Scriptures. Special attention is given to the circulation of the Scriptures among Spanish speaking people.

AN ANTIPODEAN TESTIMONY

Mr. James Taylor, of Wairuna, New Zealand, and brother Thomas, visited the Institute recently, having been turned back from Europe while on their way to the Holy Land and Egypt. Mr. James Taylor writes from Auckland, N. Z., under date of November 15 regarding the Institute:

"The impression created by the noble Institute is quite an inspiration and I will delight in speaking of it to our friends here."

THE NEW ROCHESTER SEMINARY PRESIDENT

Rev. Clarence A. Barbour, D. D., has been chosen as President of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Rochester, N. Y. Dr. Barbour has already sought release from the religious work department of the International Committee of the Young Men's Christian Associations and will take up his new duties April 1. "The Watchman-Examiner" speaks of the wide-spread satisfaction with this choice of a successor to the distinguished theologian, Augustus H. Strong, who resigned in 1912.

PASTOR FINDLAY AT ST. GEORGES CROSS

Recently the Tabernacle at St. Georges Cross, Glasgow, Scotland, celebrated the Fortieth Anniversary of its founding. Besides the splendid work done in Glasgow, thirty-two men and women have gone out as missionaries. For some four years Pastor Findlay has not been physically able to take the full measure of public ministry but other persons have carried on the work. One hundred and sixteen young men of the congregation have entered the war and already several have been killed in battle.

THE DEATH OF REV. JOHN URQUHART

"The death of this servant of God, which took place recently, removes from this scene of weakness and conflict, one who in his day did yeoman service for the cause of Christ. After years of labor in the pastorate, Mr. Urquhart entered upon literary work, editing papers and writing books in defence of the faith. Leaving England for Scotland he still performed a useful ministry in the support of the high claims of the Word of God. At length he departed for the antipodes. There he preached, lectured and wrote, just as in the mother country, exercising a powerful influence. For some years physical weakness impeded his energies but notwithstanding such drawbacks he did a long day's work; his chief literary undertaking being "The New Biblical Guide."—"The Christian."

LIGHT ON PASTOR RUSSELL'S RECORD AND METHODS

The "Chicago Tribune" of February 2 has the following in introduction to a series of articles on Pastor Russell:

"With 'Pastor' Russell, president of the famous International Bible Students' Association and magnate of its thriving secular affiliation, the United States Investment Company, libel suits are quite as much a specialty as religion. It is expected the 'Pastor,' therefore, will read the subjoined story and its successors with considerable interest. Although the libel laws might be said to be a sort of second Bible to the 'Pastor,' he much prefers where possible to hold the friendship of newspapers by sending his sermons to them for publication at regular advertising rates.

"The Tribune,' while offering to its readers the results of an investigation of 'Pastor' Russell's record and methods, wishes to apologize to them for having printed two of his advertisements some time ago. When information as to the nature of the 'Pastor's' activities came to 'The Tribune's' attention his advertising was at once barred from these columns."

This series of articles briefly sketches the career of "Pastor" Russell, his many deceptions, his methods of securing money, his donation of 'miracle wheat, domestic troubles, etc. It should be said in this connection also that the "Chicago Herald" has positively declined hereafter to print "Pastor" Russell's sermons, although the insertions are paid for at advertising rates.

METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE BIBLE CONFERENCE

The fourth Bible and evangelistic conference was held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, beginning January 24, Dr. A. C. Dixon presiding. The three topics engaging particular attention the first day were, prayer, missionary inspiration and the coming of the Lord. The first was introduced by the Rev. Joseph W. Kemp, the second by Rev. J. Stuart Holden, and the third by Lord Blythswood. The Bible study hour on other days had as speakers, Sidney Collett, Sir Robert Anderson and Rev. John Thomas. Notwithstanding the disturbance in Great Britain on account of the war, the conference was one of the most helpful and encouraging that Dr. Dixon has organized at the Tabernacle.

ROMAN CATHOLICS AROUSED

Rev. J. J. Wynne, editor of the "Catholic Encyclopedia," announces that a thorough investigation of a movement declared to be in progress on the part of anti-Catholic societies and publications to drive Catholics out of public life has been undertaken by the commission on religious prejudice authorized by the supreme council of the Knights of Columbus. It is expected that a meeting furthering this investigation will be held in Chicago March 6. Criminal prosecution is already ordered against one widely circulated anti-Catholic publication and others may follow. In the recent election in New York and other states there was open opposition to some candidates on the ground that they were Roman Catholics and that their election would be highly detrimental to the public weal. It is simply a matter of fact that many Americans are fearing Catholic political dominance and believe that there should be a movement that would prevent such dominance.

THE OLD WALDENSIAN CHURCH

This body of Christians having its origin at Lyons, in France, in the twelfth century, has had its home chiefly in the Cottian Alps of Italy. These Christians have the oldest Protestant organization in the world, and were never brought under the power of the Roman Catholic church.

Their work has spread, and they have a church in Rome, erected by a wealthy American woman, built on the very spot where their martyred pastor, Pascale, was burned at the stake. They now have 270 organized churches in Italy, Sicily and Egypt, with 150 official workers of all classes. Their missionaries have crossed the ocean and preached the gospel in Africa; they have colonies in South America with some 8,000 members gathered in seven churches; they have missionaries also among the Italians in America. The home church has only sixteen pastors, with a membership of 13,000. The present war has greatly interfered with the work of this consecrated body, and contributions in the way of pecuniary aid and prayer are greatly needed.

EPISCOPALIANS AND EVANGELISTIC METHODS

As an example of how the tabernacle atmosphere is extending to the local churches, (Philadelphia) Rev. Dr. Forest E. Dager, the rector of St. Paul's Reformed Episcopal church on North Broad street, recognized as a rather conservative church, last Sabbath evening week began evangelistic sermons and gave the invitation at the close for people to confess Christ and indicate their stand by coming forward and taking him by the hand. In fifteen minutes' time 19 men had come forward and taken the rector by the hand and taken their places on the front rows of pews, the choir and congregation meanwhile singing revival hymns, and the vestrymen and others doing personal work. Dr. Dager announces that he intends for the present to conduct all of his Sabbath evening services in this way, and after the Sunday campaign closes to hold a series of services on consecutive nights, using the tabernacle methods. Dr. Dager is recognized as a strong preacher and influential minister in the city and well known in regions beyond his own city.—"Presbyterian Banner."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR ANTICIPATIONS

The holding of the Fifth World's and Twenty-Seventh International C. E. Convention in Chicago, July 7-12, is already engaging the attention of Christian Endeavor Societies throughout the world. While the war will prevent the attendance of many from European countries, the expectation is for the largest convention ever held, single States having already engaged the entire capacity of some of Chicago's largest hotels.

The Chicago C. E. Union held its annual meeting in the Moody Church, February 9, and 5,000 Endeavorers attempted to get into the building to hear "Father Endeavor" Clark deliver his address. This necessitated the holding of three overflow meetings and Dr. Clark addressed each of them. As the average maximum temperature of Chicago in July for twenty years has been 77 degrees and the minimum 67 degrees, visitors may feel quite at ease with reference to their comfort. All readers of "The Christian Workers Magazine" who are visitors at the convention will receive a cordial welcome at the Moody Bible Institute and will be shown about the buildings, where hundreds of students; including many Christian Endeavorers, will be studying the Word of God and methods of Christian work.

J. H. R.

The Philosophy of Christ's Temptation, by George Stephen Painter, Ph. D.

We might say much for the literary charm of this work, but must reprobate its doctrinal position. The Bible is represented as "a mosaic, a compilation of the religious consciousness of the race." The doctrines of the trinity, the proper deity of Christ, and the personality and deity of the Holy Ghost are denied. The virgin birth is questioned, as is also the reality of Christ's miracles, and the devil—represented as only a personification.

L. W. G.

The Anti-Christ, by Richard Hayes McCartney, author of "The Whip of God," "The Imperial," "Songs in the Waiting," etc.

This is a poetic work with a prose appendix, in which the author says that next to Christ the Scriptures give the Anti-Christ the most prominent place on their inspired pages. He does not assume to have covered every detail in the revelation of this awful being, nor does he claim that the picture he has drawn is itself in every detail correct, but he believes he has written nothing that the Holy Scriptures do not warrant. A remarkable feature in the history of the book is that its author is not a professional man, but a merchant, a packer of hides indeed, of Kansas City, Mo. We have not read the book in its entirety, but its appearance and character appeal to us.

96 pages, 5x7½ inches. Charles C. Cook, 150 Nassau St., New York City, N. Y. Price 50 cents.

We have received a copy of the Gospel Text Calendar for 1915, published by H. S. Hallman, Berlin, Ontario. It is a thirteen-page calendar, containing a Bible text for each day of the month, and large calendar at the bottom. Printed in colors. Price, 25c, postpaid.

Looking for the Saviour, by Philip Mauro, attorney at law, author of "The Number of Man," "Life in the Word," etc.

Those who are familiar with Mr. Mauro's writings, his logical reasoning, familiarity with world conditions, and spiritual insight of the truth and the Word of God, will be glad to read this late production, which we consider one of, if not the best, answer to the post-tribulation theory yet published. It is full of comfort for believers in the awful times that have come upon us.

Biography of Gospel Song and Hymn Writers, by J. H. Hall.

This is a very interesting book, fresh from the press, giving life sketches and portraits of seventy-seven American writers of sacred lyrics, and musicians, who figure prominently in the development of our church music from the early nineteenth century days to the present.

Beginning with Lowell Mason, who is rightly designated as "The Father of American Church Music," the author gives an amazing mass of facts regarding a most important group of people, including William Bradbury, George F. Root, P. P. Bliss, Ira D. Sankey, Robert Lowry, James McGranahan, D. B. Towner, Eben E. Rexford and Fanny Crosby. Interest is added, too, by the appearance of sketches of some of the pioneer musicians—especially from the South—of whom little has been written. There are omissions of names that one would expect to find in the list of those selected to be written up—but for this the author makes acknowledgment in the preface, suggesting a possible second volume to include such.

Mr. Hall has told the stories of these lives in a simple, unaffected style, somewhat crude at times, and with a tendency to the repetition of certain stereotyped phrases in his introductions and conclusions. But he has shown a fine sincerity of purpose throughout, and the reader at once feels a genial Christian spirit in the author. The student of hymnology and the lover of gospel song will find this book a splendid addition to his library.

The work is gotten up in good form, well bound, thoroughly indexed, fully illustrated, printed in clear type on excellent paper.

Brown, a former Bible Institute student, is pastor of the Presbyterian church, and during the campaign a good quartet was organized by Messrs. Smith, Gilmore, Brown and H. E. Grievonow, of Mountain Lake.

S. D. and B. W. Goodale have been working together with good results. They closed a union meeting in Diller, Neb., January 31. The spirituality had been at a low ebb, but a real revival resulted and 144 persons professed conversion. The next meeting was opened February 7 at Savannah, Mo., with good prospects. S. D. Goodale is the director of the music.

The Forsythe Evangelistic Party closed a remarkable campaign in Fulton, Mo., in a tabernacle seating 2,200. There were over 1,300 professed conversions and reconsecrations. All the stores of the city were closed on the afternoon of the day of fasting and prayer, for two hours. Three colleges of the city had many conversions among the students. At a closing reception, without any address, 15 persons accepted Christ. The party is now in union services in Kendallville, Ind.

Milford H. Lyon conducted an evangelistic campaign in Fort Wayne, Ind., for several weeks. The tabernacle seating 5,000 was filled to its capacity. There was a large number of conversions. Dr. Lyon preached every noon to a big audience of men in the county court house. The pastors were highly pleased with the work done.

"The Claude A. Gunder Evangelistic Party closed a successful campaign in Chetopa, Kan., Jan. 17, resulting in 150 conversions and reclamations. Mr. Gunder organized a men's gospel team of 48 members and they are continuing the work of saving souls in and around Chetopa. The party is now in Moravia, Ia., in a union campaign and the Spirit is dealing with the hearts of men in mighty power."—Bess B. Gunder.

Bob Johnson and party sent word from Brookville, Pa., February 9 that they were at the high tide of a wide spread revival in their tabernacle campaign. At the end of four weeks over 1,150 had made a decision. A belated report also has reached us of Bob Johnson's meetings during November and December in Lehigh, Pa., where the meetings were very successful. At the beginning of the meetings the city had 22 licensed saloons; the liquor business was cut 50 per cent. On the last night a campaign for a subscription was raised to establish a reading room for the young men of the town.

Wood and Brooks have been holding successful campaigns in northern Iowa. The meetings at Kendallville and at the Albion M. E. church have been wonderfully blessed, the church members revived and working for the lost of the community. The unsaved men and women, boys and girls turning from their sins and accepting Christ as their personal Saviour. The evangelists have open dates for March.

C. E. Strawbridge, postman evangelist of Lima, O., closed a successful campaign at Sidney, Ind., January 17, which resulted in 58 conversions, 37 reconsecrations, and 29 accessions to the Christian church. A similar campaign which followed at the Booneville, Ind., Christian church, resulted in 23 conversions, 22 reconsecrations and 16 additions to the church. Mr. Strawbridge was assisted by Mr. and Mrs. E. G. Conner, singers.

W. W. Hall and party held a six weeks campaign at Sharpsburg, Pa., closing January 25. The meetings were held in a tabernacle and the Protestant churches of Etna and Sharpsburg united in the movement. The moral and religious tone of both communities was greatly improved and 1,100 professed conversions resulted. Harry von Bruch, formerly of Moody Institute, led the singing. The party was next engaged in a campaign at Ellwood City, Pa., which gave indication of being most successful.

R. W. Roberts, pastor of the Baptist church at Canby, Minn., sends a good report of an evangelistic campaign conducted by Dan Shannon. There were 400 decisions for Christ. Farmers drove twenty-five miles through the snow to attend the meetings. It will be hard work for the saloons ever to regain their hold in the community. All the churches took in large numbers of new members, the memberships being doubled and trebled. The prayer meetings which could hardly be maintained before the revival are now as well attended as the Sunday services.

Bertha Harris and Helen Byrnes send an encouraging report from Hopkins, Fla. They closed a good meeting at Melbourne, Fla., and the indications for a time of blessing at Hopkins were good. Hopkins is a cypress mill town. The men arise at 4 A. M. and are at work at 5 A. M., but they find time to get out to the evangelistic meetings and seem much interested. The evangelists planned to attend a Bible conference February 21 at Stuart, Fla., where they were to have charge of the evening meetings, and about March 1 begin a campaign at Fellsmere, Fla. They ask for an interest in the prayers of our readers.

The Clark Evangelistic Party of Des Moines, Ia., closed a very successful union meeting at Greeley, Kan., February 3 with 50 conversions, and a decided movement for a federation of the three Protestant churches of the town. C. H. Lyon is secretary of the local committee on federation and would appreciate correspondence with similar movements.

Albany R. Smith, son of "Gypsy" Smith, has been conducting successful evangelistic campaigns at such times as he has been able to leave his school work in Crozer Seminary, Chester, Pa. During the past three years he has preached almost continuously in the immediate vicinity, at different places. The same story concerning him comes from every place where he has worked, and people who have gone through a campaign with him have often said they expect to see him, before many years, accomplishing as great a work as his father. He spent Christmas vacation in Brownsville, near Pittsburgh; then at Wilmington from January 17 to 31, and at Westville, N. J., beginning February 7.

We have been pleased this past month to receive three very good reports from as many different people about the meetings conducted by George T. Stephens, at Auburn, Ind. The party closed a six weeks tabernacle campaign with 1,287 decisions for Christ. The campaign was especially marked by the number of men, both young and old, and of prominence, who accepted Christ. At the end of the three weeks the tabernacle had to be enlarged. A men's personal workers league of 400 was organized to continue the evangelistic spirit, and a similar organization was perfected for the young women. After a brief rest the Stephens Party began a five weeks campaign at Bluffton, Ind., February 14.

The R. Sam Kirkland party closed a good meeting at Mount Morris, Ill., Jan. 21. In addition to the large number of conversions there were at least 750 of the crowd of 1,000 the last night pledged themselves against dancing, card playing, or playing any kind of games for gain. All the converts joined some church the last day of the meeting except about 15, and most of them joined the next Sunday. There was not a person in the town who ever saw so many join the churches in Mount Morris in one day before. The party is now at Monroe Center, Ill. They close there Feb. 21 and begin at Cherry Valley, Ill., Feb. 28. They have an open date in July, and have a large tabernacle tent that will seat over 1,800.

The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

A NEW MEMBER OF THE FACULTY

The Rev. Robert McWatty Russell, D.D., LL.D., president of Westminster College, New Wilmington, Pa., has just accepted the call of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago to the chair of Doctrine and Homiletics, and also will be associated with the other members of the faculty in evangelistic and Bible conference work throughout the country, as well as in the editing of "The Christian Workers Magazine."

Dr. Russell is a native of Pennsylvania, where he received his college training, and acted as principal of McKeesport Academy before graduating from the Allegheny United Presbyterian Seminary. He has held but two pastorates, one for six years in Caledonia, N. Y., and the other for nearly sixteen years, in the Sixth Church of Pittsburgh, both being marked by evangelistic and missionary enthusiasm. During the period of his Pittsburgh ministry his church contributed more than $1,000,000 for home and foreign missionary purposes. In 1906 Dr. Russell accepted the presidency of Westminster College, since which time the plant has been completely renovated, and a total of more than $200,000 secured for betterment and endowment. Dr. Russell represented his denomination at the Pan-Presbyterian Conference in Edinburgh in 1896, and served as Moderator of the General Assembly meeting in Atlanta in 1913. He is a preacher and Bible teacher of exceptional ability and power, and will add strength to the faculty of the Institute.

In accepting the call Dr. Russell wrote: "I am more happy in anticipation of my future work than I can tell. God has certainly been good to me, in permitting me * * * to return to the battle front of Christian effort. I praise Him every day for the call that has come to me, and find any wakeful hour of the night filled with songs for His goodness."

FACULTY ENGAGEMENTS

During February Dr. Gray opened the Union Bible Class at Pittsburgh with a lecture on "The Key to the Book of Job," or, "The Mystery of Suffering in the Light of a Just and Holy God." He also occupied on two Sundays the pulpit of the Madison Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, New York.

Dr. Fitzwater will teach the Union Bible Class at Pittsburgh on the following Friday nights: February 12, 19, 26 and March 5. Mr.

Gosnell will teach this class the next three Friday nights, March 12, 19 and 26.

Mr. Sellers spoke at the first meeting held in the new Y. M. C. A. building, Flint, Mich. His other engagements were: February 7, Y. M. C. A., Grand Rapids, Mich.; February 14, Y. M. C. A., Vincennes, Ind.; February 15, with "Bob Jones," Hartford City, Ind.

SPECIAL LECTURES

Rev. F. A. Steven, of the China Inland Mission, a guest of the Institute, has been teaching in the Evening Classes, and also in the Union Bible Class on Saturday nights.

Prof. George L. Robinson, D.D., of the McCormick Theological Seminary, lectured on "The Trial of Jesus Christ." He will give four lectures on "Biblical Geography" and three on "Biblical Archaeology."

Rev. Martyn Summerbell, D.D., President of Palmer Institute, of Lakemont, N. Y., gave three lectures on "The Jesuits," February 23, 24 and 25.

Mr. Alfred Mace, of England, gave two Bible readings to the students January 24 and 28.

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT

In February the workers of this department were engaged as follows: Frances C. Allison, with Bob Jones, Hartford City, Ind.; George E. Guille, Bible classes, Crowley, La.; C. P. Meeker, evangelistic meetings, Odessa and Elbow Lake, Minn.; John C. Page, Hermosa Beach, Cal.; Angy Manning Taylor, Bible classes, Y. W. C. A., St. Louis, Mo.

FOUNDER'S DAY

The birthday of D. L. Moody, founder of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago, was celebrated at the Institute on Friday, Feb. 5, in a manner that marked the day as one of the greatest in the history of the Institute. While the day was, in a sense, a holiday, it proved to be better still, a holy day, in which great spiritual blessings were received. Although great honor was paid to the life and work of Mr. Moody, the chief object of the day was thanksgiving and praise to the God whom Mr. Moody served, and in whose strength he accomplished his great work; and a waiting upon God for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. A highly spiritual tone characterized the program, which was under the direction of the Rev. L. W. Gosnell, assistant to the Dean. The events of the day were as follows:

10:30-12:00 A. M.—Address by Robert Weidensall, Field Secretary of the Y. M. C. A., of Omaha, Neb. The hour was opened with a season of prayer. Immediately preceding Mr. Weidensall's address, Dr. D. B. Towner conducted a song service of favorite hymns of Mr. Moody. Mr. Weidensall, a personal friend of Mr. Moody, related many incidents and several crises in the life of Mr. Moody that are known only to a few persons. He spoke of him as a "multi-man power," as a "John the Baptist to the Sunday-school cause," and a "John the Baptist to lay preaching."

12:30-1:45.—Dinner followed by short addresses on "The Work and Influence of Mr. Moody in Other Lands." The following persons spoke, representing various countries: Miss Hey Ding Ling, China; Miss Charlotte N. Evans, Victoria, Australia; Miss Margaret Conner, Canada; Miss Anna Palmer, Belfast, Ireland; Miss Lucinda Dart, Queensland, Australia; W. E. Blair, New Zealand; T. V. D. Dillon, New Zealand; L. H. Aleppoian, Armenia; Y. P. Balian, Armenia; L. E. Rodriguez, Columbia, S. A.; O. E. Bjelland, Norway; Gunnar Nesse, Norway; J. A. Decker, Holland; R. D. Agosa, Chippewa Indian; Stanley Eaton, New South Wales; J. Rosado, Mexico; M. Ashfield, Canada, and A. Roukema, Holland. The presence of the last speaker of the hour, Mr. Henry S. Kimura, "The Moody of Japan," was a happy surprise. Mr. Kimura was a former student of the Institute, who came to this country when twelve years old; at the age of fourteen he became a Christian, and entered the Moody Bible Institute when nineteen, as the result of an interview with Mr. Moody in San Francisco. He has done a wonderful work in Japan, and is president of the National Evangelization Association of that country. He was en route to California for a campaign among his own people.

1:45-3:15.—Outing arranged by Social Committee.

3:30-5:30.—Prayer service. This hour was the crowning feature of the day. The members of the Faculty and the student body gathered in the auditorium of the Moody Church, and for two hours laid hold of God for an outpouring of the Spirit. There was a searching of hearts among the entire body. Many poured out their hearts before God, and the general plea of the prayers was for a more fully consecrated, Spirit-filled life. God graciously answered, and the reviving and refreshing is felt by Faculty and student body.

5:30-9:30.—Stereopticon Lecture by Mr. E. A. Marshall on "The Life and Work of D. L. Moody," was preceded by a song service in charge of Dr. Towner. The Evening Classes, Union Bible Class, Moody Church members and the public were invited to this evening service. The day was one of the most inspirational the school has enjoyed for some time.

"D. L. MOODY SUNDAY"

The suggestion made by Mr. Frank W. Ober, Editor of "Association Men," that Sunday, February 7, be observed by the Young Men's Christian Associations of North America as "D. L. Moody Sunday," met with the hearty approval of the Associations all over the country. The Moody Bible Institute helped to make the day a success in 120 of the Associations scattered through 35 states, the District of Columbia, and two provinces of Canada, by supplying them with 27,800 pieces of literature, 13 speakers, and 62 sets of lantern slides on the life of Mr. Moody. Some former students report that they preached on the life of Mr. Moody on this same Sunday, acting independently of either the Associations or the Institute, and many others, from whom no report was received, doubtless did likewise.

ON THE OLD LINES

(A missionary in the Philippines recently wrote the Moody Bible Institute, as follows:

"Will you kindly inform me whether you find a tendency at present among the students of the Institute in the direction of the liberal attitude toward the Bible? The young missionaries whom I know are with one accord of a very liberal attitude and yet are just as enthusiastic as one would expect a missionary to be. Is the attitude of the Institute changing?"

The reply of the Institute, written by a member of the faculty, will be strengthening to the faith of some, and we publish it herewith.—Editors.)

"The Dean's Office.

"Dear Brother:

"Your letter inquiring whether our students take the liberal attitude toward the Bible, was received, and we are happy to inform you that this attitude does not obtain here, as our graduates go forth uniformly confessing their faith in the full inspiration of the Scriptures. Some come here with loose views about the Bible, but a stay of even a few months works a marvelous change, which is not brought about by argument on our part, so much as by the simple unfolding of the Word of God, which is its own best witness to its divine origin.

"You say the young missionaries you know are of a very liberal attitude, and yet have all the enthusiasm to be expected in missionaries. As for ourselves, we confess to having been made sad by the unhappy effects of rationalistic teaching on some prospective missionaries. Just recently a young man of sound judgment and fine spirit wrote from one of the seminaries that he could not give hearty support to some of his classmates who were about leaving for the foreign field. They found hell a splendid subject for a joke, and withal there was a lamentable lack of reverence and seriousness resulting from the teaching they had received. Should we not distinguish, therefore, between an enthusiasm for humanity which finds its reward in improving the physical, mental and social status of mankind, and an enthusiasm for Christ which is content only with the highest things?

"We confess, too, that we tremble for the effects of liberal teaching in the second and third generations. The missionaries have their roots in the past in a Christian community, and this tempers the effect of their new theology upon themselves; but what of the results of their false teaching upon converts from heathenism?

"The missionary spirit of the Moody Bible Institute, growing out of the place given to the Bible, is very strong. About seven hundred have gone from these walls to the foreign field, and we entertain a humble hope that their faith in the Word of God, and their consequent spiritual life, enables them to carry blessing such as does not accompany those who have lost their hold upon the Bible.

"We stand, as we ever have done, for 'the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints.'

L. W. Gosnell,
Assistant to the Dean.

UNION BIBLE CLASS

A census of the Union Bible Class taken Saturday night, January 20, in the Moody Church, showed that 741 were present. Twenty-four different denominations and 306 different churches were represented, 169 in Chicago, and 137 outside of the city. There were 24 states represented by church members from seven foreign countries, as follows: England, Scotland, New Zealand, Australia, Canada, Mexico, and Korea. There were 18 states represented by those attending who do not belong to the student body.

A. Fern Houser, '11, and B. Estella Zimmerman, '09, are now working in connection with Mr. A. E. Bishop in Guatemala City, C. A. They will continue their orphan school and church visiting work.

Walter J. Youngclaus, '04, formerly of Zanesville, O., is now pastor of the Congregational church, Goltry, Okla. Mr. Youngclaus was ordained June 22, 1911, and has since worked in Colorado and Ohio.

William Jobusch, '07, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, Redwood Falls, Minn., has been having a gracious revival in his church. The people come from miles away, and the blessing has now continued for more than a month.

Benjamin W. Franklin, '97, pastor of the Park Memorial Church, Springfield, Mass., accomplished some noteworthy things during the last four months of 1914. Besides purchasing 160 new hymn books, he conducted a short term campaign, which freed his church of debt and left a nice balance in the treasury. The church and all auxiliary societies are reported as well organized and ably officered for aggressive work.

B. F. Yancey, present student, is having success in conducting a mission study course for the Englewood Christian Church Christian Endeavor Society. About 125 young people attend each Sunday. On January 3, Ruth Nelson, former student, spoke on China, and January 10, George E. Prince, present student, gave an address on Africa. Mr. Floyd Johnston, present student, is also actively interested in making the class a success.

Gustav A. Briegleb, '02, pastor of the Arlington Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, Md., has declined a call to the South Avenue Congregational Church in Syracuse, N. Y., having decided to continue his present work of building up one of the most active congregations in that section of that city. He has completed his fourth year in this place, and his church is now undertaking the building of a handsome new stone structure to cost $30,000 to accommodate its growing membership. A very unexpected but much appreciated gift of $1,000 was given by a working girl to help pay for the ground on which the new church is to be started about March 1, 1915.

Ira M. Grey, '05, pastor of the Beacon Hill Congregational Church, Seattle, Wash., framed a new constitution for his church, which was later adopted by the congregation. It provides for primary elections for the nomination of all church officers. The new instrument was pronounced a model by other pastors in the city, and will probably be adopted by other congregations.

Wesley Pearce, '13, was ordained at the First Baptist Church, Appleton, Wis., December 31, 1914. After receiving the charge, the Rev. William P. Pearce, father of Wesley, presented the latter with his own Bible and said in part: "This Bible has been my constant companion for a quarter of a century. I bought it before you were born. I used it in my student days. It is full of notes and outlines. I have carried it over seas and preached from it in the pulpit where I was converted. I had never intended giving it away. I had willed it to you at my death. It is the most precious gift I could give you. As long as you live remember, as Solomon said: 'When thou goest it shall lead thee, when thou sleepest it shall keep thee, and when thou awakest it shall talk with thee.' Preach your father's Bible."

BORN

To Mr. and Mrs. Edmund Hall, January 7, 1915, a daughter, Annie Mc Callum.

To Mr. and Mrs. M. E. Hawkins, '11, Hastings, Mich., January 11, 1915, a daughter, Esther Evelyn.

To the Rev. and Mrs. Carl Lundbom, '10, of Saginaw, Mich., a daughter, Marjory Enger.

MARRIED

Wayland A. Nickerson, '11, to Edna M. Leland, '12, at the Free Baptist Church, West Dallas, Wis., January 21, 1915. At home, Hillsdale, Wis.

DIED

Herbert P. Elson, '93, writes of the sudden death of his beloved wife: "On January 7 we went to the doctor, who said an operation was necessary; on January 11 she was operated on, and on January 14 she was called to higher service. Hers was a gracious victory, and she was conscious almost to the last moment." Mr. and Mrs. Elson have been engaged as missionaries in Tangier, Morocco, Northern Africa, since 1901. Mr. Elson is now left with three children to care for, and all plans for the future must be made over.

Charles S. Tate, '99, founder of the Knights of Daniel, a fraternity for boys, died in Rockford, Ill., January 28, 1915, at the age of fifty. He was well known by many in the Institute.

BOOKS THAT HURT AND BOOKS THAT HEAL

On its commercial side this is the age of advertisement; on its political side it is the age of democracy; on its physical side it is the age of acceleration, earth conquest and air conquest; on its educational side it is the age of reading. Books are falling from the tireless press, like raindrops from the clouds. Magazines and newspapers are more numerous and more voluminous than the pioneers of printing dreamed they ever could be. Catalogues, circulars, prospectuses, monographs, and tracts fill our mail bags and cover our library tables with generous miscellany. The author has become more popular than the orator. The editor, with his ten thousand tongues, is far more powerful than the preacher, with his one tongue, however fluent that may be.

Oratory is not exactly a lost art. There are some realms in which the orator still reigns, and ever shall. But, so far as the molding of public opinion is concerned, and the education of the masses, the printed page is more potential than oral speech. So it well becomes us, friends of religion, apostles of the Christian faith, conscious of the possession of a great message for the world, to face this fact, and to act with prompt wisdom lest we lose ground before we are aware.

Never were the opposing forces so numerous as now. Never were they so dangerous. If they have lost something of their boldness they have gained somewhat of cunning. They shift their quarters and change their names a little more readily than of yore. Their disguises are more skilfully concealed. I would speak particularly of certain hostile literary influences against which we must guard ourselves and those for whose religious instruction we are responsible. There are books that hurt, books that undermine the reader's faith, books that sap the reader's moral strength, books that plant in unsuspecting minds the seeds of many a noxious growth. There are books that deal dishonestly with the data of personal religion. There are books that stupefy the tender consciences of the young.

The best way to get rid of bad literature is to multiply good literature. A strong religious press is a mighty ally of the church. There are books that invigorate the conscience, books that "polish the divine mirror of the youthful mind," books that show us life's possible divineness, books that are veritable sacraments to the soul. Let us crowd our shelves with such. Let us read and recommend them.—Charles Carroll Albertson, in "American Messenger."

THE FAR-REACHING MINISTRY OF TRACTS

Someone has said, "A drop of ink may make a million think." No one is able to estimate the good which has been accomplished through the dissemination of the truth which God has revealed in the form of interesting and impressive gospel tracts. That the careful distribution of tracts is an important auxiliary in the work of the gospel, the following narratives may testify:

J. Hudson Taylor, the well-known founder of the China Inland Mission, was converted through reading a narrative tract which he picked up in his father's library. Suddenly he came upon the words, "The finished work of Christ"; light burst in upon his soul, he confessed to God his sin and unbelief, and found joy and peace in believing.

Dr. J. W. Chickering's tract, "What Is It to Believe on Christ?" has been a wonderful power for good. The author at his death had the names of over seventeen hundred persons who attributed their conversion to this tract.

In a social gathering in New Hampshire, where young ladies were in the habit of gathering weekly to give readings upon various subjects, the tract "The End of Time," by Doctor Watts, was selected as the subject for the evening. The reading on this night fell to the lot of a gay and thoughtless young lady. She looked at the title; she began to read—she paused—she attempted to proceed, but her heart was too full. She resigned her seat to a companion. The tract was read, and the end of time and the realities of eternity were brought into close connection with the scenes of that evening. God used the reading of this tract to carry conviction from family to family, neighborhood to neighborhood, and in the space of a few weeks most of the individuals who first listened to the reading of the tract, with more than sixty others, were led to place their hopes of salvation on the finished work of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Charles H. Spurgeon once said he knew of a man who was converted through the perusal of a leaf of the Bible which had been wrapped around some article he had bought.

Richard Gibbs wrote a tract, "The Bruised Reed." A tin peddler gave it to a boy named Richard Baxter; through reading it he was brought to Christ. He wrote "A Call to the Unconverted." Among the thousands saved through it was Philip Doddridge, who wrote "The Rise and Progress of Christianity." It fell into the hand of William Wilberforce, the emancipator of the slaves in the British colonies and led him to Christ. Wilberforce wrote "A Practical View of Christianity," which fired the heart of Leigh Richmond. He wrote "The Dairyman's Daughter." Millions of copies of this famous booklet have been circulated, and it has testified for Christ in over fifty different languages.

For the encouragement of those who are interested in the distribution of tracts we quote what has been said by another:

"Tracts go everywhere; tracts know no fear; tracts never tire; tracts can be multiplied without end by the press; tracts can travel at little expense; they run up and down like faithful messengers, blessing all, giving to all, asking no gift in return; they can talk to one as well as to a multitude, and to a multitude as well as one; they require no public room to tell their story in; they can tell it in the banking house or the shop, the parlor or the kitchen, the railway train or the ocean steamship, the street car or the subway, on the broad highway or footpath through the fields; they take no note of jeers, no one can betray them into hasty or random expressions; though they will not always answer questions, they will tell their stories twice over, or thrice or four times if you wish them, and they can be made to speak on every subject, and on every subject they may be made to speak wisely and well. They can, in short, be made the vehicles of truth, the teachers of all classes."

"He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again with rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him" (Psa. 126:6). Whether we see results or not, it is our blessed privilege to know and rejoice in the fact that if we sow good seed the harvest will certainly be for His glory.—"Pittsburgh Christian Advocate."

FOUR KINDS OF READERS

There are four sorts of readers. Hour-glass readers, whose reading runs in and out, and leaves nothing. Sponge readers, who imbibe all, but only to give it out again as they got it, and perhaps not so clean. Jelly-bag readers, who keep the dregs and refuse, and let the pure run through. Diamond readers, who cast aside all that is worthless, and hold only the gems.—Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

"DIVIDENDS" FOR PRISON BOOK FUND DONORS

Irvine, Ky.

While I was in Richmond I had left some of the Colportage Library books at the jail there. I held a service in the jail and went again Sunday with a Presbyterian pastor and some ladies, to help with the singing at his service. Not many men there could read, but one of them said he would read for the others. At the third visit which I made alone, nine of the men raised their hands in token that they did accept Jesus as their Savior, some of them with tears in their eyes.

DR. BROUGHTON TO YOUNG MINISTERS

Several years ago I began reading the biographies of the greatest soul-winners that the church has ever produced. I began with the biography of Luther and then I read the biographies of Wesley, Charles G. Finney, and D. L. Moody. If I am addressing some young minister who is facing his life-task, I do not know a better thing I could do than to urge the reading of these biographies.—Len G. Broughton.

THE CHRISTIAN WORKERS MAGAZINE
153-163 Institute Place, Chicago.

Entered as Second-Class Matter, Oct. 7, 1910, at the Post Office at Chicago, Illinois, under Act of March 3, 1879.

During the past few months we have enrolled about ninety new agents for "The Christian Workers Magazine." Some of these have been very successful, but the most of them met with reverses, and difficult circumstances, and not many are sending in subscriptions at this time.

Richard W. Branston holds the best record, having turned in his first 250 subscriptions in about three weeks time, and another hundred afterward, but over a longer period. Not only was his record good, but his work was well done. We ask an interest in your prayers for him, that he may be successful in securing a full thousand subscriptions, which is his goal.

P. J. Andreasen has the next best place, having turned in 103 subscriptions in five weeks.

Several agents are working to secure scholarships in The Moody Bible Institute. For 150 new subscriptions we give a paid-up scholarship of fifteen weeks, to accepted students, covering cost of room and board, and subject to the conditions applicable to all students.

Your co-operation in securing subscriptions for the magazine will be greatly appreciated, even if you can only send one or two.

Some of our new friends have proved a great help to us. One lady, who subscribed in November, in answer to the advertisement of The Battle of Armageddon offer, was so well pleased with "The Christian Workers Magazine" she renewed her subscription for a year within a month. In a few weeks she sent in $8.00 for eight of her friends—then $5.00 for five more—and a few days ago $4.00 for four more. Already these subscriptions have proved a blessing to the recipients, who have expressed themselves as well pleased.

Many are sending in one subscription for a friend when renewing their own subscriptions. Some have contributed to the missionary fund, to send the magazine to workers on the field. This money is applied to subscriptions for workers who have not had the magazine before, and to renew some of their subscriptions where we know the magazine has been a help to them in their work.

On account of so many people being out of work, and some sick, and for some other circumstances, a fund for the general free distribution of the magazine would prove a great blessing. There are many to whom we would like to send the magazine if we could.

Some of our readers have ordered the magazine for the reading rooms of the public libraries in their towns and cities. When the subscriptions run out we find the librarians are always glad to have them renewed. Who wants to subscribe for St. Louis? Cooperstown, N. D.? Chicago?

We always want the names of Christian people to whom we may send circulars or sample copies. You may be able to do this even if you can not secure subscriptions.

If you would like to work as an agent on regular commission send us your name at once for agent's letter.

Let everybody help. We need your help now more than ever before. We are doing all we can but if you help it will be better because you can go where we cannot go, and your solicitation would bring a subscription where we probably could not gain an entrance.

"The Christian Workers Magazine" is not published for profit. All money taken in is used to defray expenses, and should we have a balance over at any time it would go to the work of The Moody Bible Institute to train men and women for preaching the gospel. It has not been our privilege so far to have such a balance. Why not help us to increase the magazine this year so we will have a balance?

If every one who reads this would help, the problem would be solved. Some do not turn to this page for information about our work. We hope at least 5,000 will heed this appeal—we would rather 10,000 would respond—why not?

PIPE-TONE FOLDING ORGAN

WHEN I WAS A LITTLE BOY of 8 years it was my privilege to hear an Organ, the tones of which so enraptured me that I begged my parents to buy one. The promise was made in good faith but, unfortunately, circumstances were such that my hopes were not realized. These humble circumstances aroused a stronger desire and a determination on my part to be the proud possessor of an ORGAN, and today my fondest hopes have been fully realized.

Preacher and Prayer

(Power Through Prayer)

By Rev. E. M. Bounds, D. D.

The author touches the weak points of our public as well as private prayer-life. There are some keen home-thrusts in these pages, but they are the wounds of a friend. Counsel is given which is greatly needed, and workers will have brought home to them the secret of much failure and weakness in the past, but the duty of the Christian hearer to pray for the preacher is powerfully pressed home.

Synopsis of Contents (Chapter Titles):

“Let Us Rise Up and Build”

This is the cry of students, Faculty, Business Staff, and household and office helpers at The Moody Bible Institute for the immediate erection of the new Administration Building

WHY

1. Because the Institute has no auditorium that will seat more than two-thirds of the students now enrolled.
2. Because it is necessary to hold classes in the library, gymnasium, reading rooms and parlors, which are required for other purposes.
3. Because it is necessary to rent an outside building to accommodate the music department.
4. Because dormitory space for 66 students is now being used for office purposes.
5. Because two outside buildings, three flats and 22 rooms are now rented for students at an annual cost of thousands of dollars, which should be saved.

Thus, with scattered and crowded classes; with the expense of rented buildings; with poorly arranged offices, the efficiency of the work is greatly impaired.

☛ In case you would like to follow the example of Moses when he built the tabernacle, a partial list of the material needed in the building is given on the opposite page. Whether it be large or small, will you send or

The Book-Method of Bible Study

(Extract from Author's Introduction)

The best method of the study of any organism is that which gives due prominence to the structure of that organism. The Bible is a living organism of truth; it has in it the life of the living God, and is able (as no other book is) to impart spiritual life to the soul of man.

The Bible was made bookwise—one book at a time, according as the need for the truth, historical, prophetic or ethical, as set forth therein, arose.

It would seem reasonable, therefore, to assume that the Book-Method of Bible Study should yield the best results from time and labor spent in an endeavor to "search the Scriptures."

Of course it is true that there is a general view of the Bible which one should have even before the particular view of any one book. This is assumed; but such a view is only preparatory for that better method, yea, best method, namely, the Book-Method of Bible Study.

In this volume the Book-Method is applied to Malachi, John, Acts, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, Hebrews, First John and the Revelation.

VITAL TEACHINGS OF GOD'S WORD

AS SHOWN IN BIBLE STUDIES

By J. H. TODD

Secretary Australian Council of the China Inland Mission

This little volume is not a book of popular "Bible readings," but a kind of pocket manual of Theology. It is a book for careful, continued study, with a prayerful heart, a clear head, some "fenced-off" time, and a bold-type Bible in constant use for every reference.

The man or woman who cannot take even an evening course at a Bible school, or make use of a correspondence course, may very profitably use this little book as a guide in grasping the cardinal doctrines of God's revelation to men, in daily half-hours.

D. L. Moody said

"Bilhorn is the only man that writes, plays and sings his own music and makes and plays his own organs."

No one knew better than Mr. Moody the need for spiritual songs. Mr. Bilhorn's great success came through the introduction of songs that reach deep into the hearts of the people such as "Sweet Peace" and "I Will Sing the Wondrous Story."

Voices of Victory

is Mr. Bilhorn's latest selection of the choicest hymns. The use of this song-book for church services, Sunday Schools, Revival Meetings, etc., quickens the hearts and puts new life into the church work.

Children love to sing them and they gladden the hearts of the older folks. Songs arranged for all kinds of meetings. Songs of "War or Peace," "Happiness," "Soul-Winning," "Joy," "Love," "Songs for the Children," "Songs of Heaven," "333," every one a gem.

CHRISTIAN EQUIVALENT OF WAR

Cloth .50

D. WILLARD LYON

A keen study of the elemental factors involved in the use of force, whether manifested in international, civic or social relations, or in personal conduct. An effort to respond to the insistent call for larger and more conclusive thinking regarding the application of the principles of Jesus Christ to international and interracial relationships.

CHRISTIAN STANDARDS IN LIFE

Art Leather .50

J. L. MURRAY AND F. M. HARRIS

Twelve biographical studies aiming to bring out in each case a great dominant motive of life, and show how it entered into the thoughts and actions of each character. Each chapter has daily readings designed to insure a personal application of the truths involved.

MANHOOD OF THE MASTER

Art Leather .50

HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

A new edition from new plates of this wonderfully fresh and inspiring book of daily devotional studies. The sale of 20,000 copies indicates its popularity. A book which, as a well-known reviewer puts it, "says something really fresh and vital about Jesus himself, and the simple ultimate meaning of His teachings." Same binding and price: "CHRIST IN EVERYDAY LIFE," Bosworth; "PAUL IN EVERYDAY LIFE," Adam.

CARTOONS IN CHARACTER

Cloth .50

ALLYN K. FOSTER

Sharply drawn pen pictures of various traits of human nature. The author uses very plain English and hits straight from the shoulder in his delineation of undesirable characteristics. His descriptions of Willie Wilts, Kit Kalamity, Toby Tight, and more than fifty others, will bring a laugh at the same time that they incite to wholesome self-examination.

ADVENTURES IN FAITH

Paper .10; Boards .25

C. K. OBER

A little volume of definite enlightenment to the many who admire Christian character but consider it unattainable in their personal experience because they are bound by wrong habits or befogged by a false philosophy. This is not a book of theory about religion, but the actual experiences of real men, of varying capacities, who found richest satisfaction in the friendship of Christ.

PERSONAL MEMOIRS

Illustrated, Cloth .50

LUCIEN C. WARNER

A deeply interesting autobiography showing the inner side of the great success of a business man who never relaxed his grip on the highest ideals; and what is more significant, showing the tremendous amount of definitely Christian service such a man is able to render to his city, his country, and the world at large.

GOSPEL OF THE SECOND CHANCE (M. & R. Series)

Cloth .60

J. STUART HOLDEN, Prominent Northfield Conference Speaker

"The work of one who shows intimate knowledge of men, and rare skill and sympathy in dealing with their soul disorders. A tender but faithful message for those who have not understood the riches there are for them in Christ."—Record of Christian Work. Twenty other titles in this series; send for descriptive list.

Practical and Perplexing Questions

confronting the trustees and faculty of The Moody Bible Institute, answers to which the reader is earnestly invited to contemplate:

1. Where will we house the increasing number of men and women who are coming to us to prepare for a life of active Christian service?
2. Where can we find class-rooms that will seat the students?
3. Where can we hold our general exercises and important services where all the students are required to attend?
4. How can we provide adequate space for the library and business offices?
5. How can we arrange to take care of the scores who have applied for admission as students?

The Voice of Duty Answers:

Enlarge the Capacity!

Erect the Administration Building at Once!

As proposed the building will contain a large auditorium, class rooms, library, missionary museum, studios, and offices,—allowing space thus occupied at present to be used for dormitory purposes.

Will You Help Us to Fulfill This Duty Now

by sending a gift of any amount for the new building? It may seem like a sacrifice for you to do so just now, but if you could be present for a day and see the conditions that actually exist, you would be glad to help even at a sacrifice. Besides, what worthier cause can prompt you to sacrifice than such a service for Jesus Christ?

Can you send $100?

THE WHOLE BIBLE AT A GLANCE!

The Stephens Dispensational Chart designed by the REV. PERCY W. STEPHENS, gives a clear and comprehensive idea at a single glance, of God's entire dealings with man and fallen angels, as revealed in the Bible.

It shows in diagrammatic form the Creation of the Earth; it indicates the Career and Conflict of Satan; it outlines the Progress of the Human Race in the Dispensational divisions; and it portrays the Events connected with the Church Age, the Second Coming of Christ, the Millennial Kingdom, the Last Judgment and the New Creation, with remarkable simplicity and sublimity.

It is beautifully printed in five colors, on special "fold-well" enamel paper, and measures 6 by 15 inches. It may be folded into any average-sized Bible.

Every Bible student should possess a copy, though it does not take a Bible student to understand it. Bible-class leaders, Sunday-school teachers, pastors, evangelists, missionaries, and other Christian workers will find it an invaluable help.

Large copies are being used by several Bible teachers in different parts of the country.

COMMENDATIONS

"BEST I HAVE EVER SEEN OF ITS KIND"

"SCRIPTURAL, CLEAR, CONVINCING"

The teaching of dispensational truth is one great need of our times. The dispensational chart by Rev. Percy W. This is the number of actually known Jews who confessed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ during the 19th century, throughout the entire world. There may have been many more of whom we have no record—but these we do know of definitely. It is quite an imposing number when you look at it squarely—204,000 Jews. These composed the remnant of Israel in the body of Christ in the 19th century. When you compare this with the number of heathen conversions throughout the world in the same century, dollar for dollar and population for population, the ratio of results is in favor of the Jewish work!

Now we ask you a question: If during a century when the church was manifestly indifferent to the Jewish missionary claim, over 200,000 Jews were converted, how many thousands more might have been converted if the church were fully awakened to her duty?

Second question: Does this not fully vindicate the truth of God's law in the gospel propaganda—"To the Jew first?"

Third question: Are you trusting God for the Jewish work as you ought? Are you praying? Are you honestly giving God a chance to show you how He can bless YOUR testimony to His ancient people?

These are solemn questions; think them over. Then ask God what you shall do.

Editorial Notes

"The sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us."—Rom. 8:18.

The young Duke of Hamilton when dying, said to his younger brother: "Soon you will be a duke, but I shall be a king!" The hope of the believer which these words suggest is intensified by the commemoration of the resurrection of our Lord at this season of the year. Let us not forget, or cease

Cut from the Loaf to impress upon our children and our children's children, that had He not died for our offenses and risen again for our justification there would have been no salvation for us, much less a hope of glory. But now that He has entered into the heavens as our forerunner, we have an earnest of His coming again and an evidence that He has made us a kingdom of priests unto His God and father.

If our readers have any friends in or out of the ministry who are in doubt about the resurrection of Jesus Christ, or who fail to give that doctrine its rightful emphasis as the keystone of the arch of Christianity, we advise that they send them copies of this issue containing the strong and lucid testimony of Dr. H. M.

The Resurrection of Jesus Christ Parsons on that subject. Dr. Parsons was a Presbyterian divine with whom we came in contact first when he was settled over a large church in Boston. Subsequently he went to Buffalo, and then to Toronto, where he died recently, well advanced in years. He was one of the strongest preachers and Bible teachers of his day, and a commanding figure at the old Niagara Bible Conference where the Bible study on the "Importance of the Resurrection of Christ," reproduced in our columns, was originally given. It will well repay perusal in these sad days of the decadence of faith.

Speaking of the resurrection, it is important to emphasize that we have in mind the resurrection of the body. The "Russellites," more recently known as the International Bible Students Association, talk about a resurrection, but what they have in mind is a resurrection of the spirit or soul which is the corollary of their false doctrine about the "sleep of the soul." But, as according to the teaching of the Bible, the spirit or the soul does not die, no resurrection is required in the case of either. It is the body that dies and the body that is raised again. This is the hope of the Christian, but it may well be the cause of fear and trembling to them that die in their sins.

Zangwill's moan for his countrymen can be heard across the ocean. The Holy City is an armed camp. Troops are within the walls, on the highways and everywhere.

Suffering Israel Aged people and children are left unprotected in the country, crowded with undisciplined fanatical soldiers, who are said to be expelling or intimidating into flight the whole Jewish population of Palestine. Thousands are fleeing towards Egypt, many of whom are installed in the cattle sheds of Alexandria. Jerusalem itself is said to be cut off from direct communication with the rest of the world, and its inhabitants crowd the wailing place as they chant their terrible fear that Armageddon has come upon them. There is very little food among them and less money, for it is impossible in the present condition of the mails to send them either their pensions, for most of them are old and helpless people, or the offerings of their benevolent countrymen in America and Europe. To add to their other horrors, the bombardment of Palestinian ports by the allied fleets is a constant expectation, and when it comes the Turks will massacre both Jews and Christians. How the words of the prophets are being fulfilled in these days, and yet as our Lord said, "All these are the beginning of sorrows" (Matt. 24:8). "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem: they shall prosper that love thee"

Our English correspondence continues to describe the terrible condition of things in the British Isles on account of the war, but we are especially grieved to learn that

The Spiritual Effect of the War from the spiritual point of view it is making little difference in the lives of the people.

It has begotten a great deal of self-sacrifice along lines of philanthropy, but the church has not yet seen her need of self-judgment, confession and contrition. There is much effort being put forth at a great cost of labor, time and money, but much that is professedly done in the name of the gospel is really grieving the true people of God. Mr. J. W. C. Fegan, a well-known worker of London, complains especially of the character of the work of the Y. M. C. A. in the camps. Out and out spiritual work for the salvation of souls is scarce, and some thoughtful evangelical leaders feel that seeds of irregularity and irreverence debasing the gospel are being sown that will yield a sad fruitage in days to come. There is great need for prayer just now that the true witnesses for Christ in Great Britain, and especially among the camps, may be endued with the power of the Holy Spirit, and that the whole church in that part of the harvest field may be greatly awakened to her opportunity and responsibility. We have learned from two or three sources that there is a growing opinion that May or June may see the finish of the war, "a consummation devoutly to be wished."

This remarkable evangelist reached the high water mark of his success in the city of brotherly love. Never before had he conducted a campaign in a city of the first class, numerically speaking, and if he entered upon it with any misgivings they must have been banished almost on his arrival, when the thousands that gathered to welcome him blocked all the thoroughfares in the vicinity of the railway station.

We went through some of the great campaigns of D. L. Moody, beginning with that in the "Hippodrome" in New York, in 1876, and we can testify that since his day no evangelist in this country has so caught the popular mind as "Billy" Sunday. Others have had large meetings, though not so large as Sunday's, but they required a good deal of newspaper boosting to get and to keep them going. The peculiarity about Sunday's meetings is

(and it was the same with those of D. L. Moody), that the newspapers are following him instead of him following them.

And yet how different is Sunday from Moody! Different in his appearance, his surroundings, his methods, his style, different in the tone and character of his message, in his attitude towards the church and its ministry, and especially in the vision and outlook before him. Tempóra mutantur, nos et mutamur in illis. The change from Moody to Sunday measures the change which has taken place in the church and in the world during the last thirty-five years. Sunday's ways would not have been tolerated in Moody's day, and if Moody were now living his type of evangelism would be so quiet and respectable as to attract no notice.

But Moody's work lives today in the hearts and pocketbooks of some of the very men that are now backing Sunday, and if the work he is doing in his generation shall have even a tithe of the lasting benefit following that of his great predecessor, our children and our children's children shall rise up to call him blessed.

Great strides have been made in temperance reform during the past two years. The action of the House of Representatives when the prohibition amendment received a majority of the votes cast; the imperial edict by which Russia has become a prohibition nation; the voting dry, in November, of five out of seven states in which that subject was an issue; the attention which the industrial world is giving to the subject; the making dry of the American navy; the pronouncement of the Catholic convention at Niagara Falls, and the general denunciation of the liquor traffic by other denominations; these and other great occurrences are causing men to take notice that something unusual is going on.

In this connection, the attention of the country will be focused on Atlantic City during the week of July 6-9, when the Anti-Saloon League of America will hold its National Biennial Convention. It has rented what is known as the Million Dollar Pier; the great place for public assemblies in that city, and all interested to attend as delegates are invited to address for further information the Anti-Saloon League of America, Westerville, O. The right to appoint delegates belongs not only to temperance organizations, as such, but to a local church or Sunday-school, young people's societies, Young Women's and Young Men's Christian Associations, the Gideons and kindred organizations.

In our last issue we raised a note of warning against the proposition to introduce religious teaching in the public schools, recommending in its stead the simple reading of the Bible itself as we used to hear it in the good old days. We are glad to have our judgment in this matter confirmed by an experienced educator and superintendent of public instruction, who is also a Christian. He writes us that he has given considerable study to the subject and believes there is more danger than good in the suggestion of the National Education Association, but he heartily approves our own recommendation in the premises.

Religion in the Public Schools

It is seldom in these days that an evangelist obtains such an endorsement as that which came to Dr. L. W. Munhall after his meetings in Princeton, N. J., and we feel that it justifies special mention.

Evangelist Munhall

The testimonial was signed by the secretary of the committee, which consisted of four of the pastors of the city as well as the presidents of the University and the Theological Seminary, and reads as follows:

"In behalf of the committee I wish to express to you how greatly we have appreciated your services among us. We feel that your work in Princeton was of the kind that will last. In your message, sin and salvation were facts not fancies, and Christian discipleship was a positive not negative factor. Your exposition of the Scriptures bearing on Christian living and our obligation to God was most timely and helpful.

"The committee commends you for your courage and tact in dealing with the question of worldliness and indifference among church members and for your strong gospel message to the unconverted. It is our earnest prayer that God may continue to use you as an instrument of great good to the church."

We were about to write "courtesy" instead of "honesty," but we think the latter word better fits the case, for we find the contents of "The Christian Workers Magazine" not infrequently used in other periodicals without the slightest acknowledgment. Only the other day we picked up a magazine in which two editorials were taken word for word from our columns and nothing to indicate it. We are willing to make every allowance, but under the circumstances the omission hardly seemed accidental. What was the editor thinking of, or was he thinking at all? If the thing happened to us we would certainly feel an explanation and apology to be called for.

Apropos of the above, the cover of our February issue contained a poem dedicated to D. L. Moody and entitled, "A Man Who Let His Light Shine," to which we added "Author unknown." We are now pleased to be able to state that it was written by Mr. Frank L. Duley, of East Northfield, and that it originally appeared in "The Record of Christian Work." We had copied it from another periodical in which no author's name was given.

THE EMPTY TOMB

This title recalls the sentence heard last year from a simple, uncultured evangelist: "Why was the stone rolled away from the tomb? Was it to let the Lord Jesus out? No. It was not necessary to open any doors to set the Lord Jesus free, for it was not possible that He should be holden of it. He who could pass through the locked doors of the upper room could pass out of the sealed sepulcher. Why then was the stone rolled away? Dear friends, it was that the disciples might look in and see that the tomb was empty. The stone was not rolled away for Him but for us!"

Does not this fact (for fact it is, if witnesses can establish a fact) cut at the root of all theories of a spiritual resurrection? For a spiritual resurrection and a spiritual apparition could have taken place and been witnessed by many, but that would not have been a sign of resurrection from among the dead, nor would that have proved our Lord to be the first fruits of them that slept. The empty tomb is our witness, the stone rolled away is the keystone of our faith. The proof is priceless, because it is so simple. It can be understood by a child. This very morning a little girl of five, rejoicing over her Easter eggs, was asked the question, "Why was the stone rolled away? Was it to let Jesus go free?" and she replied, with intense conviction: "No, it was that the disciples might look in and see He wasn't there."—"Life of Faith."

I am quite sure that the root of ninety-ninths of the heresies that have ever afflicted the Christian church, and that are the cause of the weakness of so much popular Christianity, is none other than the failure adequately to recognize the universality and the gravity of the fact of transgression. If a word comes to you that calls itself God's message, and does not start with man's sin, nor put in the forefront of its utterance the way by which the dominion of that sin in your own heart can be broken, and the penalties of that sin in your present and future life can be swept away, it is condemned ipso facto, it is not a gospel from God, nor is it fit for man.—J. P. Mantle.

Editorial Honesty

Importance of the Resurrection of Christ

By Rev. H. M. Parsons, D. D.*

THIS is a fact of direct revelation. The perplexity, astonishment and terror of the disciples at the sepulcher indicate the impossibility of the knowledge of the resurrection of the dead, except by revelation from God. So engrossed were the disciples with their Lord when alive, that they failed to understand or to remember His own words to them,—“the third day he shall rise again”—uttered a few days before His death. His crucifixion appalled them. His death destroyed all their hope. They lost all heart when “he gave up the ghost.”

We all accept the fact of the resurrection of Christ from the dead. It is a part of the confession of the church. But are Christians really aware of its meaning? Is the longing of Paul prevalent today—“to know him and the power of his resurrection?” Do the teaching and preaching of the church emphasize Jesus and the resurrection today, as in the primitive church? Does the resurrection of Jesus impress us with the sense of His presence now, alive from the dead, as it did the early prophets and teachers of the church, and do similar results on the church and on believers follow its proclamation? Is the fact of a living and present Christ the conscious testimony believers give to those around them in the world?

I am sure these questions arise in our minds, when we read of the power at Pentecost, which turned, in every argument, upon the certainty that He who was dead, was alive again and declared to be the Son of God, by that miraculous act of the Holy Spirit. And also from the repeated evidence, that the power manifested in raising Christ from the dead, was, and is, the only power that can cause attention to the voice of God, which awakens dead sinners.

The same is true in all Christian work. Resurrection power is as necessary to raise money for Christ, as to raise the dead. The example of the early church proves this. It was when they were giving their evidence of the resurrection of Christ from the dead, that the power of self-consecration came so strangely on the disciples, that they yielded all their possessions to the Holy Spirit for His use. And the attempt to evade this consecration, was significantly stamped as “lying to the Holy Ghost” and lying “to God.”

We desire to point out the essential importance of this truth at the present time, because it is the basis of all true religion. It is the distinctive evidence that Christianity is the only religion in the world—in the strictness of that term. False religions there are, and many of them, but not one can “bind-back” (the literal meaning of religion “re-ligo,”) a lost sinner to his God and Saviour. Not one of the ethnic religions can bring this credential for its claim, that God became the Redeemer of sinners, by His self-sacrifice on the Cross and resurrection from the grave, and that to do this, He became incarnate. We have so commonly accepted the historic truth of the resurrection, that we are in danger of forgetting the indubitable evidence upon which it rests, and by which it is established as a fact. It is well to review these briefly to see their bearing upon the spiritual truths that rest upon them.

The Resurrection Established by Unimpeachable Witness

1. The evidence that Christ, who was dead, revived and rose from the grave, and “is alive again forever more,” is established by unimpeachable witnesses. We say “unimpeachable” because if ever this fact could be denied, it must have been at its first alleged occurrence, and acceptance in the world. At that time, history apart from the scriptural record, assures us of the hostility of the Jews to Jesus, and of contempt felt for Him by the pagan rulers of the land. The first declaration was made by two angelic witnesses to those who loved Him, and sought to manifest their love by the grateful tribute of His anointing. “They said unto them, Why seek ye the living among the dead? He is not here, but is risen; remember how he spake unto you, when he was yet in Galilee, saying, The Son of man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men, and be crucified, and the third day rise again. And they remembered his words." (Luke 24:5-8.)

The next attestation comes from those who were the sworn foes of the Lord, the watchmen, who were so stirred by the earthquake that they could only tell the astounding news, and then accept the bribe which would convict and sentence them to death, if known to their officers. The evidence was so unimpeachable, that the purchased lie had no power to stand against it. "And behold there was a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow. And for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men." (Matt. 28:2-4.) These witnesses are supported by the testimony of our Lord Himself, after His resurrection. "He appeared unto many after his resurrection, who were witnesses of what he did, both in the land of the Jews and at Jerusalem." Many more testimonies might be cited to the same effect, and the recurrence of testimony concerning the resurrection of Jesus from the grave, is proof of the great value set upon it by the Holy Spirit, in convincing and converting sinners, as well as encouraging and establishing believers in their most holy faith.

Bearing of the Fact on the Divine Nature and Character of Christ

2. The bearing of this fact upon the divine nature and character of Christ, is often asserted by those commissioned to spread the gospel. In the epistle to the Romans, the apostle makes this the foundation of his argument, and the central authority for his ministry. "The gospel of God, concerning His Son, Jesus Christ our Lord, which was made of the seed of David according to the flesh and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead—by whom we have received grace and apostleship, for obedience to the faith among all nations for his name" (Rom. 1:4, 5.). The great contention of this apostle in all his missionary trips, was that this Jesus who was slain, was alive again, and by that fact, He is the Son of God. He confirmed this by quotations from Abraham and Moses and David, in whom they believed. For this testimony He was beaten, and bruised and banished. Similar testimony as to the deity of Christ, is also found in the words of the Holy Ghost, by Peter and John. The epistles of John all assume the heavenly places where Christ now is, as the abode of all who know Him through the Holy Spirit. The Lord's own words to the faithful disciple in the final revelation are: "I am the first and the last, and the Living One: and I was dead, and behold I am alive forever more, and I have the keys of death and of Hades." (Rev. 1:18, R. V.). Thus the nature and character of Jesus Christ as Son of God, for apprehension by the mind and heart, rest upon this accredited fact of the New Testament.

The Truth of Christianity Rests on This Fact

3. The evidence of the truth of Christianity rests on this solid foundation. This doctrine is classed by Paul among the essential verities of faith delivered to him by the Spirit from whom he derived not only the supernatural truths, but also the very words in which he wrote and preached them. As he declared to the Corinthians (1 Cor. 2:13) "which things" (those which he received of God) "also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth."

The apostle rests the whole Christian system upon this one truth. "And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain; and your faith is also vain, ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ we are of all men most miserable" (1 Cor. 15:14, 16-19.). And in the introduction to this convincing argument, he announces the gospel which he preached—which they received—and "wherein ye stand." He gives the two cardinal truths—the death and resurrection of Christ. He rests his authority upon the sacred writings; "according to the Scriptures," he attaches by the direction of the Holy Spirit to each one, as an infallible credential. He then marshals the witnesses of the fact, and constructs upon this impregnable basis, the unanswerable argument we have before recited.

Justification Rests on This Fact

4. Another vital truth—the justification of the believer—rests upon the resurrection of Christ, and verifies the importance of that doctrine to practical, personal life. The Cross with its terrible accompaniments, was adopted to increase the darkness, which shrouded the first disciples. They thought, when he was alive, of speedy deliverance from eternal and national bondage. When He died, their hope died. But He was delivered for our offenses—the just for the unjust, that we might have all condemnation removed. Something more was needed under righteous law. Positive obedience must be rendered—perfect righteousness alone could stand in the presence of God. Before a sinner can stand in holiness before God, he must be so made or accounted just, that a perfect God can receive him, and find no flaw in him. Not one of the sons of Adam could endure this test. Some one must be found as a Daysman. Some one to place the hand on each, and satisfy infinite justice, on the one hand, while covering infinite sin with the other. "He was raised again for our justification." To make us before the tribunal of God, free from condemnation, and then to impute to us (which God arranged and allowed) His own perfect righteousness, for all who accept Him by faith in this office. Thus the believer can have assurance of acceptance, only in resting upon this superlative fact of the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the grave.

The Resurrection and Our Bodies

5. This resurrection has to do with our bodies. Salvation in this respect, we are told by Peter, is reserved in heaven, waiting to be revealed in these last days. It also meets the wants of those in mortal bodies, when Jesus is manifested a second time for their translation. The relation of the Holy Spirit to the resurrection of Christ is such as to show the important sense in which this truth embraces the action of the Holy Comforter in our hearts. His office is thus stated in Romans 8:11. "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead, shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." The "mortal" body is not the dead body. Therefore the power of the Spirit in the resurrection of Christ is thus guaranteed for the change of the living body of the believer, in the day of His coming for His saints, and transferring both the risen and changed members of His body, to His immediate presence in the heavenlies.

6. The resurrection of all the dead is another revealed truth connected with Christ the first fruits (1 Cor. 15:21, 22). "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive."

Resurrection and the Lord's Second Coming

7. The hope of the Lord's second coming is also intimately connected with His resurrection. If the power of His resurrection were known by the believer, the longing of every heart would be what it was in the primitive church, and the world would have been evangelized centuries ago. The Roman heresy exalted death in place of the reappearing of the Lord. That heresy still inheres in the minds of the church, and stifles the obedience of faith. The beloved apostle states this connection under the inspiring Spirit, when he writes in 1 John 3:2, 3, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be;

but we know, that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure." This is the great need of the church today, this consecration under the Spirit. This separation to Christ from everything else is the secret of spiritual resurrection which presses on the literal obedience to the last command.

Resurrection and God's Power in Us Now

8. The exceeding greatness of God's power in us now, is vitally connected with the resurrection of Christ. That wonderful prayer of Ephesians, first chapter, for power in us at this present time, reveals its source and manifestation. "And what is the exceeding greatness of his power, to usward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ, when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand in the heavenly places." (Verses 19, 20). This fits the position of the church in that Epistle. Already by faith risen with Christ, and acquainted with the heavenly scenery. This separation of heart, in fellowship with the risen one, would soon manifest the separated life. Accordingly this truth will emphasize in our hearts, when appropriated by faith, just what it did in Paul's heart and life,—an intense desire: (1)—To know the power of His resurrection. This is not an acquisition, from a discovery through human reasoning, or study or resolution. It is simply and only a revelation from the Holy Spirit received by faith. Thus it becomes an abiding and increasing gift. (2) This experience includes a conviction and conscious sense of the personal presence of God. (3) Thus abiding in him the believer is constantly purifying himself, as Christ is pure.

A LAST YEAR

Not long before his death, Mr. Spurgeon sent to his faithful congregation at the Metropolitan Tabernacle this message "There will come a last year to each of us, therefore let each one say to himself, Is this my last? Dear friends, are we ready to see the curtain rise upon eternity? Are we prepared to hear the midnight cry and to enter into the marriage supper? The judgment and all that will follow upon it are most surely the heritage of every living man; blessed are they who, by faith in Jesus, are able to face the bar of God without a thought of terror. If we live to be counted among the oldest inhabitants, we must depart at last. There must be an end, and the voice must be heard, 'Thus saith the Lord . . . this year thou shalt die.' So many have gone before us, and are going every hour, that no man should need any other memento mori."

The Grave

By Rev. F. W. Pitt, London, England

Roman guards, their vigils keeping,
At the grave of Jesus sleeping,
Angel bands, their songs abating,
God upon His throne a-waiting.

'Twas not Christ alone in prison;
Every beatific vision,
Every hope of life and pardon
Lay in that sepulchral garden.

Hopes by Israel long forsaken
Jesus on Himself had taken.
When His little flock was scattered
In the grave those hopes lay shattered.

Promises in sacred story,
Flashes of the Kingdom's glory,
Life immortal, fondly cherished,
Came to nought if He had perished.

Men that He had gathered to Him,
Trusted Him till Pilate slew Him;
Then their faith that oft had stumbled,
In the dust of death lay humbled.

All seemed lost—then God's anointed,
Waiting for the time appointed,
While no human eye beheld Him,
Overthrew the powers that held Him.

Vain the stone, though Pilate sealed it,
Vain the sentence—Heaven repealed it;
Vain the power that crucified Him,
God was near Who justified Him.

When the sun set, hope had vanished;
When the day dawned, death was banished,
In the silent darkness lying,
Jesus conquered death by dying.

Though the bands of death enclosed Him,
Though the powers of Hell opposed Him,
Though He crossed the icy portal,
He arose to life immortal.

'Twas not Christ alone had risen,
Spirits long confined in prison
Found at last emancipation,
In a perfected salvation.

Light broke from that silent mystery,
To transfigure human history;
Life and hope have changed their center,
Since the Lord that grave did enter.

Then the topstone of perfection,
Was hewn out in resurrection,
When He rose, the vision splendid,
Down from Heaven and God descended.

European War—1914

By I. A. MacDonald

Poor Europe, thou dost hang thy head in shame,
Thy wasted pride of civilization fled,
Thy schools of learning only so in name,
Thy sons are fighting, those that have not bled.

O what a change occurs in little time!
It seems but days when race did mix with race.
They were as brothers on the Thames or Rhine,
And now they fight each other face to face.

What cause has ever German soldier 'gainst the Frank?
Or British private with his German friend?
There is no feeling there of ill or hatred rank,
That one against the other all his strength must lend.

Perhaps it is the will of Him, whose reign
Is o'er the rulers of this world of ours,
That they may see their boasting is but vain,
And that His strength far above all theirs does tower.

How full of thanks the hearts of those dwell
Within the borders of this land of peace!
To Him who rules the land and waves as well,
We lift our prayers that this great war may cease,

And that this land of ours, in peace content,
May move on upward in all nations' sight;
Proving to all what to the world is meant
By Christian land, a land that stands for right.

The Course And End of This Age

By Rev. C. I. Scofield, D. D.

[Through the enterprise of "The Dallas (Tex.) Morning News," we are able to supplement the previous series of sermons by Dr. Scofield on "The Inner Life," by another on "Great Prophetic Themes," of which this on "The Course and End of This Age," is the first. Those to follow in successive issues are "The Church Past, Present and Future," "Three Coming Persons" and "The Kingdom of Heaven."—Editors.]

REFERRING briefly to the preceding ages or dispensations from innocence to law, from Adam to Moses, and defining a dispensation as a period of time during which God was testing man in definite ways to see if he could justify him, the present age is that of grace. Man, condemned by God's law, is now offered forgiveness, a new birth, and a place in the family of God, simply through faith in Jesus Christ. In another sense it may be called the church age, since all who receive Jesus Christ as Saviour and Lord, are united to Him through the operation of the Holy Spirit, thus becoming living members of the church, which is His body. The church is the "ecclesia," the "called out" assembly. The test of man now is not whether he can work out righteousness, but whether he will accept righteousness through Jesus Christ. It is the age of grace.

Predictions of Present Age

The Bible describes prophetically the whole course and end of this present age of grace.

Politically, the present age falls within the extended period of time called by our Lord "The times of the Gentiles," during which the earth is under the government of the Gentile world powers. That whole period is covered by two great prophecies in the Old Testament, the second and seventh chapters of Daniel. It began with the Babylon captivity of Israel, and the sign of its continuance is that "Jerusalem is trodden under the foot of the Gentiles."—Luke 21:24.

Briefly, Daniel's picture is of four successive world empires: Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, Rome. The latter is seen divided, first into two parts and then into many.

A Time of War

Jesus Christ appeared under the fourth empire, before the division began. Looking forward from His day, He described the time yet remaining of Gentile world sway, as characterized by "wars and rumors or wars," by conflicts between nations, famines, pestilences and earthquakes. There is no hint of peace as a world condition. In Daniel's phrase "To the end, wars and desolations are determined."

So it has been. There has always been talk of peace, but it has never lasted long. The nineteenth century was the bloodiest in human history. Armaments are increasing with astonishing rapidity, and unprecedented expenditure.

Our own Republic in a time of profound peace has increased her annual war expenditures from $51,000,000 eight years ago, to $185,000,000 last year. The national world system was founded by force and greed, and rests upon force.

Religiously, this age, beginning with the crucifixion and resurrection of Christ, is the age of grace. Salvation is freely offered to all without money and without price. Instead of the righteousness of works, as under the preceding age of law, grace offers perfect and eternal salvation through faith in Jesus Christ.

The Age of Grace and the Church

The result of this offer has been the calling into being of the Christian church. It is the age of grace and the church age.

What has prophecy to say of the age religiously? Two great parables in Matthew thirteen, the parables of the wheat and tares, and of the net, give the answer in part. In the visible church the sphere of profession, the wheat of God, the children of the kingdom are associated with tares, and this is to continue, as our Lord expressly says, to the end of the age. A converted world is not possible then, within this age. Other New Testament prophecies speak of apostasy from the faith, growing coldness and worldliness. But this it must be remembered is a picture of the professing church. Within it is the true church composed of true believers in Jesus Christ. These are to be gathered out, for against the true church the gates of hell can not prevail.

Foreview of the End

What, now, is the foreview of the end time of this age? Politically the age ends in the rise to power of that being called by Daniel the "little horn," and by John in the Revelation, "the beast out of the sea." In him humanity has at once its supreme genius and its supreme scourge and despot. He will receive honors as deity, and his relentless hand will be laid upon every occupation and avocation of man. In the zenith of his power and glory he will be smitten by God through the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ. His reign is called "the great tribulation."

Religiously the first event in the end of the age will be the taking away of the true church. "The Lord Himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first, then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord." (1 Thess. 4:14-16.)

The mass of mere professors pass on into "the great tribulation." That also is a time when grace still seeks the lost, and out of its awful scenes "a multitude that no man can number" (Rev. 7:1-15), will be saved.

Earth's Golden Age

If that were the last word of prophecy the future would be dark indeed. Thank God, earth's golden age lies beyond the welter of bloodshed and anguish which comes to the unrepentant as the age ends. For this age is followed by the kingdom age of righteousness and peace, when at last all latent powers of nature and of man shall vindicate the goodness and wisdom of God.

The Three "Untils" of Israel's Future Glory

By Rev. George E. Guille, Bible Teacher, Extension Department, The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

THREE times in the New Testament does the word "until" occur in connection with the future of Israel: In Matthew 23:39, "Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord"; in Luke 21:24, "And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled"; and in Romans 11:25, "Blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in."

This word "until" thus stands between the present desolation of God's chosen people, and the restoration of themselves; their city; and their sanctuary.

It is with these three things that Gabriel's prophecy of the seventy weeks, recorded in Daniel, has to do. It was in answer to Daniel's prayer, the subjects of which were "thy people" (v. 15), "thy city Jerusalem" (v. 16), and "thy sanctuary" (v. 17), that that prophecy was given. It is as follows: "Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy,"—the "most Holy" being the inner sanctuary of a new temple yet to be erected in Jerusalem. These seventy sevens of years would elapse before the full blessing of Israel in millennial glory could be realized.

The long lapse of unreckoned time between the sixty-ninth and the seventieth of these weeks—the period beginning with the Cross and ending with the rapture of the church—has been dwelt upon by others in this conference, and I need not speak of it here. The three-fold prophecy is mentioned merely as an example of the absolute harmony of all Scripture.

We shall consider these three "untils," not in their chronological order but, in the order of Gabriel's prophecy.

I. The People

The first Scripture, therefore, is Romans 11:25, "For I would not brethren, that ye should be ignorant of this mystery, lest ye should be wise in your own conceits: that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in."

"The fulness of the Gentiles" must be distinguished from "the times of the Gentiles", the former refers to a company, the latter to a period of time. The fulness of the Gentiles is the church, the elect people whom God is taking out from among the Gentiles,—the Gentile bride for the true Joseph rejected by His brethren. In this present age—this parenthesis between the sixty-ninth and the seventieth "weeks" of Gabriel—God has one purpose. This purpose is not the conversion of the world, but is declared, in Acts 15:14, to be the taking "out from among the Gentiles of a people for his name." The "fulness" is the full number, and the coming in of that fulness is the rapture of the church to meet the Lord in the air (1 Thess. 4:13-18).

The sentence of blindness, here mentioned by the apostle, was pronounced in the sixth chapter of Isaiah, at the time of Isaiah's vision of the glory of the Lord: "In the year that King Uzziah died, I saw also the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up and his train filled the temple. Above it stood the seraphims: * * * And one cried unto another, and said Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory" (Isa. 6:1-3). Was it? No. But it is the style of prophecy to speak of future events in the present tense, and the apostle John, in quoting the sentence of blindness (in explanation of Israel's unbelief) which follows the vision, said, "These things said Isaiah, when he saw his (Christ's) glory, and spake of him" (John 12:37-41). He applies the vision to Christ, who is seen, in His coming glory, as the successor of all earthly kings. The message that goes forth to Israel, in connection with that vision, is no message of salvation and comfort but rather, "Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes; lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert and be healed" (Isa. 6:9, 10). The sentence of blindness was quoted by the Lord in Matthew 13:13-15, in justification of His uttering the mysteries of the kingdom in parables. It was quoted again by John, as already stated above. It was quoted by Paul, in Acts 28:25-27, when, for the last time the Jews came to hear his gospel, "and some believed not."

This blindness is not universal, it is "in part." In the same chapter (Rom. 11:5) the apostle speaks of "a remnant according to the election of grace," "at this present time," as, alone having obtained that which Israel seeketh for, "and the rest were blinded" (v. 7).—Jews have been converted to Christ ever since Pentecost, and all such compose "the remnant according to the election of grace."

Neither is this blindness permanent, for if the apostle says, "Even unto this day, when Moses is read, the vail is upon their heart," he adds, "Nevertheless when it (i.e. the heart of Israel) shall turn to the Lord, the vail shall be taken away" (2 Cor. 3:14-16).

Their blindness remains only until the coming of the Lord, for then shall the fulness of the Gentiles come in, and the Jew be taken up once more (Acts 15:14-17). "The Redeemer shall come out of Sion and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob" (Rom. 11:26).

II. The City

The second "until," in the order of Gabriel's prophecy, has to do with the Holy City, and occurs in that portion of the Olivet discourse,—recorded only by Luke (21:20-24), in which the Lord predicted the then impending destruction of Jerusalem. "And they shall fall by the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations: and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21:24). In spite of the many attempts to bring it to nought during the centuries since the destruction of the city, A.D. 70, the Lord's words have remained true, and that "until" still stands in the way of Jerusalem's glory, although 50,000 Jews are living there today. This destruction of the city, foretold by the Lord, is the same as that foretold by Gabriel as taking place after the sixty-ninth week.

"The times of the Gentiles" are a definite, though long period of time. The book of Daniel is their pre-written history, given mainly in the visions of Nebuchadnezzar and Daniel in chapters 2 and 7, respectively; the four intervening chapters recording events which transpired during the premiership of Daniel, and portraying the moral features of the times of Gentiles, with especial reference to their end. Those four chapters adumbrate the last days of the times of the Gentiles. Gabriel's seventieth week is the last seven years of Gentile times, and his "coming prince" (chap. 9:26) is identical with the little horn of Daniel's vision (chap. 7).

The times of the Gentiles began with the overthrow of Jerusalem and the carrying of the people captive to Babylon. Three times Nebuchadnezzar invaded the land from 606 to 587 B. C., the third time completing its subjugation, and burning the temple. This last invasion completed the consolidation of the Babylonian Empire.

At this time Ezekiel, who had been taken captive at the first invasion, had his vision of the glory leaving the temple. Since that day the glory has not returned. At the same time, God's title in Scripture was changed. Till then He was "The Lord God of all the earth," since then "The God of heaven."

In the second year of his reign, Nebuchadnezzar's slumber was disturbed by a vision. It was a magnificent figure of a man, with head of gold, breast and arms of silver, belly and thighs of brass, legs and feet of iron, and the toes of iron mingled with clay. A stone cut out of the mountain without hands smote the image upon its ten toes, utterly demolishing it; and the stone became a great mountain and filled the whole earth. The image Daniel declared to represent the succession of four great world powers, beginning with the Babylonian and ending with the Roman. The ten toes, he says, are ten kings. Now, the Roman Empire has never existed in the form represented by the ten toes. The different governments of Southern Europe are but the fragments of imperial Rome. The vision passes over this church age and presents the form of world-power at the time of the end. This is clear from many other Scriptures which we cannot consider now.

The smiting stone in interpreted as the Kingdom which the God of heaven shall set up, upon the overthrow of Gentile world-power. That sudden violent smiting is the figure of judgment and destruction, and these, we find elsewhere, are the means of bringing Gentilism to an end. Zechariah 12, Revelation 16 and Revelation 19 show us the armies of the nations gathered under the leadership of the beast (the last imperial head of world-power), against Jerusalem. The second Psalm describes their wicked counsels. The besieging armies, whose advance upon Jerusalem is vividly described in Isaiah 10:28-32, turn back (in alarm over the fulfilment of Matthew 24:29) to Armageddon, when heaven suddenly opens and the "King of kings" comes forth and destroys them, as described in Revelation 19:11-21. This destruction of the armies of the nations is the smiting of the stone. It is this that brings the times of the Gentiles to an end, and delivers Jerusalem. And thus, as the blindness of the people is removed by the Lord's return, so the desolation of the city ends with the same event.

III. The Temple

The Lord's prediction, containing the remaining "until" is prefaced by the statement, "Your house is left unto you desolate." In the beginning of His ministry, the temple was "My Father's house",—now that He is rejected it is "your house" left desolate, "for I say unto you, Ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" (Matt. 23:39). Thus, by this third "until," He connects His return with the temple. These words "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord" are a quotation from Psalm 118, where they are again connected with the temple, for the words which follow, in the same verse (26) are, "We have blessed you out of the house of the Lord." "At the standpoint of the Psalm, Antichrist has come in his own name, and has been received (John 5:43); but a remnant wrought upon by divine grace has been turned to God; and in these is found the revival of the national life. Theirs is the cry, 'Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord, and out of the house of Jehovah, the sign of restored favor—they are saluted with blessing' ("Numerical Bible").

Now, if this "until" of our Lord means anything, it means that there is a day coming when Jerusalem shall utter these words of salutation to Him, when He comes a second time. Zechariah's prophecy (chap. 12) connects this last "until" with the siege and deliverance of Jerusalem. In the "time of Jacob's trouble"—that hour of deepest distress—"the spirit of grace and of supplications" will be poured upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem and upon the house of David, when heaven shall suddenly open, and "they shall look on me whom they have pierced," finding that their welcome Messiah is "this same Jesus" whom they nailed to the Cross. All this was prefigured in the story of Joseph and his brethren. Forced by a famine into Egypt they find their brother, with a Gentile wife, upon the throne of the land but they do not know him. The reconciliation turns upon Benjamin. When Rachel was dying she called her new-born son Benoni, "son of my sorrow," but Jacob called him Benjamin, "son of my right hand." And both names have become a part of Holy Scripture. Benjamin, whom his brethren all love, represents the ideal Messiah of Israel, the exalted One for whom they are waiting, but Benjamin was first Benoni, and this they are yet to learn. Now Joseph, the true Messiah typically, brings them to himself by separating them from their ideal—Benjamin; in that time of famine and suffering while Judah was on his knees before Joseph pleading for Benjamin, Joseph reveals himself to them, and they find that their true deliverer is the brother whom they have rejected. So shall it be with Judah's descendants in the days of their awful affliction. "In their affliction they will seek me early" (Hos. 5:15), and while crying out in their anguish for the Messiah, He will appear as the One whom they pierced, and they will see that "the son of my right hand" was first "the son of my sorrow," that the glorious, reigning Messiah was first a "man of sorrows."

The fulfilment of these "untils" is not far distant, "for yet a little while (how short), and he that shall come will come and not tarry." Courage, O Israel! "The Lord hath chosen thee and shall yet have mercy upon thee." "For a small moment have I forsaken thee, but with great mercies will I gather thee." "In a little wrath I hid my face from thee, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer."

The Christian, the Church, the Conscience

By Rev. T. W. Callaway

[The first of a series of two sermons by the pastor of the First Baptist Church, Dublin, Ga., in answer to a criticism of the church covenant forbidding its members to indulge in cards, theaters and dancing, copied from the Dublin daily paper. The second in the series will appear in our next issue.—Editors.]

WE ARE dividing our morning and evening message into two divisions. This morning our subject shall be, "The Christian, the Church, the Conscience." Tonight, "The Cards, the Theater, the Dance."

We are to discuss these subjects from God's standpoint, not the vagaries of man.

I. What is a Christian?

Answering from God's Word, we say he is one who accepts Christ, and who thus has received a new heart and a new spirit. "A new heart also I will give you, and a new spirit will I put within you" (Ezek. 36:26). "Except a man be born again (from above) he cannot see the kingdom of God" (John 3:3). "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life" (1 John 5:11). "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God" (Col. 3:3).

Hence it is manifest that, in regeneration, the Christ-life is imparted to the believer, and, by virtue of this impartation, he is a child of God (Gal. 3:26). The new desires, affections, and needs that have been awakened in him, are so many evidences that a new nature has been given.

After the new birth, the believer finds himself a dual being having what the Scriptures call "the old man" and "the new man," both comprehended under a single consciousness. (Rom. 7:15-24.) The struggle between these two natures will continue, until, through the victory over the "old man" the "new man" is set free. If the "old man" predominate, then the believer is in a backslidden condition. Spiritual liberty of conscience only comes as the Christian is set free from the power of sin.

The word "conversion" means a "turning about," the turning from one mode of life to another. It is both inward and outward; inward when one turns from sin to righteousness, so that he hates sin and loves purity and holiness; and outward, when one openly and habitually leaves the path of worldliness, vice, and immorality, and takes up the service of Christ. Then, my friends, it is evident that if one was ever converted he or she could no longer remain at the table of worldliness and sin, after having once eaten with the King in salvation, without some compunction of conscience. Certainly they have no biblical assurance of salvation.

Judging from the Bible standard, and the lack of the "fruits of the spirit" in the lives of church members, we are forced to conclude that there are scores of them on the church rolls who have never "passed from death unto life." It is such professors and not possessors that bring criticisms upon the church of the living God.

But one may say, "Does not being a Christian simply consist in replying affirmatively to two questions: 'Do you believe that Christ died for you?' 'Do you accept His salvation and desire to become a member of His church?'" Any student of the Word knows that there is a historical faith and a saving faith. One may have the former and be lost. "The demons believe and tremble" (Jas. 2:19.)

The world has many educated, altruistic and moral people, who have a historical faith about Jesus, but no saving faith in Him. There are many well-meaning philanthropists and humanitarians who think that Christianity consists only in the overthrow of selfishness; who will praise unstintedly the principle of the Golden Rule, and yet reject the deity of Jesus Christ, His Word as the inspired Word of God, and Him as a personal Saviour. They mistake reformation for regeneration.

Christianity is not alone the spirit of unselfishness, but it is the "denying of self," discipleship, self-abnegation. (Mark 8:34.) Christianity helps to make one educated, cultured, moral, etc., but these things do not make Christianity. Judas, outwardly, had these characteristics. Many a church worker, we fear, some day will find that there has been no inward change wrought in his life, but shall appear before the Judge saying, "Lord, Lord, have I not in thy name done many wonderful works?" "And then will he profess unto them, I never knew you." Working for God, before He has done a work in you, amounts to nothing.

To sum it all up, a Christian is one who has saving faith in Jesus Christ, which means the dedication of the mind to think for God, the heart to love God, and the will to act for God. The assurance that such is a Christian is found: (1.) By the fruits of the Spirit in the life (Gal. 5:22-23). (2.) Love for the brethren (1 John 3:14). (3.) Separation from worldliness (James 1:27; 2 Cor. 6:15). (4.) "Walking in newness of life" (Rom. 6:4; 8:4). (5.) Victory over the flesh (Gal. 5:19-24). (6.) Seeking not the pleasures of the world (1 Tim. 5:6). (7.) Denying selfish gratifications (Mark 8:34).

II. What is the Church?

The Church (Gr. "ecclesia," the-called-out) is mentioned in a two-fold sense.

1. It is used to denote the whole company of the saved. (Eph. 1:22-25; Col. 1:8. Heb. 12:23.)

It is through the "new birth" that one becomes a member of this church; none others are such, or can be.

2. The use of the word "ecclesia" is seen in its application to a local congregation of Christians. It is the second use of the word that we wish to discuss just now.

To the Baptists, the Scriptures clearly teach that the local church is independent of every other kindred body of believers, and that the only bond of union between such bodies is that of fellowship and co-operation in the gospel. Hence, no other church in all the world has any jurisdiction over this Baptist church.

The definition of a local Baptist church, is a company of baptized believers who are drawn together by the Holy Spirit; having the Scriptures as their creed, the Holy Spirit as their leader, and Christ as their living Head; meeting together statedly for the purpose of edification of the members in knowledge and love, for the observance of the Lord's Supper, and the propagation of the pure gospel of Christ, so far as practicable, in all the world.

Such a local Baptist church has its "covenant" through which the members join in covenant together to do certain things, and refrain from others. These members become such of their own choice, and it is the divine order that every such member should be "a lively stone" in the building of God. (1 Pet. 2:5.) Therefore, the local church is not supposed to be simply an organization of good natured men and women.

The church is not a house of merchandise, a bureau of amusement, or a social club. None of these things are nominated in her joint high commission.

How would it comport with the character of the early Christians to read in one of Paul's epistles a suggestion that the saints in Corinth get up some entertainment of the dance, theater, and cards, in order to hold its young people? Or, an exhortation to Lydia to stir the godly women of Phillippi to get up a grand ball, a bridge game, or a merry-widow opera, in order to save the youth of the land?

Think of the church of the living God peddling out "fun" to the world! Or, getting up variety shows, etc., to replenish her membership! How belittling to the church, how dishonoring to God, and how contemptible even in the eyes of the thinking world! No consecrated Christian can ask God's blessing upon such practices, and such a prayer would be as "sounding brass" in the ears of the Lord.

And further, when church members are truly converted, there will be no need of calling in the flirts, and fops, and city loafers, to dicker over card tables, the "tango," and such like, in order to hold our young folk. If the church cannot live without dishonoring God, then let her die. If ministers cannot be supported without compromising with the world, then let them go into worldly business with their back-slidden members.

We grant that there are two or three northern churches within our knowledge that have gone so far into worldliness as to provide such places as dance halls, etc., in connection with their church buildings, but, does that make it right? Do not forget that the Bible clearly shows that the Devil has his churches as well as ministers on the earth, and these are "ministers of righteousness" too. (Rev. 3:9 and 2 Cor. 11:14-15.)

You professing Christians, who have despised the narrow way of the church, because you have esteemed it a day of "small things," what are you going to do when God places up against your life the straight plumbline of faith? (Matt. 7:22, 23.) When the conscientious and strenuous faith of the church is relaxed, God can do no mighty works through her, and she can have but little influence on the world. (2 Tim. 4:1-4.) Show me a worldly church that is a soul-saving institution. Show me a worldly preacher that is a soul-winner.

The fundamental mission of the church, then, according to the New Testament standard, is to: (1) Gather in the new born souls (Acts 14:23). (2) Be a separate people (Gal 5:17). (3) Free from worldly entanglements (1 John 2:15; 2 Tim. 2:4). (4) Bible as "rule of faith and practice" (2 Tim. 4:2). (5) Have no fellowship with unbelievers (Eph. 5:11). (6) Looking for her expectant bridegroom (1 Thess. 4:13-18). (7.) Preaching the gospel to all the world (Matt. 28:19-20).

III. What is the Conscience?

Here are some definitions of "conscience":

1. "The personal, ever vigilant eye, before whom every imagination, thought and act of the individual within whom it dwells, is held up to censure or praise."

2. "The inner consciousness which either approves or pains according as the individual follows or forsakes his own best judgment."

3. "The voice God has placed within the citadel of each life to cry aloud against every conscious encroachment of evil, and to agonize over every act of sinning."

We are going to see from God's Word, that "conscience" is not an infallible guide; not even a "good conscience." Hence when one says, "My conscience does not worry me," that does not prove the trustworthiness of it. Paul, speaking in his own defense and his early persecution of the Christians, says, "I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day" (Acts 23:1). Paul had a "good conscience" when aiding in stoning Stephen. In writing to the young Timothy Paul says, "God, whom I serve from my forefathers with pure conscience" (2 Tim. 1:3).

Paul was once a great sinner, with a good, that is, a clear, conscience. Hence, the necessity of our having an enlightened mind, and knowledge of the truth. When Paul heard of Jesus and knew the truth, his conscience lashed him as the chiefest of sinners (1 Tim. 1:15). An uneasy conscience is the hardest pillow. Conscience never hurts save when the individual acts contrary to his own best judgment.

Some will say, "I see no sin in dancing, cards, theater going, etc." That alone does not make it right. Such prodigality soon brings poverty to a spiritual conscience. One may breathe impure air unconsciously, and drink bad water with a good conscience. One may sow tares with a good conscience, thinking he is sowing wheat. The heathen worship idols with a good conscience. It is a fact, however, that when the conscience of some people is changed against their will, they are "of the same opinion still"; hence conscience becomes hard-heartedness.

"Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As, to be hated, needs but to be seen;
But seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

Convicting Conscience

We are told of a convicting conscience in John 8:9. Primarily, this is the work of the Spirit of God upon a sinful heart. Remember, however, that conviction of conscience does not always lead to true repentance.

Judas had a convicting conscience, but he went and hanged himself. Balaam had a convicting conscience, but stifled it and went to his death. Saul had a convicting conscience, but he still returned to kill David.

"I said good-bye to my conscience,
Good-bye, for aye and aye,
And I pushed her hand off harshly,
And turned my face away.
And conscience, sorely wounded,
Returned not from that day."

"But the time came when my spirit
Grew weary of its pace;
And I said, 'Come back,' to conscience,
'For I long to see thy face';
But conscience said, 'I cannot'—
'Remorse is in my place.'"

Oh, friends, let us pray for a convicting conscience, the forth-shining presence of Jesus, which convinces the mind and awakens the conscience—a conscience that is satisfied and restful. With sins forgiven and justification accepted.

ONE DAY AT A TIME

One day at a time! That's all it can be;
No faster than that is the hardest fate;
And days have their limits, however we Begin them too early and stretch them late.

One day at a time! Every heart that aches Knows only too well how long that can seem;

But it's never today which the spirit breaks;
It's the darkened future without a gleam.

One day at a time! A burden too great
To be borne for two can be borne for one;
Who knows what will enter tomorrow's gate?
While yet we are speaking all may be done.

One day at a time!—but a single day,
Whatever its load, whatever its length;
And there's a bit of precious Scripture to say
That according to each shall be his strength.

One day at a time!
It's a wholesome rhyme—
A good one to live by:
A day at a time.

The Sunday-school Teacher's Opportunities Outside The Sunday-school

By Alma F. Rader, A Student in The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

THERE is no vocation in the church more important than that of the Sunday-school teacher. The teacher's parish is not so widely extended as that of the minister, yet it is a parish in which are different homes, and different interests, and these cannot be reached and influenced for Christ in the short time allotted to the teacher on Sunday.

No other vocation wins the devotion and deep love of the pupils as that of the Sunday-school teacher, for they know and understand that she is not serving for any money remuneration, but only for Christ's sake. If the teacher truly loves them and the work, they are not long in detecting this.

The teacher must first of all, be real and genuine. Anything short of this is hypocrisy and the class will sooner or later become aware of it—"What you are speaks so loud I cannot hear what you say." But the real teacher who with Paul can say, "For to me to live is Christ," will have the devotion and love of her class and will win many or all of them to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Visiting the Home

To do this most effectively she must know the boys and girls in their homes. The home deals with life itself. The home forms habits, stimulates ideals, and determines choice. It is the duty of the Sunday-school teacher to find out whether or not the atmosphere of the home is moulding the character of the boy or girl for Christ.

The way into the home is already prepared as the Sunday-school teacher is usually upper-most in the mind and heart of the pupil, and a call from her is regarded in most homes as the event of the week. This call is not for the father or mother, although they may come in and welcome the teacher, but it should be for the one who is most upon the teacher's heart, and the most effective impression is made upon the pupil if the teacher and pupil can be alone.

Our pupils need saving. Fresh-faced, bright of eye, quick of motion, manly and womanly, from the most cultured homes, perchance, yet they need saving. It is hard to realize that they are only mockeries till they are transformed, enriched and vitalized by the indwelling Saviour. Now is the teacher's rare opportunity to present Jesus Christ to this waiting heart. O that every Sunday-school teacher could look deep into the soul of that boy or girl and see the vast possibilities wrapped up within, possibilities which only Christ can turn into realities! I read of a call by a Sunday-school teacher upon a young girl who had recently become a member of her class. The call was pleasant, but the teacher failed to speak to her waiting heart about Christ. She felt it would be wiser to wait until they should become better acquainted. Long afterward she learned that the girl was really longing to be spoken to upon the subject. That night the girl wrote in her diary, "My teacher came and went away, and never gave me the chance to tell her I wanted to be a Christian." The Sunday-school teacher is chosen to bear fruit, and the fruit is precious souls born anew into the kingdom of God.

At The Summer Camp

Another great opportunity open to the Sunday-school teacher in which to get into the life of the boy or girl is at a summer camp. All during the day the teacher enters into the play life of the pupils. She is one with them. If she is a lover of youth, a very essential thing, she will enter heartily in all of the good times. But the most precious time of all is at the close of the day when out under God's starry heavens, as they sit around the camp fire, she tells them of God's love and of Jesus Christ. Their hearts and minds are receptive to the things of God, and something is taking place in the heart of the boy or girl which will last throughout eternity.

After the preaching service on Sunday we ought to be on the lookout for a chance to speak with our pupils about their spiritual welfare. Someone may just be waiting to have a quiet talk with us. Perhaps something has been said in the sermon that has impressed her, and she is anxiously waiting for the teacher to invite her to walk home with her, if it is possible.

There are so many opportunities for personal soul-winning among our pupils outside the school, if only we are walking close to Him and seeking to be guided by His Holy Spirit.

Remember that to be a saved person and to be truly following Christ is no holiday pastime. It is not a light or trifling thing. Nay, it is a solemn as well as a blessed thing indeed.

The Hobson Amendment Criticised

By William A. Brubaker

ON PAGE 348 of the February number of "The Christian Workers Magazine" I find the following language in an editorial: "And we are trembling for our own nation also, whose legislators in Congress had an opportunity two months ago to make us a sober people so far as that desideratum could be brought about by enactment. But they turned it down, etc."

Permit me first to say that our legislators in Congress always have an opportunity to enact a law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of liquor. They need not wait for some member to introduce a constitutional amendment. The Congress of this nation can kill the liquor traffic whenever they care to do so.

But the criticism I make to the above language is that the Hobson amendment (and I take it that this editorial refers thereto) would not have destroyed the drink curse, but on the contrary would have fastened it more securely upon the people of this country than at present.

I give the author of that editorial the credit of believing that he never read the Hobson bill, or if he did, he gave it no thought. He probably read in the daily papers that Hobson had introduced a "prohibition amendment" and he supposed that it must be all right and in proper form because it was introduced by a good man and backed by other good men. But did you ever know that the Devil sometimes, yes, often uses "good men" to carry out his schemes? And the Devil did thus use good men to attempt to carry out his devilish purpose in this case.

Now, I am aware that that is a serious charge and if I cannot show you how the Hobson amendment was an attempt to use good men for a bad purpose, I must stand condemned of slandering good men. Bear in mind, I am not questioning the motives of the men behind the Hobson amendment, but I do question their judgment.

The Terms of the Amendment

The Hobson amendment read as follows: "The sale, manufacture for sale, importation for sale, transportation for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes in the United States and in all territory subject thereto and the exportation thereof, are forever prohibited."

Why the repetition of the words "for sale"? Why such a cumbersome form of expression? Why, if the amendment was designed to kill the liquor traffic, was it not put in this simple, direct form: "The manufacture, sale, transportation, exportation and importation of intoxicating liquor for beverage purposes, etc"?

Any one who understands the English language can readily see that the Hobson amendment would not prohibit the manufacture of liquor for personal use, nor its importation for personal use. Hobson, himself, so stated in his final speech just before the vote was taken. Do not take my word for that; get the Congressional Record for December 22 and read it therein for yourself, as I read it before making this statement.

Now what will be the practical effect of such a law? Certainly, if I may manufacture liquor for my own use, several of us may legally join in such manufacture. It is a principle of law that what one man may do by himself, any number of men may jointly do. An hundred, a thousand, any number of men may join in the manufacture of liquor for their personal use. Let us suppose that I own a brewery, capitalized at three hundred thousand dollars. When the Hobson bill is ratified, I offer to sell the property to three hundred thousand stockholders, each stockholder to pay $5.00 for one share and no stockholder to own more than one share; with the provision that beer will be furnished to stockholders at cost—no profit to any one. The stock is quickly subscribed and I make a profit of $1,200,000, less only the cost of advertising. When the Hobson bill goes into effect, "our brewery" is furnishing its product only to its owners and at cost—not a pint if it is "for sale." Of course, the cost may be heavily padded by enormous salaries to the managers, but that, too, is "legitimate." The product of "our brewery" is shipped to its owners all over the country, because, you notice, only the transportation "for sale" is prohibited by the Hobson amendment.

Its Defeat a Good Thing

Tell me, please, what in your judgment, would such an amendment be worth? Would it not open the way for all sorts of evasion and frauds and make the enforcement of the Hobson law exceedingly difficult? A "co-operative brewery" or distillery, or both, could thus be set up in every town of any size in America, unless prohibited by State law, and that is unlikely in many States. If any State should prohibit such manufacture, supplies can be shipped in to "owners" of stock from other States that had no such law, just as is now done.

For foreign liquors, clubs would be organized, such as the Elks and the Eagles and the Owls and the Moose and the liquor stored in lockers, as the organizations named now get it in local option or prohibition territory (so-called). Beer would be imported from Bavaria, champagne from France and whiskey from Scotland. Mr. Hobson made the statement in the speech referred to that the bill was put in the form given above to recognize the "personal liberty" of the individual. Ah, yes, noble Hobson, but the wives and the children of the maker and user of liquor under your bill have no rights that you or this great "Christian" nation are bound to recognize. The men in Congress who defeated the Hobson bill saved our national legislature from the mistake of recognizing in our federal constitution, the pernicious doctrine of "personal liberty." If I understand anything of the character of the Almighty, I do not think He will hurl His thunderbolts upon us for the defeat of the Hobson bill. I think you can safely dismiss your fears.

Some of these days the enlightened public sentiment of the nation will demand that a real prohibition amendment be placed in our national constitution. But if the Hobson amendment with its "personal liberty" clause had been adopted, you can readily see that it would have proven a bar to such an amendment, and the curse of liquor would have gone on for many, many years to come. In that case, we might have cause to expect the righteous judgment of an angry God.

A magazine like yours should not make such a mistake as is contained in your editorial quoted above. Or, if made in true Christian spirit, its rectification should be made as widely as the publication of the error. Thousands of good men were led into an endorsement of the Hobson bill because they supposed that it must be all right, since Hobson was sponsor for it. I have no hesitancy in characterizing it as an exceedingly sly trick of the Devil and I repeat my former statement, that he used good men to carry out his scheme. Fortunately, it failed.

The Ninety And Nine

(A New Version.)

There were ninety and nine had gone astray
From the shelter of the fold,
But one so snug in the manger lay
While they were all starved and cold—
Away on the mountains wild and bare,
Away from the tender Shepherd's care.

The hireling caressed his sleek, pet lamb—
The Master came down to see:
"Lo! where is the flock, my beautiful flock,
That I gave in charge to thee?
Go, seek till ye find them, far and wide,
Nor let one perish for whom I died."

"The wolves are ranging around the fold,
The lions roar after their prey,
My sheep are scattered through all the wold
In the cloudy and deep, dark day;
And the shepherds encased in fat and fleece Resent the bleating that mars their peace."

Then up rose a band of shepherds true,
Inspired by their Master's Cross,
And vowed they'd seek them through and through
Despite any pain or loss.
They traversed the mountains wild and bare,
And snatched the prey from the leopard's lair.

Then all through the mountains, thunder-riven,
And up from the rocky steep,
There arose a cry to the gates of heaven:
"Great Shepherd, behold Thy sheep!
Earth's countless ransomed surround Thy throne
And hymn salvation to Thee alone."

Practical and Perplexing Questions

Answered by the Editors

PARABLE OF THE TARES

Question: How do you explain the parable of the tares where the evil is punished before the good is removed?

Answer: The Scofield Bible says, "The gathering of the tares into bundles for burning does not imply immediate judgment. At the end of this age (Matt. 13:40) the tares are set apart for burning, but first the wheat is gathered into the barn (John 14:3; 1 Thess. 4:14-17). Lisco remarks that this is a subordinate circumstance which must not be closely pressed, because Matthew 25:31-46 reverses the order."

THE WEDDING GARMENT

Question: How does the man without the wedding garment get in? Where does this take place? What class does he illustrate?

Answer: He "got in" in some manner of which he was ashamed, for he was speechless when the king put to him the question. In other words, he represents the false professor. If the wedding garment be considered as saving faith or the robe of God's righteousness, it matters not which, he did not possess it. He may have been a good man as the world goes, and a religious man, but he was not a converted or regenerated man. The judgment referred to "takes place" "when the King comes in to see the guests." One such time, and perhaps that which is here meant, is the second coming of Christ, another is at the last judgment of the world. The principle is the same in either case, and that is the important matter for us.

HIGHER CRITICISM

Question: In what light do you place the higher criticism and how far is it right or wrong? There are those who say there are three distinct narratives in Genesis, the Priestly, the J., and the Elohim, which you explain away by the law of recurrence.

Did Moses write, or was he responsible for the writing of the Pentateuch, or was it the compilation of different men all inspired by the Holy Ghost?

Answer: We think the higher criticism is wrong when it speaks of different narratives in the Pentateuch, though we do not understand the correspondent's reference to the law of recurrence. Our judgment is that Moses is the author of the whole of the Pentateuch, although later writers may have added brief editorial notes here or there, like the record of Moses' death. In such cases they may have been as truly inspired for their work as Moses was for his. The correspondent will find this and kindred matters treated in Dr. Gray's "Primers of the Faith."

TEMPERANCE AND THE GOSPEL

Question: We are having a local option campaign, and there are things which cause me to doubt if it is right from a scriptural standpoint. Has the church any message to the world except salvation through Jesus Christ? Is not temperance a command given only to the believer, and if so, should we not preach salvation to the world and temperance as a part of the believer's walk?

Answer: Felix was not a believer, but Paul preached temperance to him. Perhaps this is begging the question, however, as our inquirer really wishes to know whether it is ever proper for the pulpit to turn aside from the gospel to preach temperance. Our opinion is that the gospel should be the staple of the minister's work, and for the simple reason that when men accept the gospel it settles the temperance question for them and every other question relating to sin. But there may be occasions when temperance or any other Christian virtue, or duty, should be specially emphasized in the pulpit, though it need not be done independently of the preaching of the gospel.

STRUGGLE AFTER DEATH.

Question: Is it true, as some believe, that there will yet be a struggle with the enemy after one has been laid in the grave, and the full victory not be won until after we have received our glorified bodies? Kindly explain and give light on Jude 9.

Answer: Jude 9 refers to the contention of Michael, the archangel, with Satan when he disputed about the body of Moses. Evidently the inquirer fears that a similar struggle follows the death of every believer, but he need have no fear in that direction. In the first place, let him remember that this was a contention about the body of Moses, but not his soul or spirit. There may have been some special reason why Satan desired his body, possibly to prevent his appearance afterwards on the Mount of Transfiguration (Matthew 17), or his appearance in Jerusalem during the tribulation, for many believe that Moses is one of the two witnesses referred to in Revelation 11: At all events, every believer may take to himself the comfort of Paul's words in Philippians 1:23, who said that for him to depart was "to be with Christ."

THE TRIBULATION PERIOD

Question: Does "the end" of Matthew 24:14 refer to the end of the church, or tribulation period?

Will the "taken ones" include all the saved, or just the most Christ-like?

Answer: In reply to the first question we think the tribulation period is meant. As the Scofield Bible says: "Verse 14 has specific reference to the proclamation of the good news that the kingdom is again at hand." This proclamation, it is thought, will be made by the Jewish remnant during the tribulation period.

The second question also refers to the tribulation period, according to our best judgment. Its interpretation is suggested by the previous reference in the chapter to the days of Noah. Quoting Gaebelin, though not literally, two classes were living in Noah's day. The unbelievers were swept away by the divine judgment. The other included Noah and his house, which were left. It will be so at the coming of the Son of Man. The unbelievers will be taken away in judgment and wrath, but the others will be left on the earth to receive and enjoy the blessings of the Kingdom which will then be established. In other words, "taken" and "left" have here the opposite meaning to that which applies when the Lord comes for His church. At that time some will be taken and others left, but the "taken" ones will be true believers who will be caught up to meet Christ in the air, while the "left" ones will be the unbelievers who remain and pass through the tribulation period.

WATER BAPTISM

Question: In your explanation of John 3:5 you convey the impression (to me at least) that Jesus said one must be born of water (the fluid, not the Word); in other words, must be baptized with water in order to be saved. If this is your position, please explain how the Quakers, exhibiting so many fruits of the Spirit, are saved when they practice no form of water baptism whatever. If this is a fact, how can we take any view but that "water" here means the "Word," or is used as a symbol of the Word?

Answer: The inquirer received a wrong impression of our explanation of John 3:5. We never meant to teach that any man must be baptized with water in order to be saved. He must be born of the Holy Spirit in order to be saved, and when he is so born he will, in obedience to the Word of God, joyfully confess that fact in the baptism of water. Of course there is an exception to this in the case of those who were baptized in infancy and who regard such baptism as valid. But even in their case there will be an outward confession of Christ corresponding to baptism.

This still leaves open the question about the Quakers who practice no form of water baptism whatever, but it is not for us to try to square their practice with what we consider the teaching of the Word of God. They have an interpretation which satisfies them, and on which they are prepared to stand in the day when they must give account, but that is their responsibility and not ours. We cannot say that "water" means the "Word" just because the Quakers or any other people do not believe in water baptism. The basis of our interpretation of the Bible is not what men say about it, but what it says about itself as we understand it.

"REVEREND" AND "D. D."

Question: What is the meaning of Matthew 23:8? Has it anything to do with the degree of D. D.?

Though many ministers deserve these degrees, how do they justify themselves in being called "Doctor"? Is it not encouraging to pride? Does it not exhibit a want of humility? Are such as these raising themselves above their fellowmen? What can we answer to these questions?

Answer: In reply to the above we append the comment on Matthew 23:8 in Barnes' Commentary with which we are substantially in accord:

"Jesus forbade His disciples to seek such titles of distinction. The reason which He gave was that He was Himself their Master and Teacher. They were on a level; they were to be equal to authority; they were brethren; and they should neither covet nor receive a title which implied either an elevation of one above another, or appeared to infringe on the absolute right of the Saviour to be their only Teacher and Master. They were not to do anything that implied a wish or a willingness that it should be appended to their names. Everything which would tend to make a distinction among them or destroy their parity, everything which would lead the world to suppose that there were ranks and grades among them as ministers, they were to avoid.

It is to be observed that the command is that they were not to receive the title—"Be not ye called Rabbi." The Saviour did not forbid them giving the title to others when it was customary or not regarded as improper (Compare Acts 26:25), but they were not to receive it. It was to be unknown among them.

This title corresponds with the title "Doctor of Divinity" as applied to ministers of the gospel and so far as I can see, the spirit of the Saviour's command is violated by the reception of such a title, as really as it would have been by their being called Rabbi. It makes a distinction among ministers. It tends to engender pride and a sense of superiority in those who obtain it, and envy and a sense of inferiority in those who do not; and the whole spirit and tendency of it is contrary to the simplicity that is in Christ."

THE BIBLE AND SECRET SOCIETIES

Question: "In your July number under the heading 'Secret Orders,' you intimate that there is teaching in the Bible contrary to them. Would you kindly present the same, and would you draw a distinction between technically designated secret orders and oath-bound temperance orders."

[President Charles A. Blanchard, of Wheaton College, Ill., answers the above, on our behalf, as below.—Editors.]

Answer: The teaching which bears on secret societies is found throughout the Word, but especially in the teaching of Jesus and His apostles. For example, Jesus said: "I am the light of the world." He said to His disciples, "Ye are the light of the world," and he commanded them to let their light shine so that men might see their good works and glorify their father in heaven. (John 1:4, 8, 9; John 8:12; Matt. 5:16). It is the essence of light to reveal. It is the essence of darkness to hide. "Whatsoever doth make manifest is light" (Eph. 5:13). The moment any society tells us to keep its work secret, it reveals a spirit hostile to the mind of Jesus Christ. God is light and in Him there is no darkness at all.

God is the revealer of secret things, so Daniel prayed in Babylon, and so God answered. There are, of course, mysteries in nature, but they are not like secret society mysteries which are shams made up by men. They are mysteries of working and are revealed to the humble and obedient.

Jesus' final testimony in John 18:20 is most important to a Christian man. He was on trial for His life. He went out from that trial to die for our sins. A high priest asked Him about His disciples and His teaching and He said, "I spoke openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple whither the Jews always resorted and in secret have I said nothing." Thus He characterized the teaching of His whole life, for He never taught after this except in His example of patient suffering.

No man can follow Jesus into a secret society, for He never went into such an organization. If He lived in our time He would have no fellowship with temperance lodges, patriotic lodges, social lodges, religious lodges, lodges of any kind. He would speak openly to the world, and His followers ought to do the same.

Another Bible teaching which is decisive, is found in 2 Corinthians 6:14-18. In the fourteenth verse believers are forbidden to be yoked with unbelievers and the question is asked, "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? What agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God said, I will dwell in them and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people." The Holy Spirit asks this question in a tone of finality as if it were absurd that anyone could suppose light to commune with darkness, or a believer with an infidel.

There is probably no one thing hindering the work of the church today like the fellowship of professed Christians with the unbelieving world. They unite in amusements, in business, in marriage, and more frequently perhaps than in any other way, in worship, in the prayers and religious teachings of these lodges.

In the seventeenth verse the Holy Spirit tells Christians their duty. If they have become entangled with the darkness, with Belial, with infidels, with idols, with unbelievers; "Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you and ye shall be my sons and daughters saith the Lord Almighty."

The special condemnation of secret societies is their religious character. There are many other objections. They break up homes. They interfere with the administration of justice in courts, and with the industrial life of the nations. It is the essence of a secret society to seek to secure exceptional advantages for its members. This, of course, is inconsistent with the Christian attitude, but the main difficulty with lodges is that they are most of them, churches. Not christian churches but pagan churches, that is to say, they worship gods but they do not worship the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. They exclude the name of Jesus Christ from their prayers, from their religious teachings, and from even the Word of God when it is used in their rituals.

False worship in the Bible are called spiritual adultery. Spiritual adultery has always been associated with all forms of immoralities. It is now. The pagan churches of our time do just as the pagan churches in the old time did. They sit down to eat and drink and they rise up to play. Christians ought to have no fellowship with them.

THE LAYMENS COMMENTARY ON THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS

Conducted by James M. Gray

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

Lesson 7

The Approach to The Holy of Holies Chapters 12 and 13

I. A footnote of "The Scofield Bible" which suggests the title of this lesson is well worth quoting: "Chapters 12-17 are a progression according to the order of approach to God in the tabernacle types. Chapter 12 in which Christ speaks of His death answers to the brazen altar of burnt offering, type of the Cross. Passing from the altar toward the holy of holies, the laver is next reached answering to chapter 13. With his associate priests now purified, the high priest enters the holy place in the communion of chapters 14-16. Entering alone the holy of holies, the High Priest intercedes, 17. It is not for the salvation of His own for which He intercedes, but their keeping and blessing. His death has saved them, and this is assumed as accomplished (17:4)."

II. The facts of chapter 13 are the supper at Bethany (1-11), the triumphal entry (12-19), and the visit of the Greeks, concluding the chapter. The first two having been touched upon in the Synoptics, let us consider the last which some regard as the second great temptation in Jesus' life. The considerations justifying such a view are found in the effect which the request of the Greeks to see Him made upon Jesus: "Now is my soul troubled," "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die," "Father, save me from this hour." Also in the heavenly testimony to His Sonship which was again afforded Him. The thought is that the Greeks, whether heathens or proselytes to the Jewish religion, had come to invite Jesus to return with them to their own land. We have seen what the Greek race stood for, what their ideals were, and how likely they would have been to make a god of Jesus had He consented. It was a temptation not unlike that of Peter, when in Matthew 16, he sought to dissuade Jesus from going to the Cross, or like that of Satan in the wilderness, when showing Jesus "all the kingdoms of the world and the glory of them," he said, "All these will I give thee if thou wilt fall down and worship me." This view assumes deeper significance if we recall that the time these Greeks approached Jesus was when he had come to realize that "he had come to his own and his own received him not." It was when He was rejected by His own nation that this sister nation, great in much that the world called greatness, came to Him thus and said, "Come with us and we will receive, honor and deify Thee!" Ah! if He had, what would have become of this poor lost world (20-36)?

III. We should not pass to the next chapter without observing in passing, the additionally strong testimony John bears, as his manner is, to the deity of Jesus. See for example, the argument to be drawn from verses 37-41, especially the last-named. Look up the quotation in Isaiah 6, and ask yourself whether John's testimony must not be utterly dishonored unless Jesus is God incarnate. How corroborative of this are Jesus' own words in verses 44, 45.

What is the leading event in chapter 13? What is the lesson taught in this transaction (12-16)? And yet is there not more than a lesson in humility here? What of the mysterious teaching in verses 8, 9? We have here a symbolic representation of Christ's intercessory work for His people. They are already "clean" so far as their salvation is concerned, because of faith in Him, and on the ground of His finished work on the Cross; but passing through the world brings daily defilement which requires daily cleansing, for which provision is made by His intercession as our High Priest. Compare 1 John 1. 9.

Peter's words in verse 8 illustrate the mistake of the sinner with reference to Christ's atonement; while those in verse 9 illustrate the mistake of the saint with reference to His intercession.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

Lesson 8

"The Central Teaching of Jesus Christ"

Chapter 14

I. The title of this lesson is borrowed from Bernard's volume on chapters 13 to 17, inclusive. Others call the chapters the heart of the Gospel. Commonly, chapters 14-16 are known as the farewell discourse to the disciples, which occurred in the same place and on the same occasion as the washing of the disciples' feet. Indeed, there seem to have been two discourses on the occasion, the one limited to chapter 14, and the other to chapters 15 and 16.

II. Chapter 14, as to subjects, might be thus classified: The preparation for Christ's second coming (1-3), the identity of the Father and the Son (4-15), the office of the Holy Spirit in the church (16-26), and the bequest of peace (27-31). We have seen that the second coming of Christ is to be conceived of under two aspects, a coming for His saints (1 Thess. 4:14-17), and a coming to judge the nations (Matt. 24:29, 30), and it is the first of these aspects that is here referred to. The "Father's house," not God's dominions, is in the foreground. It has "mansions" which suggests settled continuance and secure possession. "Many" mansions, not in the sense of ampleness only, but variety. Jesus' going is necessary to prepare them, for they were not open to the sons of men till the Son of Man was glorified. (See the author's "Progress in the Life to Come"). And yet their preparation was not enough, but there is the added grace of the coming again to receive His disciples unto Himself. This is not a continuous coming again, but a final and collective one (Rev. 22:20). It is a reunion too, "Where I am, there ye may be also" (12:26; 17:24; 2 Cor. 5:8; Phil. 1:23).

III. The next subject (4-15) is introduced by the suggestion that disciples sometimes know more than they suppose or use (4). "Cometh unto the Father" (6), is to be construed not only as coming to Him in glory at the last, but coming to Him in a reconciled relation now through faith in Christ. Verses 7-11 contain truths too deep for human understanding, and we can only say in the face of them that the more we know of the Son, the more we know of the Father. The first half of verse 12 refers to the miraculous gifts the Apostolic church exercised, and the last to the moral and spiritual effects of the preaching of the gospel from that day to this. The reason for these gifts and these effects is twofold, "because I go to my Father" and because "Whatsoever ye shall ask in my name, that will I do." The only qualifications to this asking and receiving is, "that the Father may be glorified in the Son" (13).

IV. The subject following (16-26) is quite in harmony with the foregoing, because as the result of His going to His Father the Holy Spirit was given to the church, through whose power the mighty works are done and prayer made efficacious (Zech. 4:6; Rom. 8:26, etc.). This is the first time the Holy Spirit is named as Christ's special gift to His people. Of course, He was the regenerator, guide, and aid of the Old Testament saints, but His relation to New Testament saints is peculiar, as we shall see later. Several things are here taught about Him. He is a person, for the words do not fit an influence or an inward feeling. His special office is to apply the truth to the heart. He is the eternal possession of the believer. His coming to dwell in him fulfills the deep mysterious sayings of verses 17-23: "I will come to you"; "because I live you shall live also"; "Ye in me and I in you"; "make one abode with him."

V. In the conclusion of this chapter there is a difficulty at verse 28, where our Lord says, "My Father is greater than I"; but He means as touching His manhood simply. (Phil. 2:7). And yet why does He say that the disciples ought to rejoice at His going to the Father because the Father is greater? Perhaps because then He would resume the glory He had with Him before the world was. Or perhaps then He would receive the Kingdom which in the eternal counsels the Father had prepared for the Son as mediator. "If I had not placed myself in a position of inferiority to the Father by becoming man for man's sake, you would have no hope for your souls. But now the work is finished, and I return to my Father and ye ought to be glad." The last words of verse 31 indicate some kind of a break in the discourse, and make it a suitable place to bring the lesson to a close.

The "Central Teaching" Continued
Chapters 15 and 16

Bernard speaks of the fundamental subject of what follows in this discourse as "that of the relations of believers to Jesus Christ in respect of practical life under the coming dispensation. (1) The relation of members who share in His life and thereby bring forth fruit unto God (15:1-8). (2) The relation of friends who share in His love and maintain its continuance and manifest its effects by love to each other (9-17). (3) The relation of followers who share in His work toward the world, and therefore in its enmity (18-16:3). (4) The relation of adherents on whom He bestows a share in His own Spirit, the Comforter, Advocate and Teacher (16:4-15).

"Then follow answers to thoughts raised in the minds of His hearers, renewed warnings, promises and assurances, closing with a sad intimation of desertion, which passes again into a note of peace and victory."

Under the first of the above relationships (1-8), we learn that the union between Christ and His true disciples is a living one—the branch lives in the vine and the vine in the branch. All the meaning that can be gathered out of that simile belongs to the Christian's faith. We learn also, that there are false Christians as well as true ones; branches which appear to be joined to the vine and yet bear no fruit. Further, we are taught that the only satisfactory evidence of being a true Christian is fruit. Again that fruitfulness is increased in such by God's providential dealings with them. Verse 7 is a distinct promise of power and success in prayer as a result of fruit bearing.

Under the second relationship (9-17) think of the measureless compass in the words, "Even as the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you" (9); think how simple it is to continue in that love, just to keep His commandments; and the two-fold motive for so doing, that He may have joy in us, and that our own joy may be filled full! Note the high privilege of a believer in verse 15 and compare it with Genesis 18:17.

As to the enmity of the world, how kind that our Lord should relieve His disciples of fault or blame in the premises (18-21)! Verse 22 does not teach that they would not have been sinners at all had not Christ come, but that they would have had a less degree of guilt. (John 9:41).

In the teaching about the Holy Spirit there is a mysterious saying at verse 7 of chapter 16. It is so hard to understand why it could be good for Christ to go away from His disciples; but the fact remains that when He went away and the Comforter came at Pentecost the faith of the disciples became a new thing altogether. The Acts of the Apostles will teach us this. If Christ had remained bodily with them He could not have been in more places than one at the same time, and there would have been far less room for the exercise of their faith, and hope and trust. And what about His exalted life in heaven as our High-priestly intercessor? How could His people have continued without that? Verse 8 is also mysterious. As commonly understood, it describes the ordinary operations of the Holy Spirit in saving sinners, but there is more in it. Bishop Ryle thinks it means that when the Spirit came at Pentecost He would stop the mouths of enemies, and oblige them however unwillingly, to think of Christ and what He taught very differently from what they were thinking now. The Acts illustrate this, for there was a peculiar irresistible power accompanying the work of the apostles which neither the heathen nor the unbelieving Jews were able to resist or gainsay. Witness the story of Stephen, Acts 7, and Pliny's famous letter to Trajan about the Christians. Verses 12 and 13 of this chapter are "Christ's pre-authentications of the New Testament." He would leave many things to be revealed for example, and this revelation would be completed after the Spirit came. (1 Cor. 14:37; Rev. 22:19).

But there is nothing in the whole of this sublime discourse of more practical value than what it teaches the disciple about prayer. (See 14:13, 14; 15:16; 16:23-27.) To ask the Father in Christ's name is in advance of asking for His sake. To ask in His name is as though He asked Himself with all the assurance of answer which such a fact implies. This is the privilege of the true believer who is thus a member of Christ's body and of him only, and it is a revelation of truth which Christ had at no time made known to His followers until now, doubtless because they were not prepared to receive it.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN

Lesson 10

The Intercessory Prayer

Chapter 17

- I. This chapter, because of its subject and its great preciousness, is worthy to stand out by itself. Bernard divided the prayer into three great parts and a sequel: (1) For His work and glory, 1-5; (2) for the disciples, 6-19; (3) for all believers, 20-24; (4) the sequel, 25, 26. The first and second parts he subdivides again into two sections, 1-3, and 4, 5; and 6-10 and 11-19, respectively. The third into three, 20-23, 23, 24.

II. "The Scofield Bible" divides it into seven petitions: (1) That Jesus may be glorified as the Son who has glorified the Father, verse 1; (2) for restoration to the eternal glory, verse 5; (3) for the safety of believers from the world, verse 11, and from the evil one, verse 15; (4) for the sanctification of believers, verse 17; (5) for the spiritual unity of believers, verse 21; (6) that the world may believe, verse 21; (7) that believers may be with Him in heaven to behold and share His glory, verse 24. The same source notes the five gifts which Christ bestows on those whom the Father gave Him: eternal life, verse 2; the Father's name, verses 6, 26; the Father's words, verses 8, 14; His own joy, verse 13; His own glory, verse 22.

III. We have here the only long prayer of our Lord which the Holy Spirit has thought good to record for our learning. And how wonderful it is when we think of the One who prayed it! One person of the adorable trinity praying to another person of the trinity! Or when we think of the occasion on which it was prayed—the night in which He was betrayed! Or those for whom it was prayed, disciples soon to forsake Him and flee, and other believers like ourselves, so unworthy of it all; or, finally, when we think of its terms, the character of its petitions. Wonderful, indeed! Perhaps it was prayed in the room where the Lord's Supper was instituted, but from the closing words of chapter 14 it seems likely to have been uttered in some quiet place outside the walls, and before the crossing of the brook Cedron (18:1).

IV. Among the utterances we would note especially the last clause of verse 1, which proves, inferentially the equality of Christ with God. Then verse 3 as a description of saved souls. Of course, head knowledge is not here meant, but that to which we have been renewed by the Holy Spirit through faith in Christ (Col. 3:10). God known out of Christ is a consuming fire. A question of grave importance arises at verse 12. The "but" in this case is not exceptive but adversative as Bishop Ryle thinks. It does not mean that Judas was once a true believer who became lost, but should be read: "Those whom thou gavest me I have kept, and out of them not one is lost. But there is one soul that is lost, even Judas, the son of perdition." This view is confirmed in John 18:9, where no hint is given of any exception having been made by our Lord in the previous instance, when John of course heard Him speak. Verse 17 seems to us next in importance. Sanctification there is in the experimental sense, doubtless. Saints are already sanctified the moment they accept Christ in that they are then set apart for God, but after that they are expected to become sanctified in that their life and conduct are to measure up to their position. In this verse we see such sanctification to be an obligation; and also that it is the work of God in us, He must do the sanctifying; and yet there is an instrument or means to be used to that end, even His Word of truth. Without a knowledge of God's Word in us the Holy Spirit has nothing on which He can work, so to speak, hence the primary importance of Bible reading and study.

Verse 19, in this connection, must not be misunderstood. Christ Himself required no sanctification in the sense of experience or growth. He was always perfect and without sin. But the Word in His case is the same as "consecrate" or "set apart." He offered Himself to God as a sacrifice, in other words, that His people might be both justified and sanctified. To pause next at verses 21-23, the unity of believers there sought is not that of any visible church or denomination, but that of the church considered as the body of which He is the Head, and which was effected potentially on the day of Pentecost (Acts 3:1-4; 1 Cor. 12:13; Eph. 4:1-6). We express this unity not in forms of worship, discipline or government, but in oneness of will, heart, doctrine and conduct.

Questions on the Lesson

1. How does Bernard divide this prayer?
2. How does Scofield divide it?
3. What are the gifts Christ bestows on His disciples?
4. What makes this prayer wonderful?
5. Where, presumably, was it uttered?
6. What question arises at verse 12, and how is it answered?
7. What are we taught about sanctification?
8. What are we taught about Christian unity?

Faith can never fail of the reward of perseverance; the Lord delights in persevering faith.—R. C.

He who is not satisfied with Jesus does not know Him, or at least, has forgotten Him. It is impossible to enjoy Him and not to feel that He is everything; that is to say, that He satisfies us, and that, by the nature of what He is, He shuts out everything else.

David Anointed King.

1 Samuel 16:4-13

Golden Text.—“Man looketh on the outward appearance, but Jehovah looketh on the heart.” 1 Samuel 16:7, R. V.

After the events recorded in last Sunday's lesson Samuel retired to Ramah never again to see Saul's face. Samuel “mourned for” the deposed king (15:35). This was noble but God had work for Samuel to do. Idle sorrow which spends itself in unprofitable mourning is detrimental to man and a hindrance to the kingdom of God (8:7; 15:1). Men may fail but the kingdom goes forward. We do not interpret verse two as suggesting any subterfuge on God's part, but rather that God refused to pay any attention to Samuel's fear. God answers fear by giving us duties to perform and thus delivers from our fears.

I. David Chosen King, vv. 4-10. Saul the clamorous choice of the people was not succeeded by David—“the man after God's own heart”—for several years after this event. God's will in this matter was shown to Samuel progressively: (a) Samuel is informed that God hath sought “a man after His own heart” (13:14); (b) He is told to go and find the king which God has provided (16:1). (c) He is at last definitely told whom God had selected (16:12). This selection is in accordance with a prophecy (Gen. 49:10) made centuries before regarding the kingly scepter. Of course this act would be high treason, for Saul yet had many friends and supporters (v. 2). God seems to have permitted Samuel to use one avowed purpose to conceal the real one, but “such a course is one to use but sparingly” (Maclaren). God protects those whom he sends (Ps. 34:7) and “man is immortal till his work is done” (Patton). Just what or how was not a matter to concern Samuel, for he had God's promise (v. 3). A step at a time was sufficient, and in taking each step Samuel was to tell the exact truth. Thus God guides and tests His servants.

Samuel was a judge as well as a prophet (ch. 7:16) and the people of Bethlehem were agitated at his arrival. It may be, too, that these elders were fearful of incurring the displeasure of Saul. There was no occasion for fear as Samuel's purpose was to sacrifice, and his mission one of peace even as the angelic messengers who quieted the shepherds' fear with their message of “peace,” when “great David's greater Son” was ushered into the world. Jesse was a grandson of Ruth the Moabitess, and also a descendant of Rahab the harlot. On his father's side he belonged to the strong tribe of Judah. He was evidently a man of some wealth, certainly in his children. After the sacrifice and before the feast Samuel is made acquainted with the sons of Jesse. The first, Eliab was tall and good to look upon, and at once Samuel fixed upon him as the certain choice of Jehovah. There are no more eloquent words in the Bible than those found in verse seven. We have only to read of Eliab's subsequent unjust treatment of David (17:28) to see that God was amply justified in His judgment of this candidate. Social rank, lineage, fortune, physical prowess, or age, will never be a sufficient substitute for character. It is a subtle snare to be deceived by outward appearances. “If I take care of my character, my reputation will take care of itself” (D. L. Moody). The Lord looks upon the heart. What does He see in yours?

II. David Anointed King, vv. 11-13. Seven sons are set aside, and yet Samuel did not hear the voice of God's approval. In seeming dismay he asks, “Are here all thy children?” Jesse seems to have made a careless and reluctant reply that the youngest was away from home tending sheep. Thereupon Samuel says, “We will not sit down (to the sacrificial feast) till he be brought hither.” It is from such lowly positions that God is constantly promoting men to positions of responsibility and prominence. Witness Carey, Livingstone, Moody, and a hundred others past and present. David at this time was about fifteen years old (Beecher). His name means “darling,” significant of his mother's affection, to whom David twice makes reference but whose name is not known (Ps. 86:16; 116:16). David, as compared with his brothers was not tall, but had bright eyes (v. 12, marg.), and a fair face, a “comely person” (v. 18). He was agile and strong and though seemingly scoffed at by his brothers and neglected by his father, it did not turn him from the performance of his duties. Samuel did not greet David as he had greeted Saul—he may have been disappointed. This gives emphasis to the words in verse twelve, “Arise anoint him: for this is he.” How God spoke to Samuel is of small moment. God is able to come near to his creatures and communicate His will to them in His own way. David is anointed for the kingship, but is not equipped nor does he enter upon his office till later. In this he is a type of Jesus who shall yet reign on David's throne. Saul had been thus set apart when none were present (9:27; 10:1). So it is possible that Jesse and his family connected this ceremony with some work for God rather than the kingship.

Verses thirteen and fourteen tell of the developing contrast in the lives of Saul and David. David the young king, only nominal at this time, is a great inspiration to the young of all ages. (1) He did his lowly work thoroughly. (2) While doing his work he cultivated and improved himself (v. 18). (3) He gave himself wholly to God, hence the record "and the Lord is with him."

The Shepherd Psalm

Psalm 23

Golden Text.—"The Lord is my shepherd." Ps. 23:1.

This is the most famous of the shepherd king's writings. He borrows his figure from the experience of his youth, the relation of the lamb to David being a type to him of his relations to God. Israel's greatest poet had ample time for meditation in the days of his youth as he followed his occupation of a shepherd. His playing on the harp is famous and he made the first official use of music in the worship of Jehovah (1 Chron. 15:15-24). The word "Psalm" is from the Greek, and originally meant a stringed instrument. The Hebrew title of this book is "Praises." Of the one hundred and fifty Psalms David is expressly credited with seventy-three. Praise of God is the central theme of all. Thanksgiving, trust, prayer and triumph, each receive expression, and a large group are of Messianic prophecy.

To fully study this, the sweetest of all Psalms, we must consider it verse by verse.

(1) "My Shepherd." This spiritualized lamb is David. The Shepherd is Jehovah. The time is man's natural period on earth. The rest is in the future. This Shepherd so provides that the lamb "shall not want." It is His business to care for His sheep. We are the sheep, Jesus is the Shepherd and His sheep obey His voice (John 10:4,5). "We shall not want for food, for drink, for grace, for quietness, for companionship, for guidance and for welcome back to the fold at the end of the day, or in the time of storm."

(2) "He Leadeth Me." "The Lord is my Shepherd because (a) he bought me, (b) he feeds me, (c) he leads me." (Robertson). To fully comprehend the deep significance of this Psalm we must try to know the land of Palestine, and the habits of eastern shepherds; how they feed their flocks, know them by name, the danger of flood and wild beasts, and their constant vigil. The Lord is an individual Shepherd, interested in the individual sheep as well as the whole flock. He Provides a place for us to "lie down in pastures of tender grass"; He also causes us to walk beside "waters of quietness." He makes us to lie down at times and He knows where to lead, providing at the same time both food and drink. God's Word is the richest pasturage for the sheep of the Great Shepherd.

(3) "He Restoreth My Soul." The Shepherd revives our faintness. If the lamb is too weak, He carries it in His bosom until it is revived. Many are the ways He revives us. A word, a sentence, a paragraph, or an experience will oftentimes restore the sick, weary, sorrowful, or sin-buffed child of God. He also leads, He does not drive, in paths of pleasantness and of peace. Jehovah strengthens, invigorates, for "His name's sake," not because of our merit, though He guards and helps His people for their own sakes.

(4) "Yea though I Walk." As every need will be met (Phil. 4:19) even so will every fear be banished. The flock has passed beyond the "tender grass" and "waters of quietness" into new and strange experiences, into the "valley of deepest darkness," not alone the experience of physical death, but all of life's experiences that are shrouded by thick, profound, impenetrable darkness, for the Christian does not always walk in paths of light (2 Cor. 5:7). Sometimes we scarcely see the Shepherd, but we may always hear His voice. Dark valleys may lie between two excellent pasture fields, as Bunyan suggests in "Pilgrim's Progress." Death is a shadow, not a substance, for the sting of sin has been removed (1 Cor. 15:54-57). Why fear? "For thou art with me," and God is stronger than any possible enemy. There are dangers which we cannot cope with, but as He is with us "we are able" (Isa. 43:2; Rom. 8:31; Heb. 13:5). The rod was used for defence and the staff for climbing, and the eastern shepherd still carries both. The staff is symbolic of the scepter—our Shepherd is also royal (Acts 2:36). The written message, a kind friend, or a remembered promise, may be the rod and staff of God.

(5) "My Cup Runneth Over." Here the figure changes. Jehovah is now the bountiful host. What a repast He has spread! David as a shepherd and as a fugitive from Saul knew the pinch of hunger, and the satisfaction of eating in peace, in the presence of his enemies. They that are Christ's have enemies (John 15:19; 2 Tim. 3:12), but as our Host He has spread a banquet in their very presence while the world goes on feeding upon the husks. He also anoints our heads with the "oil of gladness," the Holy Spirit, (Acts 10:38; 1 John 2:20, 27, R. V.). For the eastern ancient feast this anointing was an essential preparation. Only the overflowing life can bless others. Our joys, our spiritual joys in Christ are given in abundance that we may overflow to others.

(6) "I Shall Dwell . . . Forever." Goodness and mercy pursue the psalmist in marked contract with the calamity and the angel of judgment which follow the wicked (Ps. 35:6; 140:11). There is a perpetuity of blessing as well as the penalty of sin. The psalmist leaves the feast for his dwelling house which shall abide "to length of days." This is to be interpreted in its fulness only by the New Testament. (See John 14:1-3; 1 Thess. 4:16-17.) Everlasting fellowship, communion and companionship with the Chief Shepherd, the great shepherd of the sheep."

April 25

David and Goliath

1 Samuel 17:38-51

Golden Text.—"If God is for us, who is against us?" Rom. 8:31, R. V.

For forty days (v. 16) Goliath defied Saul's army encamped near Bethlehem. Three of the sons of Jesse were in Saul's army, and to them David is sent with food (vv. 13, 18, 19). These brothers scornfully reproached David when he expressed a willingness to fight Goliath, accusing him of pride and reminding him that he was but a shepherd (vv. 26-29). David's words are carried to Saul, and he is introduced to the king.

I. Boastful Pride, vv. 38-44. Fear and dismay were aroused at the very sight of this proud Philistine (vv. 11, 24, 32) yet such fear was foreign to David for his eyes were not upon man but upon God (v. 37). He related to Saul his exploits not as boasting, but as giving him assurance that God was able to deliver him out of the hand of this Philistine. Saul, who had once been a man of like simple faith, is now as much in fear as any of his army. David was perhaps about twenty years of age, and verse 56 calls him a stripling, hence Saul's armor would not fit him (10:23). Humanly speaking it was almost an impossible thing David offered to accomplish. Even Saul (v. 23) sought to dissuade him, but David was not trusting in man nor depending upon the armor of the king (v. 39; Ps. 27:1-3; Isa. 12:2; Rom. 8:31). David took his familiar staff and sling (see 1 Thess. 5:21) and sallied forth, "strong in the Lord, not in himself; armed not with steel but with faith." Crossing "the valley" (v. 40, marg.) he prepared his sling with which every Israelite was skilled. On came Goliath, about nine feet tall, "a stalking mountain, overlaid with brass and iron," preceded by his protector (v. 41). Why such a soldier after his period of triumph should desire this added safety is not quite clear. It suggests, however, the sinner's timidity which reveals his essential weakness in that he trusts himself, takes no chances, and is even suspicious of his own supporters. What a contrast! This armored giant and this ruddy-faced unarmed youth, carrying only his staff wherewith he was wont to fight wild beasts, and swinging his sling! When God calls men he uses that weapon with which the man is most familiar when the Christian soldier seeks to fight in the armor of another, or by using the weapons of the world, he is foredoomed to failure. (See Exod. 4:2; Judg. 3:31.) As though this youthful shepherd were seeking some beast of the hills, Goliath exclaims, "Am I a dog?" (v. 43), and scornfully using the name of Jehovah he curses David, Israel, Israel's God, and offers to make carrion of David (v. 44). The disdain of the enemy and the boasting of infidelity does not move the true child of God, for he sees the victory which is just ahead (Rom. 8:37).

II. Conquering Humility, vv. 45-51. David acknowledged Goliath's superior armament, yet armed with the name of the God of the army of Israel, his confidence overtops that of the Philistine and he hurls back his proud boast. Furthermore, the victory was to be an immediate one. With calm assurance he informs Goliath of the outcome of their conflict, but takes no credit to himself (Zech. 4:6; James 4:7). He would do to Goliath and the Philistines the things that Goliath had boasted he would do to David (vv. 44 and 46) "that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel." (See v. 47.) David's seemingly insufficient preparation is now revealed to be abundant for he had four stones more than he needed (v. 40). It is thus that God chooses the weak things to confound the mighty (1 Cor. 1:27). Goliath's one unprotected spot was his weakness. In warfare it would be protected by his shield, but his pride and boastfulness exposed him to David's unerring shot. There is always an open, vulnerable place somewhere in the infidel's armor, and the man who trusts God will surely be guided to make accurate aim and to deliver a mortal blow at that point. The enemies we most fear fall the easiest and the hardest. See Judg. 20:16). Verse 50 is parenthetical, but from verse 51, it would seem that Goliath may have been only stunned, and that David to make complete his victory, cut off Goliath's head with his own sword.

Summary. We have before us three lessons. 1. Individual responsibility. A sinful king had paralyzed the effectiveness of the army of Israel. David, "a man after God's own heart" refused Saul's armor, crying out "I cannot go in these." Saul, bound by tradition, must use conventional weapons. God would have every man work according to himself, not copying, not imitating but with his own equipment. 2. All the giants of sin have not yet been overthrown. We still have the giants intemperance, unchastity, graft, selfishness, ambition, and the inequalities of our civic and social life. These can only be overcome in the strength of our God. Bunyan mentions three giants, pride, grim, and pagan; to these we may add, anger, untruthfulness, selfishness and sullenness. 3. Our Helper. See Golden Text. Of all the graces David possessed, faith was the root of each one—faith in a living God. His active faith caused him with nimble feet to attack this blasphemous enemy (v. 48). His faith in God characterized his entire life, resounds in his songs, and strengthened his life of service for Jehovah.

Saul Tries to Kill David

1 Samuel 19:1-12

Golden Text.—"Whoso putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe." Prov. 29:25.

Although anointed by Samuel, victorious in arms and promoted at court, David was many years in reaching his throne. At first both court and army did him honor (18:2), yet he conducted himself with great modesty (18:18, 23). He also obeyed the king explicitly though he knew fully that he was his God-appointed successor.

I. David and Jonathan, vv. 1-3. The story of David and Jonathan is a classic. At first Saul was much attached to David, but the admiration of the people for David aroused his jealousy (18:6), and jealousy is a soldier's disease. The slave of jealousy never has peace. As sin and disobedience developed in his life Saul became subject to fits of insane rage during one of which, as David played upon his harp and endeavored to quiet the monarch's spirit, he hurled a javelin at the harpist (19:10). Saul knew that David was divinely protected and that God had departed from his own life (15:23; 16:14). Saul did not keep his grief and rage to himself for Jonathan and the nation alike knew all about it. Jonathan gladly accepted God's decree and willingly gave up his claim to the kingship. Jonathan's love for his friend David, and at the same time his loyalty to his father Saul were both genuine. He "delighted much in David" (v. 2), gave full, explicit warning to David, and also sought to intercede with Saul.

II. Saul and Jonathan, vv. 4-7. It took courage and self sacrifice on Jonathan's part to speak on behalf of David. Prudence and principle are combined in Jonathan's plea. Those who envy include in their hate and anger all who speak kindly in behalf of their enemy. But Jonathan's argument (vv. 4, 5) is unanswerable. David had not sinned against Saul; it was Jehovah who "wrought a great salvation for all Israel" on the day David took his life in his hand and overcame Goliath. Jonathan pleads for God as well as for his friend. He called to Saul's memory his former joy at seeing Jehovah's victory through David, and for the time being Saul is persuaded (v. 6), and made another of those impetuous promises which proved so ephemeral. David returns to Saul's presence, but saw that his presence aggravated the king and that he was uselessly exposing his life in Saul's presence. David was faithful to God, and to God's anointed king.

III. Michal and David, vv. 8-12. Saul's hatred was too deep to be permanently overcome. David went out and won a great victory over the Philistines and as he followed his courtly duty, Saul bursts out with a fresh attack (vv. 8, 9). David had married Michal when about twenty-one years of age, and Saul's attacks occurred during the next three years (Beecher). The evil spirit mentioned was a demon (18:10; Acts 16:16-18); Mark 1:23-26), a messenger of Satan permitted by God for Saul's discipline (2 Cor. 12:7). God permits evil to come upon men not to tempt them, solicit them to do wrong, but to bring them to repentance or to refine them as pure gold.

On the other hand if men will not have the good spirit, the Spirit of truth, then God gives them over to error and evil spirits (2 Thess. 2:10-12). Doubtless David was on his guard for when the insane melancholia caused Saul again to attack him he fled (v. 10). Messengers were at once dispatched to his house (v. 11) and Michal lowered David from a window and he escaped from his dangerous position. There are suggestions in the Psalms which would indicate his grief over these experiences.

Michal's stratagem (vv. 13-17) was "one not necessarily sanctioned by God, though He bore with it for it occurred at that 'time of ignorance' which 'God overlooked'" (Edersheim).

IV. Summary. All who envy are murderers at heart (Matt. 27:18; 1 John 3:12, 15). The present day murderers hurl their javelins of slander and lying against the men they hate. Saul missed David but he was no less a murderer. Satan always overshoots the mark when he assails one of God's anointed, chosen ones. Saul could not hurt David (Ps.

The Gospel in the World

Edward A. Marshall, Editor

At a recent gathering of American Sunday-school leaders in Chicago, $1,500 was pledged to help support the work of the British section of the World's Sunday-school Association in China during the European war.

The Paris Evangelical Missionary Society has been seriously crippled by the war. Workers on the field cannot be brought home and those now at home on furlough cannot be sent out. The salaries have been greatly reduced and native workers dismissed for the time being.

A Peking shop displays this sign every Sunday: "Today is worship day." This silent message proclaims a new idea to passers-by, who have always worked seven days in the week. Sunday is now observed as a day of rest in Chinese government offices and colleges.—"Missionary Review of the World."

Individual efforts toward home mission evangelism is one of the strong features of Korean church management. The Christians are taught not to wash their hands free from personal responsibility when they have contributed to the support of paid helpers. The members of one church preached to over 30,000 people last year.

In the case of one German mission in India, 275 native Christian workers have been dismissed, 150 have been put upon half pay, and 78 students in the theological school, preparing for Christian work, have been sent home. What is true of this mission is largely true of all German missions in India.

—"The Lutheran Advocate."

A missionary working in the southern part of Ohio during the year beginning May 1, 1913, found twenty-four abandoned churches in Pike County alone. His testimony is that the closing up of a church is often followed by a falling off in the attendance at the public school, while the progressive spirit of the community as a whole begins to decline.

The "contract system" inaugurated by Rev. and Mrs. C. H. Bandy of Fatehgarh, India, by which natives are paid to teach others to read, is meeting with much practical success. The remuneration is according to work actually accomplished. By this means it costs on the average of $1.75 to take a boy or girl from ignorance to where he or she can read the Bible.

India is to have a high grade college for women, located at Madras. Eleven boards in England and America have united in the enterprise. The president is to be Miss Eleanor McDougal, recently on the faculty of Westfield College, London. She is a woman of fine scholarship and strong personality. The teaching staff is to be half English and half American.—"American Board Quarterly News Bulletin."

Mr. H. McMaking, a missionary in Chekiang Province, China, gives the following information concerning missions in that province: "In this province there are twelve hospitals. Last year saw the opening of the first Y. M. C. A. work. There are 313 missionaries at work, and the number of communicants has grown in thirty-four years (1877-1911) from 1,756 to 19,708. The city of Hangchow has three self-supporting churches."

The mission schools of Egypt have met a great need throughout the land, because only ten per cent of the Copts and four per cent of the Mohammedans can read and write. Many of the native workers are products of the United Presbyterian schools. Greater liberty than ever will probably now be obtained for missionary work since Great Britain has severed the land from Turkey and established a protectorate over that region.

Since 1908 the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society has been petitioned again and again both by natives and missionaries, to found a mission hospital in Ongole, on the southeastern coast of India. The board is now undertaking this responsibility, which will call for gifts amounting to more than $27,000. The Telugu Christians have requested that the hospital be called "The Clough Memorial Hospital," in memory of Dr. J. E. Clough, who invested forty-two years of his life among the people.

The following incident is told by Dr. Fish, medical missionary at Anshun, Kwei-chau Province, China: "A few days ago a man came into the clinic with a dislocated shoulder. He was suffering a great deal of pain and we could not attend to him at once. This did not add to his comfort. However, in a very short time we came to his relief. Fortunately, there was no difficulty in reducing the dislocation, to the great joy of the man, who literally leaped and shouted for joy. As he was going out of the gate he told a large number of by-standers that I was God. For this he was reprimanded by our gate-keeper, who sought to teach him a little of the doctrine. However, he was not in a teachable mood and declared that if I was not God I was certainly Jesus, because that very day he had heard how He cured people's diseases by touching them, and had I not made his shoulder better by pulling his arm? This was the first time he had ever heard the gospel and he had things a little mixed up."

The report of the Efulen Station in Kamerun, W. Africa, for 1913-1914, shows one of the best year's work in its history. When the people were given a chance to pledge a certain number of days to personal work, they pledged in one meeting 1,769 days service to be given during the year. When the report was written one of the smaller schoolboys had already reported having won ten souls for Christ. We quote from the report: "One Sunday here at Efulen there were 75 new confessors. A number of these were hospital patients who had come from distant towns, and who upon returning will spread the gospel in those places. The following Sunday there were 86 new confessors out of an audience of 450 people. On the same day, fifteen miles to the east there were 59 new confessors, and six miles to the west there were 20 under the preaching of an inexperienced schoolboy. At the latter place, with preaching points six or eight miles on either side where services were conducted, this boy had an audience of 400 people. Since our last annual meeting we have organized two new churches, one at Alum, fifteen miles east, and one at Zingi, thirty miles west of Efulen. Efulen church has a membership of 314, Alum church has 179 and Zingi 105."

In connection with the Day of Prayer in China for peace in Europe, held on Oct. 18 at the call of the President, Mr. Windsor writes concerning the service held at Yuanchow, in Kiangsi: "Besides the magistrate and other officials, representatives of one or two of the guilds, principal trademen, and scholars were present. The number of men who attended would be fully four hundred, all of whom conducted themselves with the utmost reverence. Two suitable portions of Scripture were read by two Christians, and four others engaged in prayer. At the back of the platform, written in large, good Chinese characters on a black-board, was the text, 'Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people.' Whatever the individual thoughts and feelings of the speakers were, they certainly delivered a clear and frank testimony to the necessity of depending upon God at this critical time in the world's history. The magistrate's address especially was able and clear. It resolved itself into a strong, earnest appeal to those present to live good, clean lives, to repent and turn away from their sins, as only by so doing could they be useful citizens." Another writer in describing the service in his city says: "Altogether it was a remarkable day and a grand opportunity to present at least some aspects of the gospel to a class of influential men, who, for several reasons, are cut off from hearing it. But, glorious as it was to minister them, one's feelings could not but be saddened by the thought of this heathen nation praying for so-called Christian countries."

Mr. C. Howard Judd writes from Kuling, Ki: "As some of you may read what appear to be conflicting reports of conditions in China since the Revolution, I may mention two contrary conditions I came in contact with on a journey, which show two contrary reports may both be true when coming from different localities. The day before I left Kiukiang, our colporteur told me that a military officer of high rank had just been made military governor of the forces in North Kiangsi. This officer (Mr. Wu) is a bright Christian and has been the means of leading others in the army to Christ. Some days ago the Kuling official went to see General Wu on business, and before anything else General Wu spoke to him about his soul and urged him to turn to God. He attends the services in Kiukiang and gives most of his salary for Christian and philanthropic work. Anyone writing on conditions in China from this district would do so with praise and hopefulness. On my return from Shucheng I spent a day in the capital of Anhwei Province for meetings. While there, I heard many tales of the reign of terror in that place. The military governor keeps a place of inquisition, and any who are suspected of plotting against the government or governor are caught and tortured. A brass tube filled with red-hot charcoal is fastened under their armpit next the bare skin, burning incense is put up their nostrils and into their ears, or they are made to kneel on red-hot iron chains in order to force a confession out of them. The confession, false or real, having been made, they are carried out of the city, about two hundred yards from our mission compound, and shot or blown in pieces by some explosive. Sometimes they have been left to a lingering death. The day I was there I saw an awed crowd gathered round three bodies treated in this manner, and no one dared to pass an open comment on the barbarous action. As many as forty executions have taken place in a month in that city. This shows a dark side."

LOT'S WIFE

Luke 17:32

This is the only person we are called on to remember. The reason is to be found in the immediate context. Notice—

I. Her Advantages.

She had a pious husband. She had heavenly visitors. She had divine warning. She had seen the wicked punished.

II. Her Offense.

Looked back. She acted under the impulse of feeling. She acted under the influence of unbelief. She acted under a disregard of law. She acted in contempt of warning.

III. Her Punishment.

Pillar of salt. She was punished suddenly. She was punished seasonably. She was punished righteously. She was punished exemplarily.

IV. The Warning Administered.

Remember: Not to delay; flee at once. Not to hesitate; look not back. Not to draw back; danger is behind.

See here a monument of divine wrath. See here a beacon to warn coming generations.—A. MacFarlane, in "The Twentieth Century Pastor."

THE FOUR C'S OF ROMANS 1:1

The great apostle explains his own status in this verse, viz.—

1. His condition—"Bond servant (slave) of Jesus Christ."
2. His credentials — "Called"; divinely called.
3. His commission—"An apostle"; one sent.
4. His consecration—"Separated unto the gospel of God."—G. A. Swanson.

HEAVEN ON EARTH

"Ye are not come unto the mount that might be touched, . . . but ye are come unto Mount Zion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven, and to God the Judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than that of Abel."—Heb. 12:18, 22-24.

It is well that we are going to heaven, but it is better that heaven may come to us; and we have in this Scripture a summary of the things which make the Christian's experience a heaven upon earth.

We have here and now:

1. The Enjoyment of God's Presence. "Ye are come unto Mount Zion."
2. The Privileges of Heavenly Citizenship. "Ye are come unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem."
3. Companionship and Guardianship of Angels. "Ye are come to an innumerable company of angels."
4. The Joy and Wealth of the Christian Church. "Ye are come to the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven."
5. The Arbitration of God Himself. "To God the Judge of all."
6. Our Heritage in the Glorified Saints. "Ye are come to the spirits of just men made perfect."
7. The Personal Care of Christ. "Ye are come to Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant."
8. Full Salvation Through the Blood. "Ye are come to the blood of sprinkling that speaketh better things than that of Abel."

BEFORE THE WIND CHANGES

It is said that the wardens of a church once called upon their pastor during a long and severe drought and requested him to offer up a prayer for rain. "Well," he said, "I can offer the prayer, but it is of no use while the wind is in the east." Just because our faith is largely of the nature, we look to the east wind instead of to God for the effectiveness of our prayers.—"Religious Telescope."

THE SIN OF PRAYERLESSNESS

A Sermonette

"God forbid that I should sin against the Lord in ceasing to pray for you."—1 Samuel 12:23.

How few of us have placed prayerlessness among our possible sins! And how even fewer have placed the omission to pray for others in the black list of sins against the holy Lord! We have called it thoughtlessness, or negligence, or even apathy, but we have not called it sin. But how this word sin, as used in this unfamiliar relationship, broadens and deepens the ministry and obligation of prayer!

My needy brother has a right to my prayers. They are to be regarded as part of his capital strength. They constitute a part of the forces which were purposed to make him victorious in all the battle of life. My prayers for him are part of his army. I control some of his vital equipment. Without my co-operation in prayer he is weakened and maimed. If I refuse him my prayers I deprive him of so much of his heritage. I defraud him. I wrong him in a far more deadly manner than if I refused to pay a material debt. I disclaim my spiritual debts, and he is impoverished in the central resources of the soul. I help him into moral bankruptcy by depriving him of his sacred dues. Thus do I wrong my brother, and thus do I sin against God.

All this, I say, is a very lofty conception of the obligation of prayer. It is something we owe to others, and if we refuse to pay we leave them poor indeed. On the other hand, how uplifting is the conception that by my prayers I am increasing a man's moral capital! I am helping him to mobilize his spiritual forces. I am sending him army corps to enable him to meet his enemy at the gate and overthrow him. I may share in his warfare, and I may rejoice and glory in his triumph.—Rev. J. H. Jowett, in "The British Weekly."

THE CHART AND THE COURSE

Henry Ward Beecher was crossing the Atlantic, and had an interesting talk with the mate of the vessel, who showed him the charts, and explained what each detail signified. Presently, near the Newfoundland banks, they ran into a dense fog, and it was feared that they had drifted out of their course. It was impossible to rest, and Beecher again sought the mate in the chart-room. He was looking at the same maps, but with such a difference. He was looking now with the eyes of a man who had but one chance, and when he had a word for Beecher, it was an intense expressive word, "We've got the course!"

It is all very well to examine the Bible in a detached, critical, and interested spirit when all is going smoothly, but when one of the crises of life is upon us then we search it eagerly, intensely, as the mate searches the chart.

AN INFIDEL ANSWERED

There was once a Pennsylvania Dutchman who was not very learned, but who was never ashamed of his religion. In his neighborhood there was a skeptic who said, "You can't believe anything you can't understand." And so some of the better class of people asked the Dutchman to have a conversation with him. He said, "Yes, if you tink best."

"Have you any objections to the neighbors coming in?"

"No, shust as you tink best."

So they made the appointment and everybody was there. The old gentleman came in and laid by his hat and was introduced to the skeptic, when he began suddenly by saying, "I beliefs de Bible; vat you beliefs?"

Said he, "I don't believe anything I can't understand."

"Oh, you must be von very smart man! I vas mighty glad I meet you. I ask you some questions. De odder day I vas riding along de road, und I meet von dog. Dat dog he have von of his ears stand up in dis vay, and de odder he stand down so. Now, vy vas dat?"

That was very unhandy just then, very unhandy. He either had to explain why the dog had one ear up and the other standing down, or else say he did not believe it. So he said, "I don't know."

"Oh, den you are not so very smart after all. I ask you anodder question. I saw in John Smidt's clover patch the clover come up so nice! Und I look ofer in de fields and dere was John Smidt's pigs, and dere come out hair on deir packs; und in de very same clover patch vas his sheep und dere come out vool on dier packs. Now, vy vas dat?"

This was as bad as the other question because the same perplexity arose. He had to explain why there was hair on the back of the pigs and wool on the sheep, and as he could not tell why, therefore he had no business to believe it. Finally he said, "I don't know."

"Vell," said the Dutchman, "You are not haf so smart as you tink you are. Now I asks you anodder question: Do you pleef dere is a God?"

"No, I don't believe any such nonsense."

"Oh, yes, I hear about you long ago. I hear about you. My Bible knows about you; for my Bible it says: 'The fool hath said in his heart there is no God;' but you big fool, you blab it right out!"—Exchange.

A PREACHER AND HIS CIGAR

He was pacing back and forth on the station platform, evidently enjoying his cigar to the full and oblivious to everything else. The eastbound train stood on the other side of the station waiting for the southbound one, which was due shortly. By the cut of his clothing, it was evident to all that he was a minister of the gospel. Several times I was tempted to speak to him about that cigar, but each time restrained myself. Finally the southbound train pulled in and, taking a seat, I crowded against the window in order to leave room for some one else and in a moment or two the preacher took the vacant seat beside me.

I waited a little and then said, "So you think smoking is a good habit, do you?"

"Oh, yes," he replied. "It promotes sociability and fellowship among men and helps one to get acquainted with men."

"I suppose, then," said I, "that you teach it and preach it to your people?"

"Oh, no; I don't do that."

"But," I replied, "if it's a good thing it seems to me that it is your duty as a minister to teach it and preach it to your people, and especially to your young men and boys."

"No," he admitted, "I don't do that. In fact, I know some men who are really injuring themselves by using tobacco to excess and I think a great many young men and boys are harmed by it."

"Well," I said, "if the use of tobacco is an injury to young men and boys, it seems to me that you as a minister ought to help them by setting them a good example, and quit using it."

"No," he squirmed. "I am under no obligation to do that."

"Well," I continued, innocently, "I remember reading one time in an old book that I picked up somewhere this declaration, 'If meat maketh my brother to offend I will eat no meat while the world standeth.'"

"What!" he exclaimed.

And I repeated the quotation.

"Why," he said, "the apostle Paul said that."

"Well," I said, "it has always appealed to me as a mighty good principle for a man to govern his life by." At that he remained silent.

Finally I asked, "Where are you going tonight?"

"To the town of Blank," he replied.

"Why," I exclaimed, "you are on the wrong train. This is the southbound. You should have taken the eastbound."

"I know," he replied, "but I missed my train at the junction, and now I am trying to get to my destination in a roundabout way, and it will probably take me all night and I may not succeed then."

And then I knew that while he was enjoying that delicious cigar at the junction, his train, after waiting almost an hour, had pulled out and left him. And it was Saturday night.—Henry J. Petran, in "The Continent."

SUMMER HOTEL OR LIFE-SAVING STATION

"I was staying once in a summer hotel on the shores of Lake Erie," says Dr. Dixon. "It was very pleasant. All that we did was to eat, and drink, and sleep, and take walks, and row on the lake. Opposite the hotel was a life-saving station, where somebody was always on the look-out for the rocket, and on the listen for the call of distress."

"At that life-saving station they also ate and drank, but their business in life was not eating and drinking. They slept, but their business was not sleeping. When they could they went for walks and rowed for pleasure on the lake, but that was not their business. Their great business was the saving of lives in peril."

"Which are we," asks Dr. Dixon, "life-saving stations—or only just summer hotels? We must ask that question of ourselves and of our churches."

INSPIRATION

The Testimony of the Bible to Itself

(1) The writers affirm, where they speak of the subject at all, that they speak by direct divine authority. (2) They invariably testify that the words, and not the ideas merely, are inspired. The most important passage is 1 Corinthians 2:7-15, which see. (3) The whole attitude of Jesus Christ toward the Old Testament, as disclosed in His words, both before His death and after His resurrection, confirms its truth and divine origin, and He explicitly ascribes the Pentateuch to Moses. (4) In promising subsequent revelations after the predicted advent of the Spirit (John 16:12-15), our Lord prepared the way for the New Testament. (5) The writers of the New Testament invariably treat the Old Testament as authoritative and inspired.—"Scofield Reference Bible."

Rev. E. L. Reiner, pastor Waveland Avenue Church, Chicago, has recently issued an attractive four-page folder announcing a series of Sunday morning sermons—a part of the regular morning service—under the general title of "Thru Eye-gate and Ear-gate to the City of Child-Soul." The objects used in these "talks" are the following: Traps, money, banks, mirror, stones, ruler, whiskey, watch, rags, ropes, keys, razors, lantern, anchor, camera, coal, bread, candles, bubbles, eggs, corn, jewels, salt, rubber. The pastor offers attendance tickets entitling the children to rewards.

Notes and Suggestions

ALL HONOR TO MRS. THOMAS A. EDISON

This lady, who is a devout member of the Methodist church, has very recently shown her unalterable opposition to the Sunday night movie shows for the benefit of the poor of West Orange, N. J., where she resides.

VETERAN EDITORS RETIRE

Rev. Edward W. Rice, D. D., who has served as editor of the publications of the American Sunday School Union since 1871, and Rev. Mosely H. Williams, D. D., who has served as assistant editor of the same publications since 1879, have retired from active service but retain the title "Honorary." These are superseded by the Rev. Jas. McConaghy and Rev. A. J. R. Schumaker, respectively.

D. L. MOODY AND Y. M. C. A. WORK IN NEW YORK CITY

The "Institute Notes" of the New York Y. M. C. A. said in its issue of February 6, that on the next day memorial services would be held in honor of the great evangelist. It further said:

"Institute members have special reason for honoring his memory. At the close of his great Hippodrome meetings here, he raised a fund of $200,000. Part of this was used to pay off the debt of the Association building, 23d Street and 4th Avenue, and the remainder formed the nucleus of the fund for the purchase of ground and the erection of the Institute building, which was opened in 1885."

"AUNTY COOKE"

Mrs. Sarah A. Cooke, popularly and affectionately known as "Aunt Cooke," resides in Chicago, at the advanced age of 87. She was born at Olney, England. She lived in Chicago near the Wabash avenue Y. M. C. A. rooms in 1866, and at that time became the friend and co-worker with Dwight L. Moody. She and a friend, Caroline Jones, urged Mr. Moody to go into the world as an evangelist, and it was she and her sister who made special prayer that Mr. Moody might be filled with the Holy Ghost. Mrs. Cooke writes some nine letters every day to Christian workers and expects to write another book, a continuation of her "Wayside Sketches," before she passes away. She was present at the first communion administered by the Rev. Paul Rader, the new pastor of the Moody Church, March 7.

THE NEW PRESIDENT OF THE INTERNATIONAL S. S. ASSOCIATION

Mr. E. K. Warren was elected to this position at the meeting of the International Executive Committee of the Association February 10, 11, as successor to Dr. H. M. Hamill, recently deceased. Mr. Warren has been connected with Sunday-school work from the time when he "with four other girls" formed the young men's class in his Sunday-school, to the present moment. There is hardly a position in organized Sunday-school work that he has not filled most efficiently. Mr. Warren is a member of the Board of Trustees of the Moody Bible Institute and serves on its executive committee.

PASTOR WILLIAM FETLER EXILED

This brother, a Baptist pastor, writes of the opposition in Russia to the work of the Protestant church in that Empire. This opposition is caused by a false report that the Baptists were spreading German ideas in Russia and even connecting the name of Emperor William with the movement. On the evening of December 5, Pastor Fetler was arrested, and put in prison in order to be exiled to Siberia. He was later released from prison and ordered to proceed to Siberia on his own charges. Appealing to the Council of Ministers he was permitted to go abroad instead of to Siberia, and thus had to leave the country where he was laboring. In the meantime he is preaching to the Lapps of northern Sweden. The prayers of God's people will certainly ascend for this brother and for the work he left in Russia, which is continued under the direction of his former associates.

AN APPEAL

Mr. William H. Keller is asking that money be provided so that a tent may be secured for holding meetings in the mining regions of Virginia the coming summer. He will give further information to anyone writing him at Norton, Va.

MRS. AMANDA SMITH

Word has been received here of the death Feb. 25, in Sebring, Fla., of Mrs. Amanda Smith, the famous negro evangelist. Mrs. Smith was seventy-eight years old. She traveled over the greater part of this country, attracted great congregations in England, and pursued her evangelistic work in India and Africa. She founded in Chicago an orphanage for children of her race.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR ON THE FIRING LINE

In a meeting in the City Temple, London, recently, the Rev. J. H. Shakespeare, referring to the deep religious spirit manifested by the British soldiers said:

"There has never been an army like this since Cromwell's day. There have never been so many Puritan soldiers in the army before." Mr. Shakespeare gave many illustrations of this. He mentioned how a young man read a portion from the Bible to himself on his first night under canvas, and nothing was said by his companions. On the next night one of them asked: "Can't you give us a bit?" and regular Bible reading in the tent ensued. Owing to the influence of Christian Endeavorers there is a prayer meeting every night in another tent.—"Montreal Witness."

A GREAT TEMPERANCE DEMONSTRATION

What the "Chicago Tribune" calls "the greatest temperance demonstration ever staged in this or any other country" took place in the great tabernacle in Philadelphia where the "Billy" Sunday evangelistic meetings were held, March 15. The demonstration was made in connection with an address on temperance by the Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State of the United States. It is said that 12,000 men signed the total abstinence pledge, Mr. Bryan affixing his signature to the pledge, writing across the top of "Billy" Sunday's pulpit. The points as given in the header of the newspaper referred to, were: "Men cannot afford to drink, either from the financial or physical standpoint; the physical discomfort fails to recompense for any possible pleasure; men owe their progeny life without inherited weakness; man is his 'brother's keeper,' and is morally wrong in drinking for the bad example it sets the weak."

C. I. M. CONFERENCE AT NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE

The China Inland Mission will hold its Jubilee meeting at Niagara-on-the-Lake, Ont., June 15-18. It was at this place that the C. I. M. in North America had its birth in 1888, and where Bible conferences were held for years. It may be that the holding of this meeting will result in the re-establishment of the Niagara Bible conferences of blessed memory.

"UNDER THE SMOKE STACKS"

A most interesting work is being done by the Industrial Evangelistic Foundation which works among the employes of the shops and factories of North America. Mr. A. M. Bruner, with headquarters in Chicago, has charge of the Community Extension Department of this work. Forty-one weeks work of Mr. Bruner resulted in the visitation of 41 cities in 24 states; 41 campaigns with 41 "systems" established; 302 shops organized with 302 shop leaders; 906 shop committee men and 287 central committeemen. One thousand, seven hundred and six participated in the campaigns with an attendance of 4,426 at the Institutes; and 69,775 at the shop meetings.

SHERWOOD EDDY IN PEKIN, CHINA

"The Missionary Herald" gives a report of the immediate results of the evangelistic campaign of Mr. Eddy in Peking, China, as follows:

"In all Mr. Eddy addressed 20,023 persons; 2,205 signed Bible study cards; 104 others decided to enter the Christian life. Of the inquirers in Peking, 41 are officials; older students, 504; merchants, 150; military and police, 31; miscellaneous, 643; boys, 548; total, 1,917. The follow-up work was directly related to the different churches. Knowing the criticisms of the churches on the part of the students, carefully laid plans were made to meet these and still to hold the classes in the churches. In each place the addresses were followed by fifteen minutes of discussion, after which there was a division into Bible study groups. Singing was taught for ten minutes before the lecture, together with a careful explanation of the meaning of prayer and of other parts of the Christian service. The first month the general theme was the 'Relation of Christianity to Social Problems,' and the second month the 'Relation of Religion to Science.' While the meetings were all in charge of members of the various churches, the form of exercise, the speaker and the subjects were determined by the committee in charge of the campaign. An active young men's work has thus been started within all the churches of the city. There has been hearty co-operation on the part of the missions."

Book Notices

Any book favorably mentioned below may be secured at price named from the Bible Institute Colportage Association, 826 North La Salle Street, Chicago.

"Christianity and the Jew," by Delaware W. Scott.

This book contains an array of facts which should quench the spirit of bigotry and intolerance toward the Jew so frequently manifested by Christendom. It also sounds a needed call to the church concerning her duty and privilege of giving the gospel to this neglected people. If the character of the church as distinct from the coming national glory of the Jew on earth were more clearly marked the author's splendid appeal would be much stronger.

The War in the Light of the Word, by F. C. Jennings.

We feel grateful to have had our particular attention called to this pamphlet whose author is one of the Brethren, and a competent teacher of the Word of God. He speaks of its contents as new, modestly adding that whether they are true or not is for the readers to determine. We believe that most of what he says is true, and for that reason it is of the deepest interest. He thinks the sixth vial of Revelation applies to the nineteenth and twentieth centuries and that the drying up of the Euphrates is being fulfilled in the recession of the Turkish Empire. In his view, "The Kings of the East," or, as he renders it, "the Kings of the Rising Again of the Sun," refers to the regathering of Israel. It is their way that is prepared by the drying up of the Euphrates in his judgment, and he thinks it is more than a coincidence that as Turkey has been pushed back, so has the Jew gained a footing again in his own land. The "frog-like spirit out of the mouth of the dragon" is the emanation from the pulpits and platforms of rationalistic Protestantism. The "Beast" is the openly profane political power, both kingly and democratic. The "False Prophet" is the personal Antichrist of the future, but today is seen in the superstitious element of Christendom headed up in the Papacy though not absolutely confined to that. His view of Armageddon is exceedingly interesting, but that which stirs us the most is his conviction, for which he gives his reasons, that the coming of the Lord is very nigh. The space we have given to this review is merited not by the size of the pamphlet but its quality, and we hope it may be widely read.

The Entail of the Covenant, or The Saviour's "Little Ones," by Sir Robert Anderson, K. C. B., LL. D.

Under this legal title the author treats of the relation of children to Christ, and their nurture in the Lord. Those who know Sir Robert Anderson expect vigorous books from his pen, and they will not be disappointed in this case, but there is fatherly tenderness here also. While he has no place for laxity in home life, yet those parents who are severe with their children will be rebuked by his exposition of family government; very beautifully does he exhibit it as a discipline of grace rather than law. This sturdy theologian even has a word on behalf of the "naughty" child as contrasted with the "good" child. He draws a clear distinction, too, between regeneration, which is essential for all, and conversion, which some who were truly born of God in childhood have not experienced, a distinction that needs to be drawn in spite of its perversion in modern teaching.

The thesis of the book is, "It is not the will of your Father which is in heaven that one of these little ones should perish." In its treatment, there is introduced a discussion of election, occupying about half the volume. The author finds a doctrine of election in Scripture but combats some of the Augustinian inferences drawn from it. He is content to allow mystery to rest upon the actions of a God "with whom what we call past and future may be an eternal now." Concerning election, "the essential thought which underlies it is peculiar appreciation and special favor, without any element of 'chronology' or any thought of alternative reprobation." He will not allow the charge that God is insincere in his offers of mercy to all nor in His expressed will that none should perish. The discussion will interest all students of the Bible, whether brought up under Arminian or Calvinistic influences, and will comfort some whose little ones have been taken.

"We have just closed the first week of a campaign at the Gospel Tabernacle on North Avenue near Humboldt Park, Chicago. The interest was good at the start, but has grown deeper with each service. There have been conversions practically every night, and yesterday in the three services 65 publicly accepted Christ as their Saviour. This is one of the most spiritual churches we have worked with for years, and Pastor J. O. Wester has a large band of splendid Christian men back of him in the work. These facts account in a large degree for the success of the campaign."—Edw. R. Dow.

Bob Jones closed one of his best meetings at Hartford City, Ind., on March 7. The reporter for the local paper said, "Time alone will tell whether Hartford City's religious awakening reached its summit Sunday or only just got a good start." This is the fifth occasion he has been the speaker at the annual conference. The new subjects were: "The European War in Relation to Prophecy," "The Queerest Book in the Bible," "The Bride of Christ." God is graciously blessing our work here. Our evangelistic meetings under the direction of W. P. Minton, of the August, '09, class, were a great success."—H. G. Hamilton.

"I held a very successful meeting at Hartsburg, O., in January, where a number of persons were converted; in fact it was the best meeting in many ways that I have held this season. The last service the pastor baptized 18, and others are to follow. My next meeting was at Oakwood, O., and although we began under very embarrassing conditions, the Lord honored the work, and we had a number of clear conversions, the oldest being an old veteran soldier, past 76. For two weeks we have been at Williamsburg, O., and so far thirty have gotten in touch with God, and the work seems just beginning. My next meeting is at West Union, O."—E. B. Westhafer.

The Lowry-Moody Party closed an unusually good evangelistic meeting at Wellington, Kan., Feb. 7. Up to the last day of the meetings there had been 884 conversions. When Mr. Lowry preached his closing sermon on Sunday night, the subject being "Almost Persuaded," 112 decided for Christ. These, with the conversions Sunday morning and afternoon, brought the total number of converts up to 1,030. During the campaign 332 heads of families were converted. After the evangelists left, the pastors conducted another union meeting in the tabernacle on Tuesday night and a peculiar feature of the meeting was that many attended who would not go to the tabernacle while the evangelists were there and there were 19 more conversions. The churches will continue the work.

Bob Johnson and party on Feb. 22 closed a tabernacle campaign in Brookville, Pa. Although Brookville has a population of only three thousand, the campaign closed with a record of 1,920 decisions for Christ. The campaign had its influence directly upon the country and community within a radius of fifty miles or more. As a result of the campaign, hundreds of men who formerly had spent a considerable part of their income at the saloon and the gambling table came out for Christ, and the money has since been spent for merchandise. The business men of Brookville are now looking forward to the coming year to be one of the best in the history of the business of the town. At the close of the meeting, Mr. Johnson raised nearly $14,000 as the start for a $40,000 new Y. M. C. A. in Brookville. Since the close of the campaign, the remainder of the $40,000 was secured within a week's time.

The evangelist is now at the beginning of a similar campaign in Shippensburg, Pa., which opened on Feb. 27, and which will close on April 5. The townspeople of Shippensburg are greatly interested, thousands filling the Tabernacle every night.

THE "BILLY" SUNDAY CAMPAIGN IN PHILADELPHIA

Weeks	11
Converts	41,724
Hearers last day	60,000
Present at departure	25,000
Choir	1,800
Aids	1,000
Offering to Sunday	$51,136
Philadelphia, Pa., March 21.—[Special].—
Billy Sunday ended his religious campaign here today in a blaze of glory. Four times during the day the evangelist preached to audiences that overflowed the tabernacle. The total number of his hearers was 60,000.

Four times he called for converts and got an aggregate of 1,858 for the day. This number represents the actual number who signed converts' cards; it represents only a portion of those who hit the trail to shake his hand.

The number of converts for the eleven weeks of the campaign is 41,724. So far as results go, the country has never seen anything like it. It not only beats Billy Sunday's record, but probably surpasses the record of every modern evangelist.

At the four services the audiences piled about $2,000 into the collection plates, thinking it was their final gifts to the evangelist. The committee had announced that the day's offerings would go to Billy Sunday personally. But the evangelist would not have it so.

"Every cent you give today," he said, "goes to the poor of Philadelphia."

Sunday Gets Record Offering

The committee acquiesced. Before he left the city, however, the committee turned over to the evangelist a draft for $51,136, the result of the free will offering which Philadelphia gave to him. It is the largest offering he has received in any city.

So much for the figures. The tabernacle forgot them today. The workers forgot the count in the whirl and hubbub of the farewells and greetings that these 60,000 persons heaped upon the evangelist, who arrived in the city eighty days ago.

Carry Away Mementos

Men and women pulled down signs from the tabernacle posts and carried them away. They scooped up big handfuls of sawdust from the shadow of the pulpit, filled their pockets and their handkerchiefs with it, and carried it home.

They took the tin pans which have gathered the tabernacle offerings. They tore the bunting and flags from the rostrum, the flowers from the pulpit; they carried away everything loose that could serve as mementos of the campaign.

Tonight while 1,800 men in the choir sang "God Be with You Till We Meet Again," 1,000 ushers and doorkeepers and policemen and firemen, and others who have worked in the tabernacle day and night since Jan. 3, filed past the evangelist and gripped his hand until it was swollen and knotted at the joints.

Thanked by City

There came at night to bid him farewell representatives of 400 churches of the city and a representative of the city itself to thank him. The Rev. Dr. George H. Bickley, vice-chairman of the Sunday campaign committee, speaking for the churches which invited the evangelist here, said he had "brought a crisis to the city and to the state."

Cyrus D. Foss, Jr., secretary to Mayor Blankenberg, spoke for official Philadelphia: "Philadelphia is today a different city from the Philadelphia of last December," he told the evangelist.

As a token of his own appreciation, Mr. Foss said, he would hit the trail with the other converts, and he did. At the close of the meeting he marched down the aisle, took Billy Sunday's hand, and sat on the front benches with the penitents.

There was a great demonstration when Billy Sunday left town tonight. About 25,000 persons went to the railroad station and sang hymns until the evangelist departed.—"The Tribune," Chicago.

NOON MEETINGS—HOLY WEEK

Dr. Gray and Dr. John Timothy Stone conducted noon meetings during Holy Week, March 29-April 2, in the Garrick Theater, Chicago. The general announcement had this introductory paragraph:

"This is an earnest and direct effort to present the claims of the gospel in a special manner to arrest the attention of business men and women in our city. Minor matters, ecclesiastical differences, and divisive doctrines will be laid aside, and the messages unified on the great essentials. The whole world is considering these things just now in a new and moving way, and we wish to take advantage of it."

THE CORRESPONDENCE DEPARTMENT

This department is steadily advancing. The number of courses has been increased to eight. The total number of active students, March 1 was 2,206, as compared with about 400 two years ago. The enrolment for February was 154, making a record, the month preceding having also established a record.

WHAT A BIT OF BLUE PAPER DID

James C. Watt of the graduating class of '14, recently related the following:

"Before I was converted I was working for a grocer in Edinburgh, Scotland. My friends in Leith were praying for my conversion, taking a deep interest in my spiritual welfare. They went about this praying in such a way that I could not resent it, and I was soon brought to the Lord and went home to tell my friends of the event. On one occasion they handed me a blue folder, announcing the Evening Department (now classes) of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. Someone in Chicago who had been attending the Evening Classes had sent this to a friend in Scotland, a Miss Johnson, in order that she might know the kind of work carried on in Chicago. My friends, knowing that I had become a Christian, hoped that I might be interested by the information contained in the circular, so that I might prepare for Christian work. I put that bit of paper in my trunk and after going to Canada, and passing from place to place I would run across it now and then, and look at the pictures and read its contents. After being in Canada for some two years, I felt called to special Christian work and the claims of two training schools came before me, and after prayerful consideration I decided to enter the Moody Bible Institute. The first that I ever heard of that Institute was the little blue circular announcing the Evening Department."

William McQuere, of the class of '10, and familiarly known as "Billy," is still greatly blessed in the McAuley Cremorne Mission, New York. That mission is now located in the building occupied by the National Bible Institute, at the head of which is Don O. Shelton, in whose work all M. B. I. friends greatly rejoice. The work in the mission for January was somewhat phenomenal, the attendance being 2,474 as compared with 948 for the corresponding month last year, the number of professed conversions being 108, as compared with 47 for the same period last year. Mr. McQuere and his fellow-workers in the mission will be actively engaged in the outdoor work of the Bible Institute next summer and the prayers of Christians everywhere are requested that the fruitage may be great.

John Callahan, superintendent of the Hadley Rescue Mission in New York City, watched a host of rain-soaked men munching their hard loaves on the bread line of a daily newspaper near his location. Finally, when he could stand the dismal sight no longer, he threw open the doors of his mission and invited each of the unhappy derelicts to come in and get a cup of hot coffee besides. Callahan had no money to buy coffee, but he concluded that it was the Lord's will for him to do that much for the unfortunates anyhow. He served 1,100 cups the first day, but before the day was over a sweet-faced little woman came walking through the line and handed Mrs. Callahan $1,000. She would not tell her name. But no wonder the Callahans believe the Lord sent her.

HEARING GOD'S VOICE

When Moses was gone into the tabernacle, then he heard the voice. Num. 7:89. It is not said that the voice then began to speak; rather the contrary is implied. The voice would seem to have been speaking all along, but it was only now that Moses heard it. Why did he hear it now? It was because now for the first time he put himself in the attitude of hearing. It was when he entered into the tabernacle, it was when he began himself to speak with God, that there woke within him the conviction that God had all the time been speaking with him.

My soul, it must be the same with thee. Often art thou crying in the silence of the night that no divine voice has visited thee. Nay, but hast thou only listened for it with the ear of sense? If so, it is no marvel that thou hast missed its music. The voice of God cannot be heard by the ear of sense! its tones make no impression on the surrounding air, they stir not the waves of the earthly atmosphere. Its accents are too still and small to be caught by the natural ear; they are speaking incessantly, but they are drowned by the thunder, the earthquake, and the fire. If thou wouldst hear them thou must enter the inner tabernacle, thou must open the inner ear. Hast thou not read how in the days of old the miracle was only wrought to faith? Why was the miracle only wrought to faith? Not because God is narrow, but because truth is broad. The eye cannot see music, the ear cannot hear colors; neither can the natural receive the spiritual. Faith is the vision of the soul, the audience-chamber of the soul. Within its holy temple there are voices innumerable—interpreters of all other voices. Here music waits for thee, here sunbeams watch for thee, here the mystery of life unveils herself to be ready for thy coming. When thou shalt enter the secret of God's pavilion to speak with Him, there shall break upon thy heart the wondrous revelation that all thy life He has been speaking with thee.—George Matheson.

"AWFUL TO LIVE WITHOUT A CHURCH"

Fox Ridge, S. D.

If I were in a large community, I think I could sell your books, but as it is, out here in the pioneer west, with neighbors few and far between, I could hardly do so. It would mean five to ten miles between houses. We are thirty miles from a railroad town. I would love to do your work.

Do you think you could help me in getting together books for a Sunday-school library? We have long lonesome winters. Have Sunday-school only during the summer months. The last three years we have had a student preacher sent to us during the summer vacation. Money is a very scarce article out here. Our ambition just now is to get books for a S. S. library. We have a few books sent us in a missionary barrel, which is a treat here. I wish I could do something, but have not the funds to put into any good work. Do you know it is awful to live without a church? It's very lonesome, and one misses so much that would help me in the time of trial.

Mrs. E. M. Sampe.

[Friends to whom the above letter appeals may assist by sending suitable books direct to the correspondent, prepaid; or, if desired, the Bible Institute Colportage Association will convert cash contributions made for this purpose into the largest possible number of appropriate books and send them forward promptly.]

COLPORTAGE BOOKS ON THE S. S. LESSONS

April 4. "A Note of Warning," in "The Lost Crown" (by J. Wilbur Chapman), deals with the downfall of Saul.

"The Empty Tomb" (by various authors) is especially helpful if the alternative lesson on the Resurrection be chosen.

April 25. "Faith and Force," in "Heaven on Earth" (by A. C. Dixon), draws out the spiritual lessons from the story of David and Goliath.

"The Life of David" (for children) is an excellent book for use throughout the weeks when that character is studied.

IS HE CALLING YOU?

Is not God calling into colportage or "book missionary" work some reader of these lines? D. L. Moody regarded it as being one of the most effective ways for reaching the people for Christ. The work is applicable to almost any territory.

HOW TWO PASTORS USE THE GOSPEL IN PRINT

Peoria, Ill.

I am now in charge of Bethel Church, a mission church in the southern part of this city, located among the laboring class of people. They are quite poor, and I find many of them are without religious reading. I have thought some of getting 150 to 200 copies of the Moody Colportage Library books, and as I make my pastoral calls sell a copy, if I could, or where they are quite poor, give them a copy. In other words, I want to supply them with good reading at the lowest possible cost. We have just passed through a glorious revival, in which seventy-four persons, mostly young people, professed conversion. We want to get these young people to read such good books as you have.

R. W. T.

Lorneville Jct., Ont.

I am using my pastoral visitation work as an opportunity also of putting good books in the homes of the people, and have, without any urging at all, sold quite a number of the Colportage books. "Practical and Perplexing Questions Answered" I can sell in every house visited. My experience leads me to believe that most rural pastors could do the same. Am sending today for about fifty more. Nobody takes any offense or exception to the pastor doing this.

37:32, 33; Isa. 54:17; Luke 4:30; 10:39). His hatred invaded the sacred precincts of David's home. Envy assails all that a man has, and it spares none with whom he is connected, and colors every act and relation of life. Saul was frustrated by his own children, Jonathan and Michal. David's danger was imminent, hence his speedy escape. David was uplifted and became strong through these years of trial and testing. Much of the beauty and helpfulness of the Psalms was born in these experiences. Men are strong in-so-far as they see God's purpose and discipline in their lives.

Saul's experience at Naioth (vv. 23, 24) was a response of his emotional nature to a religious appeal, another occasion when God was waiting to be gracious. Divested of his armor and outer robes Saul lay in a trance, overcome by the power of Him who turns the hearts of men as rivers of water. The wrath of man is made to praise Him, the life of the prophet is preserved, likewise the life of His servant David.

BIRD'S-EYE BIBLE STUDY

By REV. ALEXANDER PATTERSON

Director, Presbyterian Training School, Chicago

A synopsis of all the books of the Bible, with statement as to their classification and interrelation; a summary of the broad teachings of the Scriptures, with general view of the development in the revelation of divine truth. Also suggestive chapters on "How to Study the Bible," "The Way of Salvation," "How to Win Souls to Christ," "Power in Prayer," "The Work of the Holy Spirit," etc.

Important facts and teaching points are vividly represented by several simple but comprehensive diagrams and charts.

Any person wishing to comprehend quickly the "mountain peaks" of Bible truth will find "Bird's-Eye Bible Study" an invaluable aid.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman says:

"It was at my suggestion that Dr. Patterson prepared the manuscript for this book.

"To be familiar with God's Word is the secret of a successful Christian life. It is likewise the secret of holy living. Most busy people do not study the Bible, and this, not only because they are busy, but because they are unable, on account of training or occupation, to quickly grasp the spirit of the book.

"Dr. Patterson in these pages presents the subject in such a way that a ten minutes' study each day would, in a very short time, familiarize the student with the spirit of the Bible, and once gaining a taste for it, no other literature could satisfy him."

Especially adapted for use by pastors, evangelists, Sunday-school teachers, Bible class leaders and Christian workers generally. An excellent book for broadcast distribution among Christian young people of all denominations.

VITAL TEACHINGS OF GOD'S WORD

AS SHOWN IN BIBLE STUDIES

By J. H. TODD

Secretary Australian Council of the China Inland Mission

This little volume is not a book of popular "Bible readings," but a kind of pocket manual of Theology. It is a book for careful, continued study, with a prayerful heart, a clear head, some "fenced-off" time, and a bold-type Bible in constant use for every reference.

The man or woman who cannot take even an evening course at a Bible school, or make use of a correspondence course, may very profitably use this little book as a guide in grasping the cardinal doctrines of God's revelation to men, in daily half-hours.

Pastors may use this book as a basis for Bible study classes.

D. L. Moody said

"Bilhorn is the only man that writes, plays and sings his own music and makes and plays his own organs."

No one knew better than Mr. Moody the need for spiritual songs. Mr. Bilhorn's great success came through the introduction of songs that reach deep into the hearts of the people such as "Sweet Peace" and "I Will Sing the Wondrous Story."

Voices of Victory

is Mr. Bilhorn's latest selection of the choicest hymns. The use of this song-book for church services, Sunday Schools, Revival Meetings, etc., quickens the hearts and puts new life into the church work.

Children love to sing them and they gladden the hearts of the older folks. Songs arranged for all kinds of meetings. Songs of "War or Peace," "Happiness," "Soul-Winning," "Joy," "Love," "Songs for the Children," "Songs of Heaven," "333," every one a gem.

WE NEED IT

It will relieve congestion

Our largest lecture hall will not seat more than two-thirds of the students now enrolled. The parlors, reading rooms, library and gymnasium must now be used for class purposes, none of which are large enough for the average class. Two buildings, three flats and 22 rooms are rented for extra dormitory space.

It will make for efficiency

The present office space will be used for dormitories. The expense of renting a music building and the above mentioned dormitories will be saved. Adequate classrooms and convenient business offices will effect a saving of time and money, and increase the efficiency of the work in all directions.

It will make growth possible

When the Administration Building is realized, we will be able to receive the rapidly increasing number of men and women who are seeking the opportunities offered here.

WILL YOU HELP ERECT IT?

No cause can present a more urgent need, and no need can offer you a greater opportunity for a service that will multiply itself many times.

Gifts of any amount will be gratefully received. The building can be erected this year, if you will do your part NOW. Will you do it.

THE MEANING OF PRAYER

Art Leather .50

HARRY EMERSON FOSDICK

In this vitally helpful book the author considers the three phases of prayer: As an opportunity of speaking to God and allowing him to speak to us; as petition for the things we need; and as a constant, persistent expression of life purpose—as dominant desire for the welfare of others breaking out in intercession.

MODERN DISCIPLESHIP

Cloth .75

EDWARD S. WOODS, M. A.

"I regard it as an exceptionally strong and useful book, suggestive, spiritual, judicial, searching. It can hardly fail to leave with the thoughtful reader a strong and stimulating contribution to mind and heart. It will help in the solution of the vexing problems of many Christian men. I heartily recommend it."—CLARENCE A. BARBOUR, D. D., Rochester, N. Y.

THE BIBLE AND THE SPADE

Illus. Cloth $1.00

EDGAR J. BANKS, Explorer and Orientalist

"It is scarcely too much to say that for the average reader we have here in brief and compact form one of the best books on the subject of archaeology that has appeared in English for many years. It is to be most heartily commended to the men of our brotherhood, and all students and lovers of Old Testament literature and history."—PROF. M. A. HONLINE, Ph. D., Board of Education, United Brethren Church, Dayton.

LEADERSHIP OF BIBLE STUDY GROUPS

Cloth .50

H. H. HORNE, Ph. D.

This little book puts into the hands of the leader of Bible study groups just the suggestions and methods required to make the work a success. It throws much light on the qualifications and preparation of the leader, in addition to solving the problems encountered in actually conducting the group.

RURAL CHURCH MOVEMENT

Cloth .75

EDWIN L. EARP

This exceptional volume on rural church problems gives most interesting chapters on such subjects as the open country's call for spiritual leadership, the rural achievements of the church, the rural church and the pioneer period in America, rural church decline, the social center parish plan, the rural Sunday school and Bible class, federation of rural churches, and other valuable matter.

BOY AND THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

Cloth $1.00

JOHN L. ALEXANDER, International S. S. Ass'n

"A wealth of method for treatment of every angle of the boy problem; there is nothing finer on the question."—FRANK L. BROWN, World's S. S. Ass'n.

"This book will greatly help any Sunday School in meeting the responsibility for its teen-age boys, because throughout the emphasis is placed on leadership rather than on paraphernalia."—Sunday School Times.

How to Master the English Bible

By JAMES M. GRAY, D. D.
Dean of The Moody Bible Institute of Chicago

This book gives the author's experience as a Bible student and teacher; states his method, which has proven so popular and useful; speaks of results which pastors and teachers may obtain by it; and includes illustrations for practical use. It is not only an inspiration to Bible teaching but to expository preaching as well.

"For several years we have followed the work of Dr. James M. Gray in his studies in the English Bible, have read everything we have seen from his pen, and as far as time permitted put into practice his instructions on How to Master the English Bible, with the result that the Book has become more precious and illuminating, and there is a continual delight in the study of it."—The Wesleyan.

"It is as befits its length, a book of one idea, but that idea is well carried out and elaborated in such a way that it sticks. It will be likely to influence the reader to try the plan at once. It should prove especially helpful to pastors and teachers, but it has a real contribution to make to the average layman, who is finding Bible study a drag and would like to find it a pleasure."—The Advance.

"Dr. Gray's reputation as a teacher of the English Bible makes it not only worth while to listen to what he has to say upon the subject given as the title of this book, but it guarantees beforehand abundant compensation for the reading of it. * * * Unquestionably it is the sanest and most fruitful method that can be pursued."—The Interior.

"The secret is a simple one, but like the way of life itself, few there be that find it. It is based on the recognition of each book of the Bible as a literary whole. We master the Bible as we acquaint ourselves, not with isolated texts and paragraphs, but with each book as the unitary presentation of some theme."—The Standard.

"It is an eminently useful and greatly needed book. Many a Bible student is discouraged because his study is so unproductive. Dr. Gray can help him to a new vision of the possibilities that are in a careful study of the Book of God."—Epworth Herald.

THIS BOOK SHOULD HAVE A WIDE READING!

The Cross in Holy Scripture

A Study of the Nature and Significance of Christ's Redemptive Work.

By REV. JAMES LITTLE, B.A., S.T.D.

A Few (among many) Favorable Press Notices.

"The reading of this book has been an unalloyed pleasure, and we have enjoyed nothing so much since reading Dr. Denney on 'The Death of Christ.' Indeed we do not know of a more suitable book on the doctrine of the Cross to put into the hands of a theological beginner. In Dr. Little's book, of 150 pages, we find an admirable and reverent exposition of the doctrine of the Cross, wholly evangelical, and, as we venture to think, in entire accord with Holy Scripture. The arrangement of the book calls for a word of praise. It deals with the outstanding features of the doctrine, viz.: the Ransom, Propitiation, Reconciliation, Forgiveness of Sin, etc., and each chapter is of the greatest value."—Life of Faith.

"The book is evidently the result of wide reading and careful thought, and presents in lucid phraseology a popular exposition of the Cross in relation to the Person of Christ and to His resurrection as a sacrifice, as a ransom, as a propitiation and also in relation to forgiveness, salvation and the new life."—Irish Presbyterian.

"Propitiation, Reconciliation, Forgiveness, Sacrifice, Remission, the Person of Christ and Atonement are in this fine little book reverently expounded. The reader must feel, as he peruses these thoughtful pages, that Systematic Theology still holds its place."—Homiletic Review.

"The student who is bent on finding distinctive lessons will have to read carefully; the book is intended not to save him the trouble of thought, but to stimulate it. The little volume is light and handy, and the type beautifully clear."—English Churchman.

"It is a rare little gem: full of digested and assimilated learning. This valuable book is written in clear, crisp, excellent English."—Alexander Whyte, in The British Weekly.

The Ideal Song and Hymn Book

By PROF. D. B. TOWNER

A Leading Evangelist in the Eastern States uses this book in all his engagements, and says it has no equal for worth and durability.

A Choir Leader in one of the largest cities in Indiana writes: "The books are being splendidly received. I have never seen its equal for good, singable and attractive gospel songs."

A Congregational Pastor in Wisconsin writes:—"It has been my privilege to test the merits of The Ideal Song and Hymn Book, and it seems to us ideal in more senses than one. This book has taken the place of four books, and with satisfaction to all. It seems admirably adapted for use in Church, Sunday School, Young People's Society, and Prayer-Meeting, even as it is intended. It satisfies for the morning church services, where the hymnal has always been used and demanded. It satisfies those who want livelier music for other services, but gives the best grade of music we have discovered in any book. Every selection is singable, giving the greatest variety in the smallest compass.

Editorial Notes

"Him that justifieth the ungodly."—Romans 4:5.

We feel moved to publish the following extract from a private letter received by one of our associates. May the Lord bless it to some other Christian seeking light on the same great theme, and to some other Christian worker that he may be stimulated to equal carefulness in dealing with an inquirer concerning it:

"You may remember my having a talk with you on Christ as a 'satisfaction' for sin. That term 'satisfaction' was troubling me. I didn't just like God's asking satisfaction for sin, only being able to see His desire to get rid of sin and save the sinner. Before I left you I felt much clearer in my mind regarding the meaning of this word, catching a glimpse of the altogether Holy One—the just judge—whose holiness and justice must be absolutely preserved in dealing with sin. I see now in the atonement not only a revelation of God's love for His children, but also sin settled for; God's judgment on sin met, satisfied, in Christ, the only thing sufficient to make Him just and the justifier of 'the ungodly.' It has enlarged the atonement to me, and I am glad for the enlargement. My three days' home trip was spent studying and thinking on this, for I was unhappy in feeling offended by any word of God, and I knew the offence would vanish when I could see it aright."

The "Call to Prayer" put forth by the Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, and which appears on another page, reached us too late for our April issue, but we are glad to publish it now, and emphasize attention upon it. It is well expressed and in an earnest and sober spirit, and we trust God may bless it to many hearts and to many churches. His blessing is necessary for it to accomplish anything, for only the Spirit of God can convict us of sin and break down our selfishness and indifference, so that we shall fall upon our knees and cry until He hears.

Next to praying we put preaching, and we trust the simple article on "The Gwennap Pit" following "A Call to Prayer," may be perused by pastors and other Christian workers to some effect.

We learn through the pages of the "Menace" that this magazine is classed by some Roman Catholics with the "Christian Herald," "The Lutheran Witness" and sundry other Christian periodicals as "bitterly anti-Catholic in tendency," to which we demur. In the first place, we are bitter towards nobody, and so far as Roman Catholics are concerned, we count some of them as among the best people we have known. If we are anti-Catholic it is the system we are opposed to, as expressed in its theological teaching, and in its political aggression. Theologically, it is subversive of the gospel, and notwithstanding that there are saved souls within its pale, and men and women of deep piety, yet these things are so in spite of what it teaches and not as the result of it. In the same sense we are opposed to other systems of error, and do all in our power to combat and save men from being ensnared by them.

But, politically, Roman Catholicism is indeed a menace to our free institutions. In this respect it differs from every other system of religious error in our land which we recall. It seeks office, it seeks control of things, for its own advancement, in which respect it is a mighty power to be reckoned with. And the day it got into power absolutely and permanently, would be the darkest day this nation had ever known—the darkest for many reasons, but chiefly because it would ultimately mean the obscuration of the light of the gospel of God's free grace to sinful men.

The weapons of our warfare are not carnal.

We deplore some of the attacks made against Roman Catholicism and some of the methods employed. We believe they injure the cause in which we are engaged. This is as true of the theological as it is of the political side, and yet we can understand the blood-earnestness that is back of it all. In the meantime, let us seek to be intelligent on the subject both as citizens and as Christians. Let us be calm and reasonable. Let us be true to facts and true to our Lord Jesus Christ. Let us be watchful but patient, brave but unselfish, and while zealous of our institutions, yet far more zealous to uphold the name of Him whose kingdom is not of this world, and who has left His disciples here to save souls, Catholic and Protestant, until He comes.

It was with surprise that we recently read a letter from a distinguished Sunday-school worker intimating that we were opposed to graded lessons in the Sunday-schools. Lest such an impression should travel further we beg to repeat what we have said before, that we believe in the principle of graded lessons, only objecting to certain graded lessons that use extra-biblical material. We should confine ourselves to the teaching of the Bible, but we believe it should be taught in the best possible manner. So far as graded lessons accomplish this, we say "Amen" to them, although our judgment is that the graded teacher is better than the graded lesson. We mean by this the teacher who is able to take the ordinary lesson and adapt it to his or her particular class. The church is now offering so many opportunities for the training of Sunday-school teachers, that it ought not be so difficult as formerly to find those of this class.

"The Mother's Magazine" recently published a diagram showing the foreign-born population of New York City divided according to nationalities, and we were surprised to see that Russia and Italy had a representation nearly as large as Germany, Austria, Sweden and Great Britain combined. As we dwelt on the figures, we were freshly impressed with the obligation President Wilson laid upon us at the outbreak of the war to strictly observe neutrality in thought and word, as well as deed. We owe a duty to these foreigners who have come to take refuge under the shadow of our wings; and we owe a duty to ourselves, for what a conflagration would soon be started in any one of our great metropolitan centres, if we began to say just what we feel! The self-restraint our citizens are showing is exceedingly remarkable, nor do we believe it arises from indifference, but from a high sense of patriotic duty in a time of intense trial. We are thankful to God for these conditions of peace amongst us, and pray Him in mercy to continue them.

A graduate of the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago recently entered a certain University to perfect himself in studies neglected in his earlier training, and among other

A things he now finds himself instructed that Socrates taught the same things that Jesus did, and with the superiority that he lived four hundred years earlier than Jesus. Hammurabi, he is also informed, wrote laws equal to those in the Bible, and from which the Hebrews copied. He is thankful to say that he does not believe these things though they come to him in the name of scholarship; and he would like us to advise other Christian young men and women to follow his example and get a thorough grounding in the Word of God before they go too far in the acquisition of this kind of higher learning—that is if they wish to preserve their faith.

CHRIST ASCENDED

William Wye Smith

O Thou, in the pillar of cloud by day,
And the pillar of fire by night!
The Word, the Eternal, the Infinite Yea!
Creator, and Giver of Light!
And now, in a rolling chariot of cloud,
Sweeping up in the measureless blue—
From Olivet's slope, to the City of God,
In our dazed and enraptured view!

For the words Thou gav'st them—the acts
Thou'st wrought—
Were for us, as well as for them!
And Nature around, and the truths it taught,
Were but gems in Faith's diadem!

And now a bright cloud is never unrolled
On the breast of the summer sky,
But the fold of Thy robe we think we behold,
On Thy way to Thy throne on high!

O Saviour divine! the life ideal
Even we on the earth may win!
The hope, and the love, and the peace are real,
And the kingdom of God within!
We ask not to rise on the rainbow's chord,
Mid the radiant clouds of even—
But we'll wait for the coming of Christ the Lord,
To welcome His own to Heaven!

A Call to Prayer for a World-wide Revival

THE Commission on Evangelism of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, acting for the Federal Council, issues a solemn call to the Churches of Christ to unite in prayer for a world-wide revival of true religion. The primal consideration that has inspired this call is the fact that our Lord Jesus Christ always stands ready with all the forces of omnipotence to aid His people, pleading and striving in His name and for His sake, for the salvation of that world for which He died, and which He lives to redeem. We have also the incentive contained in the Saviour's prayer the night before His atoning death, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word; that they all may be one, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." Christian unity can find inspiring manifestation, not only in the United States, but in all lands, in united prayer for the salvation of the world.
